PEACE.

What was the first prophetic word that rang
When down the starry sky the angels sang,
That night they came as envoys of the birth?
What word but peace, "Peace and good-will on earth?"

And what was the last word the Master said
That parting night when they broke brother bread,—
That night he knew men would not let him live?
Oh, what but "Peace I leave" and "Peace I give"?

And yet, behold! near twice a thousand years,
And still the battle wrath, the grief, the tears!
Let mercy speed the hour when swords shall cease,
And men cry back to God, "There shall be peace!"

World Alliance of Churches

The World Alliance of Churches for the promotion of international friendship, in co-operation with the Commission on Peace and Arbitration of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, held a meeting at Garden City, Long Island, week before last.

The objects aimed at by this Conference have been summarized as follows:

1. That Christian principles should rule States equally with individuals.
2. That justice and fellowship must be made supreme in international relations.
3. That all international disputes should be settled by methods of justice and conciliation.
4. That the Anglo-American treaties should be used as a basis which nations might adopt for the peaceful settlement of their differences.
5. That the feeling of fellowship and the desire for reconciliation should govern the Christian attitude toward enemies both in the conduct of the war and in the conclusion of peace.

Of all the joy there is in the world, that of bringing a needy soul to Christ is the greatest; if there is anything else that yields such heartfelt satisfaction, it has not yet been discovered.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY

The Gospel Ministry In The Five Years' Meeting I. The Numerical Strength.

According to the statistical reports of the Yearly Meetings for the year 1915 there are approximately 60,000 adult members of the Five Years' Meeting. The number of these who have been officially recognized by the Church as having gifts in the ministry is 1025, exclusive of missionaries upon foreign fields. That is to say, there is at present one recorded minister to about 60 adult church members. The number of congregations or churches (both terms are sanctioned by the Uniform Discipline) in the Five Years Meeting, as reported by Evangelistic Superintendents and Chairmen of Evangelistic Committees, is 772. There are, therefore, nearly or quite one and one-half times as many recorded ministers as there are congregations.

The ministers of the Five Years Meeting are currently classified as resident ministers and pastors. The appellation "resident" as thus used is an indefinite one applied to any minister belonging to a congregation but not by special appointment holding a pastoral relation to it. The term "pastor" as here employed is officially used in the printed minutes of all the thirteen Yearly Meetings except three.

554, or 54 per cent of the total number of ministers are known as resident ministers and 471, or 46 per cent, are designated as pastors.

Of the 554 resident ministers in the Five Years Meeting, 382, or 69 per cent, are men and 172, or 31 per cent, are women. Of the 478 pastors 382, or 81 per cent, are men and 89, or 19 per cent, are women.

There are 48 pastors each of whom serve two or more meetings. Each of 10 serve three meetings and there are two who each serve four meetings. Presumably this is the best arrangement practicable in these cases and the faithfulness of pastors who work under such disadvantages is worthy of commendation. In one of the larger Yearly Meetings one-third of the congregations are served by pastors who make their visits on the Sabbaths only and usually only once in two weeks and, in a few instances, only once a month. The inadequacy of the best possible pastoral service under these conditions requires no comment here.

There is no means available for determining with any degree of accuracy what proportion of the resident ministers are actively engaged in ministerial service. Among them are some who, although not officially designated as pastors, are, nevertheless, the recognized leaders in the ministry and pastoral work of the churches to which they belong. Sixty or more are employed in educational, church, interdenominational or business positions which make such heavy demands upon their

The National Missionary Congress

Editorial Correspondence.

Probably it would not be quite accurate to say that the National Missionary Congress, which has just closed its sessions at Washington City, was the greatest religious gathering ever convened in this country, for conventional values are relative terms, dependent upon the scope and permanency of results. It would easily be conceded by all who were in attendance that few religious convocations give larger promise of results in the wide extension of the kingdom of God than this one.

From the beginning to the closing session it was a program with a tremendous pull to it, that tugged strangely at the heart strings and compelled assent to almost every utterance by reason of the bigness of the task which was continually being revealed. Could the entire American church have lived those experiences of four days and a half together, we would even now be in the throes of a spiritual revival that would be destined to shake the remotest corners of the earth. As it is, thirteen hundred men will go back to their tasks with clearer vision and larger conceptions of the compelling claims of the gospel upon men's lives and upon the entire program of the church.

The one outstanding feature of the Congress has been the world-wide task of the Christian Church. The convention thought in world terms and the element that gripped the hardest through every session was the portrayal of great world needs, and any man who heard would have been less than human, not to say Christian, had he failed to be deeply moved at the picture. No portion of the world was overlooked. It was all in the thought of the congress, with chief emphasis naturally being laid upon the European trenches and prison camps, and upon China, India, Japan, Africa and Latin-America.

It was not wholly a convention about foreign missions. The theme was the gospel, and the universality of its appeal to the whole of humanity. To be sure the speakers discoursed in terms of foreign service and home service, of education and training, of liberality and consecration, but all the while they were talking about an all-inclusive gospel that was intended for every life and all of life, without regard to place or time or environment. To some of us it was the re-opening of the picture of the early days of the Society of Friends, when George Fox and his contemporaries, not satisfied with the application of their new found truth to Englishmen alone, went abroad into almost every land under the sun, to rulers and to councils no less than to humanity in the mass, to deliver their burning messages of hope and an uttermost salvation.

The unity or oneness of the gospel task was stressed over and over again. There was no one who urged denominational union or who denounced denominational autonomy. But again and again denominational co-operation and universal Christian fellowship were demanded as the only program that would satisfy the necessities of an age like this. The emphasis of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, under whose auspices this Congress was held, has been from the beginning upon the essential unity of the missionary spirit and task, and the ability of missionary organizations to work together, both at home and on the field, has set the standards for the church as a whole in all its varied activities. Christ's purpose is not that this or that denomination or organization shall be idealized, but that the message of the gospel which saves shall be carried to the last man, the last woman and the last child in every land under the sun, and any church or religious body that is not contributing its full share to this end has lost step with the kingdom and has forfeited its right to be a true representative of Jesus Christ.

The address of John R. Mott on the opening evening was a masterpiece of Christian statesmanship. With the President of the United States upon the platform and before a distinguished gathering of men from all parts of the United States he set forth with startling effect the unprecedented opportunity that the war has placed before the Church of America. He said that war is eating into life and must affect the plans of the Christian religion, and then he electrified the audience by exclaiming "You cannot spend more in one day for destruction than is spent in a year by the large missionary societies without eating into the economic base of Christendom." Although not avowedly a plea for peace, yet in effect his address was such an unanswerable plea for America to remain out of the war, so that as the only remaining great neutral nation, she may remain free to continue the work already begun of ministering spiritually to the trenches and prison camps of every European country except Turkey, where this privilege has not yet been granted, that we reproduce here a digest of the address taken from the Daily Bulletin:

"He began by referring to the spacious, momentous days of God's visitation in which we are living. It is literally a life and death grapple in which the people of Europe are engaged; twenty-four million men and boys are engaged in it. The word boys was used advisedly, for in seeing the armies of Europe a man is tremendously impressed by their youth. This number becomes significant when it is remembered that in no preceding war did the number of men pitted against each other exceed two million. Such a struggle, involving so many people, from so many countries, cannot be without its far-reaching influence on America.

"It is clear that we must make a far larger financial sacrifice. The average daily expense of the war has mounted from thirty-seven million to one hundred million. In addition, there has been an unprecedented destruction of property. In Poland, for example, over 200 cities and towns have been demolished. The total amount expended, together with the amount of wealth destroyed or withdrawn from useful channels has reached thirty billions, whereas the total expense of the twenty principal wars previous to this was only fourteen billions. If the war lasts for two full years the annual interest charges alone on this debt will equal the total annual revenues of these nations before the war. Under these circumstances, if the economic basis of Christian work is to be maintained, the great burden of it must fall upon America, and she must give as she has never given before.

"The call, however, is even more for the gift of life; two million six hundred thousand have been killed already. In 630 days the total in killed, seriously wounded and missing was twenty-six thousand a day, that is, every day a town the size of Montclair, N. J., was wiped out. And the men thus lost are the flower of their respective nations in many respects.

"Mr. Mott said that he had been sometimes accused of extravagance in asking that the universities of the world give a thousand students a year for the evangelization of the world in this generation. He was now persuaded that his demand had not been sufficient. Seventy per cent of the students of the three leading universities of Canada have gone to the front, and 70 per cent of the 40,000 male students in English universities have gone. A request recently came to him for permission to send copies of one of his books to 43,000 students of German universities who are at the front. When he was recently in the student quarter in Paris he could find only four male students whom he could get together for consultation. It is clear that in

"But most of all, we must enter more deeply into the sufferings of our fellows in Europe. While we are sitting in comfort here tonight five millions of men are stretched upon beds of pain in the hospitals of Europe and Asia. In the university city of Cambridge, where Mr. Mott's son is now studying, there are 18,000 wounded. You have here the greatest concentration of physical pain that the world has witnessed. Deeper than that is the dull pain of the mothers and wives and little children. Into this suffering we of America must enter, or else lose our souls. Ambassador Page told Mr. Mott "You will not find a selfish man in Europe." Holland is caring for one million Belgian refugees, which is as if we should take in eighteen millions. If we could forget ourselves as Holland and Switzerland are doing we could fill the world with beauty. In this, the greatest hour of suffering since Christ was on the cross, there is also the greatest concentration of opportunity. We find this opportunity in the training camps and in the trenches, and in the hospitals, where men are gathered in such great numbers and are open to Christian ministrations. We find it quite as much in the 4,600,000 prisoners of war. America now has the opportunity to work among these prisoners in every country. It is possible to reach a great army of Russian prisoners who, if the opportunity is seized, will return to their country with a great message from America. Ours is the responsibility to prepare for constructive and reconstructive tasks after the war, in the Far East, in Africa—in Latin America. All Europe is in the melting pot. Old things are passing away. Old things may become new, if we in America will seize our opportunity."

It was pointed out repeatedly not only by Mr. Mott, but in effect by others that war is revealing capacities for vicariousness that have never been known before, and the question was pressed as to whether or not America has now enough of consecration and determined purpose and sacrifice to carry the gospel to the whole world. Speakers were careful not to make utterances that would embarrass the administration by demands for peace, but over and over again sentiments of peace and good will were urged, and in fact the logic of the convention was to the effect that if America is to measure up to her responsibilities as the source of great dynamic spiritual forces that are to permeate the entire world, she cannot afford under any consideration to allow herself to go to war.

We trust that readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will not feel that the proprieties have been exceeded if we give space to a concluding review of this remarkable gathering next week.

Real Implications of Conscription

(Under the above heading Norman Angell has a valuable article in The New Republic of April 8, which we reproduce here at the request of an interested Friend).

In his article, "The Free Man and the Soldier," Professor Perry has managed to avoid any very definite treatment of the quite specific questions which must occur to anyone who seriously considers the relation of conscription to democracy, and the ultimate object which conscription is designed to accomplish.

Among those very definite questions are these: How far is the control of political opinion by the state necessary to the efficient working of conscription? How far does submission to state control in matters of political opinion render a people unable to form sound political judgments, and so unfit them for democracy? And how far does state control of opinion unfit them, particularly, to solve the problems of international relationships?

Let us take the last question first. It is admitted by all parties to the discussion, and is most particularly emphasized by those impressed with the need for greater armament, that the outstanding problems of the international situation—immunity from the danger that each nation runs from the power of the others, the permanent maintenance of peace with due regard to right which it is the ultimate object of conscription to help secure—will demand for their final solution a capacity larger than men have heretofore shown for other-mindedness, for seeing the point of view of the other fellow, for a sane judgment of the facts between them, for a more rational control of certain primitive impulses and passions in one particular sphere: in short, a certain moral and intellectual evolution therein. Without that we shall obviously get no final solution. And yet, it would seem that conscription, to be thoroughgoing and effective in its mechanism, must and does deliberately oppose that particular moral and intellectual evolution, is obliged to try to prevent the only process which would make it possible. To get security from the kind of catastrophe now shaking Europe a certain political reformation is necessary. The firm establishment of conscription throughout the world threatens to create an immense, perhaps an insuperable obstacle, at least to that particular reformation. With this specific difficulty Professor Perry has not dealt, except to imply, in a most general way, that it is non-existent.

Let us just see how the thing works in the concrete fashion of Carlyle's two Dumdrudges. The young man of France, or Austria, or Prussia, or Bavaria, having been in no way consulted as to his opinion concerning the matter, and with no option of refusal, finds himself one day confronted with the order to enter the trenches and kill the man opposite. Now suppose, being a Prussian, he should say: "I don't feel justified in killing the man opposite. I have followed this particular dispute between his government and mine, and upon my conscience I am not at all sure that he is wrong. I think there is a good deal to be said for his case. Particularly am

I a little doubtful of my case when it is marked by the daily slaughter of children on land and sea. I cannot see that I do the best service to my country in killing the man opposite. He may not be altogether right, but I am at least sure that he is not so wrong as to justify me in putting him to death or torture."

Now, if what the Allies and supporters have so often told us is at all true, Western Europe has taken up arms on behalf of that young heretic—to bring about, that is, just the moral revolution on the part of his people represented in his attitude. Mr. Asquith has told us that the war is a spiritual conflict fought to defeat "a monstrous code of international morality" into which the German people have been entrapped "to the horror of mankind." The war was undertaken to liberate them and Europe from the menace of certain political doctrines and moralities (such as that whatever the state does is right, and that obligations to it overrule all others, and that the citizen must be, as certain members of the German government have been so proud of being, "for their country, right or wrong") and to replace those dangerous doctrines by—again to quote Mr. Asquith—"the enthronement of the idea of right as the governing idea" in international politics.

But if a nation is to know what is right in its relations with others it must in that matter allow freedom of conscience and discussion, particularly freedom to state the view of the other side. It is not an easy thing for even a third party to determine the rights and wrongs of a quarrel. As for the interested parties, it is humanly certain that each will be convinced he is absolutely right and the other absolutely wrong unless there is a deliberately cultivated capacity to "hear the other side." And as governments are made up of human beings, they too are just as likely to be incapable of fair and reasonable judgment in a case in which they are interested parties, unless drawn from a population that has cultivated the capacity for such judgment in the only way in which it can be cultivated—by the habit of forming individual decisions based on the weighing of both sides; unless, in other words, they have learned to "tolerate the heretic" and are dominated by the tradition of the need for heresy in forming opinion.

Now the simple truth is that conscription cannot allow political heresy—opposition to the political religion of the state in international affairs. And the penalty for it, in all conscriptionist states, is death. It sounds fantastic, but it is a mere statement of fact. Let us get back to the young conscript I have imagined refusing to kill the man opposite. Whether he be German, French, Italian, Russian or Turkish, and whether his situation be that of a submarine commander refusing to sink Atlantic liners or an Allied aviator refusing to throw bombs at Baden health resorts, if he really persists there is only one result for him. He is shot.

But conscription cannot in its authority stop short merely at the man in the trenches or under direct military command. Assume that this disposition on the part of conscripts to question the morality of their orders is due to a civilian movement of opinion, a religious or political agitation, to anti-war newspapers or writers. (At the time of the English war against the Boer Republics, and to a lesser degree when England, in her last continental war, was fighting on behalf of Turkish policy in the Balkans against Russia, you had such a movement of opinion, which if England had had conscription then, would probably have produced just the results indicated.) One of two things in that case must happen: either conscription, the compulsory element, that is, disappears, or its authority is extended to cover the writers and newspapers, to cover opinion as well as acts.

And that indeed is what does happen. Conscription, to be effective, must be a conscription of minds as well as bodies. To allow real cleavage of opinion concerning the justice of a state's cause to grow up by allowing the advocacy of a rival cause would be to break down national solidarity, to affect gravely the efficiency of the military instrument by tainting its morale at the source. Moreover the state must take charge not only of the expression of opinion, but of the dissemination of facts which lead to the formation of opinion. And if the incident of the trenches I have described is not commoner than it is (though it is commoner than we suppose it to be) it is largely because states which, like Germany, know their military business have carried out the intellectual conscription, the "mobilization of the mental and moral forces of the nation," so thoroughly before the beginning of the war that the mind as well as the body of the conscript has been suitably drilled. The control of the press and of education, of the careers of all who teach or have influence, has been as much a part of the organization of the nation for military purposes as the physical drill and regimentation. And if we wonder how it is that not only sixty or seventy millions of people in the mass, but great scientists, teachers and theologians as individuals, can subscribe to doctrines and support conduct which appear to the outside world as monstrous, it is merely because we have forgotten that any case, however monstrous, can be made to appear reasonable and acceptable if we never hear anything that can be said against it.

If we think that a people like the French could not possibly, when a like efficiency of organization has had time to do its work, show a like moral result, then we have probably forgotten certain incidents of their history, even quite recent incidents like the Dreyfus affair, and what we said about it and all that it meant at the time. But the French, as a matter of fact, have escaped the full flower of the Prussian result because the circumstances of their history during the nineteenth century—the fact that not once during the whole of that century did they have a government sufficiently national to set up a national orthodoxy—made it impossible to organize the system on its intellectual side. Since the revolution there have always been in France, until this war, large groups ready to put certain social and moral principles above national defense, above the state. The revolutionary wars of France were fought with a whole class of Frenchmen opposed to them, many members of that class actually fighting with the enemies of France. It is but a symbol of what has always been in post-revolutionary France that on the news of the fall of Sedan, because it meant the end of the Empire, Paris was illuminated; and that more Frenchmen were killed by Frenchmen in Paris in the struggle of the commune during that war than by Germans. You had here such ingrained habit of political heresy that no machine could readily cope with it. No wonder France has been intellectually free. Sufficient number of Frenchmen have always been ready to make national defense, the efficiency of the military machine, subservient to the retention of certain freedoms, as the Dreyfus case showed. But conscription—the military organization—has steadily fought these freedoms, and the tendency for the needs of the machine to override all other considerations has at times been so strong that, again as in the Dreyfus affair, the control of such tendency demanded for years at a time all the energies which the heirs of the liberal tradition could summon to the task. If, as a result of this war, France is "nationalized" in the sense of making all political differences really subservient to the needs of national power, the increasing efficiency of the military machine will make the next Dreyfus affair in its outcome a Zabern affair.

The question surely is this: If the democracies like England and France are to get the German degree of efficiency in the working of the national military machine, will it not be at the price of a control of opinion by the state, as complete as in Germany? And if so, why should we expect sensibly different moral results?

The present writer is not urging that the difficulties here indicated necessarily condemn resort to conscription in any circumstance whatever, but that we must face squarely what it involves. Only so can we attenuate its dangers. And it involves undoubtedly the suppression of freedom of conscience in certain political affairs. Indeed, the position of the modern political heretic is in one respect a good deal worse than was that of the old religious heretic. The latter, in order to be secure from the attentions of the Holy Office, had only to remain silent. That does not protect the modern heretic. He is taken out and compelled to kill with his own hand those whose political faith perhaps he shares, or himself be executed.

If anyone is disposed to think that this cultivation of rival group orthodoxies, the loss of toleration for heresies and of the capacity to discuss them, is a small danger, let him look back on the Europe of religious wars—which was not the Europe of a savage age but of the age of Shakespeare and Montaigne. Lecky, among others, has shown that the rivalry of the modern political groups reveals in large part the psychology which marked the rivalry of the religious groups. Patriotism is the religion of politics. It is worth while considering whether we do not stand in danger of doing in the field of political religion just about what Europe did in the field of ecclesiastical religion when it became divided into two main religious groups.

She entangled herself then in a net of her own weaving—the work largely of religious professors, as our net today is woven so largely by political professors. Each group had convinced itself that everything it most valued on earth, the existence of any kind of morality, its spiritual freedom here as well as its eternal salvation later, depended upon its defending itself by military power against the power of the other—defense of course involving preventive wars. There was only one thing which could, and finally did, put an end to the resulting welter: a revision of the prevailing conceptions as to the relation of military force and power over the other group to those moral and spiritual values.

The modification of conception, theory, "sovereign idea," what you will, was only possible as the result of certain heresies, of the conflict of one idea with another, and so the correction of both. But that one solution, the one means of egress, the man of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in Europe for long deliberately closed by making heresy the gravest moral offense which men could commit. Each side killed its heretic: preferably in fashions that were "lingering and humorous." What was more important, of course, they killed with him the capacity of the mass to think clearly—or to think at all on the subjects that the heretic raised, for a community which has no heretics, which is of one mind on a given matter, is on that matter mindless. If the rival communities had been successful in the attempt to protect themselves by military means from heresy within and without, we should have been fighting wars of religion yet, and organizing our massacres of St. Bartholomew. But certain forces mechanical, like the cheapening of printing, moral like the readiness of the heretic to suffer the humorous roasting processes—were too strong for the imperfect organization of the state or the Holy Office. But the modern state—as Germany proves—can be more efficient in the control of opinion and the consequent suppression of heresy. And we can hardly doubt that if unity of political belief is necessary to the successful conversion of a nation into a military instrument, the modern state will kill political heresy even more successfully than the church-state killed religious; and in lesser or greater degree with the analogous result of rendering Europe impotent to solve the very problem out of which conscription itself has arisen.

The upshot of it all is, of course, that if we are to adopt conscription we must do it with our eyes open. Not bemusing ourselves with the irrelevant consideration that it is in itself desirable, but recognizing its dangers and to that extent having the greater chance of escaping them, resorting to it for a specific and limited purpose, just as we might administer a dangerous drug to an invalid, something necessary it may be for his very life, but something also which may cost him his life if we have to go on increasing the dose.

Does not this analogy apply to all purely military preparedness? Is it not the essential remedy without which our patient will die, but which also will kill him unless sooner or later we can enable him to do without it? And there comes a stage in the illness when the emphasis of our effort must be directed to that end mainly. Possibly the health of our modern world depends upon our understanding that we are approaching just that crisis.

NORMAN ANGELL.

Congress On Christian Work In Latin-America Held at Panama, February 10-20, 1916

By CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

(Concluded)

This article concludes the report of the Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America which has been appearing in these columns for the last five weeks. The earlier installments have explained the nature of the Congress and described the main addresses, reports and discussions which occurred there. Reports of commissions on the following subjects have already been treated: Survey and Occupation; Message and Method; Education; Literature; Women's Work; Co-operation and Unity. The reports of Commissions VI and VII, on The Church in the Field, and the Home Base, are described in the present installment, with a concluding word on the Permanent Committee for Co-operation in Latin-America and its proposed work.

Commission VI—The Church In the Field

This report discussed the membership and organization of the native church, under the heads: 1—The racial composition; 2—The moral and spiritual ancestry, and 3—The present organization. It then presents the present spiritual life of the church, as shown by its moral standards, the endurance of persecutions, the attendance upon public worship, habits of prayer, and Bible study, showing spiritual life to be on the increase. Among the hindrances are the lack of suitable devotional literature, and the difficulty of getting adult converts who are wholly lacking in any previous preparation for church responsibilities to regularly fill official positions. Deepening confidence on the part of missionary leaders in the power of the Holy Spirit to produce a perfect New Testament Church, a godly life lived before them, and the faculty of setting every convert to work as he is able to undertake it, are essential conditions of deepening this spiritual life.

The next chapter discusses the "Practice and Development" of the native church through 1—The Bible as a preparatory agency; 2—Spontaneous Evangelism; 3—The dealing with moral problems; 4—Sunday Schools; 5—Young People's Societies; 6—Church Discipline; and 7—The Enrichment of Public Worship.

Chapter V on Self-support, is exceedingly illuminating, and should be carefully studied by all missionary leaders at home as well as on the field. The native church should be trained for self-support from the beginning. The desire of Christian people at home to directly support native workers is greatly prejudicial to the best results. Volunteer unpaid service on the part of native Christians should be utilized far more than it is; the expectation of being paid by foreign money renders this very difficult. The folly of transplanting our home ideas unconditionally to the native church is emphasized. We should carefully study the example of the Apostolic Church in this matter and apply Bible principles on the field. Several practical illustrations from modern missionary work of the very large results of such methods are given. Dr. Ashmore, of China, is quoted as "urging that the 14th chapter of First Corinthians be recalled to our attention where the primitive method of carrying on church services is set forth with great fullness of detail. He says, 'We are old-fashioned enough to believe that this was a model intended for all time in such kind of work as we missionaries are engaged in. Indeed, we are constrained to think that our old matured churches at home, even if they have pastors, would have their efficiency increased immensely, if they would but take a leaf out of Paul's book and utilize vastly more than they do the undeveloped gifts and graces of their talented membership. But when it comes to little rising and struggling interests, whether at home or abroad, which have no money, but do have among them men and women who do know how to do some things and could easily be taught how to do many more, we have no shadow of doubt on this subject. To us, daylight is in this direction.' This sounds familiar to Quaker ears.

A Mexican missionary says, "Some of our own Mexican preachers have been taken up in poverty, sent to school with all their bills paid without thought or effort on their part, and as a result they have lost the training which comes from personal effort, and have been put out of touch with the common people." "It is an actual injury to people to give them everything. If what they use comes as a result of their own toil, they will get along with less, but it will be more appreciated and will do them more good."

Chapter VI deals in a statesmanlike way with the problem of native leadership. This is, perhaps, the most vital problem of all. The work of evangelizing any land will always depend almost wholly on native workers. The training of these leaders must mostly be done in their own lands. To train them on foreign soil generally unfits them for work in their own land. Training institutions with ample facilities and with expert teachers must be provided on the field, and this can only be accomplished by the fullest measure of co-operation. The report says: "We do well to remind ourselves here that the ideal which we have set before us is utterly unattainable except through united prayer and effort of all God's people in Latin-America. If the evangelical church is so confused and divided about the fundamentals of the Christian religion that it is impossible to educate all of the ministers of a given district in the same institution, she can be sure the Latin peoples will accept neither her interpretation of Christianity nor any leadership which attempts to fasten on them a divided church."

The findings of the Commission also emphasize the importance of special work being undertaken to reach the educated and ruling classes, whose "influence for good or evil is much out of proportion to their numbers." Mission work thus far has largely failed here. The very little specialized work that has been done in this line gives encouragement of large possibilities. "There is little excuse for treating, in a meeting for the uneducated, questions and topics of burning importance to the student class, as there is reason to expect this class to be interested in and edified by Christian topics as set forth to illiterates." Much can be done along this line in our own country by Christian people sympathetically meeting the increasing numbers of students from Latin-America who are attending our own educational institutions here at home.

The following principles are emphasized in the Findings: 1—Indigenous leadership should be given the best training available which will encourage a true spirit of service. 2—Such leaders should, as rapidly as possible, be given real responsibility. 3—As far as possible, the responsibility for the maintenance of local organizations should be placed upon the organizations themselves. 4—Outside funds should be devoted to the erection of buildings and to other purposes in such manner as to stimulate giving on the field, and not to strangle the true spirit of independence. Mission funds should go towards the support of missionaries, and for such other expenditures as will tend to stimulate the benevolent impulses of the local churches.

Commission VII—Home Base

This report discusses the causes of indifference in Christian lands towards these neglected nations and the methods that should be used to create a larger interest. It is full of information concerning what has been accomplished. It reports 77 organizations in the United States and Canada, and 50 in Europe that have undertaken to some extent missionary work in these lands.

It reports the various methods that have been used at home to arouse interest—sermons and addresses, literature and periodicals, prayer meetings, study classes, Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies, denominational conferences, Laymen's Movement, Summer Conferences, United Program for 1916-17, on the Two Americas, Student Volunteer, and Christian Associations, influence of tourists, Women's Missionary Societies, stereopticon lectures, work among children.

Chapter V emphasizes various methods that should be more used: 1—Prayer for Latin-America, utilizing special objects for prayer furnished by missionaries, prayer calendars, prayer helps for study classes, and for prayer meetings, prayer leagues, special prayer for Latin-America in public prayer, special days or seasons of prayer. 2—Portrayal of spiritual needs of Latin-America. 3—Brotherly relations with Latin-Americans, a variety of ways being suggested. 4—Multiplication of literature and its use in home churches. 5—Missionary magazines. 6—Photography, use of speakers and lectures. 7—Deputations or touring parties. 8—Systematic missionary education. 9—Enlistment of volunteers.

In the discussion of this report, Dr. Mott laid special emphasis upon co-operation of all our forces in arousing interest at home. He spoke of the great possibilities from those attending this Congress, and the processes that have been going on here at Panama. "If we stand together, nothing can stand against us." He urged: "1st. Reminding ourselves that we are one; 2nd. Contrition because of lack of charity, love and consideration for those from whom we differ; 3d. Transcendence—we have had a mountain top of vision; 4th. Comprehension, not compromise—we are all necessary to each other. If our truth is worth while, getting closer together, not isolation, will promote its growth. How much richer we are for these ten days; 5th. Fellowship; 6th. Intercession. Remember always Christ's prayer for unity; 7th. Standing together before an impossible task; 8th. Doing things together, spreading a network of love and true unity. There is need of apostles of reconciliation and a large, Christ-like mind; reverence for the past, and ability and tact to serve together. Blessed are the Peacemakers."

Permanent Committee On Co-operation In Latin-America.

At the close of the Congress, there was organized a permanent committee on Co-operation in Latin-America, composed of one representative of each of the boards working in Latin-America, and of certain other members coopted because of their expert knowledge or special relation to the work in these lands. The number of these coopted members is not to exceed one-half the number of regular members representing boards, and at least one-half of these shall be chosen from the delegates in attendance upon this Congress.

This standing committee was formed upon the unanimous recommendation of this Congress. Its purpose was to "take steps as promptly as possible to give effect to the findings of the various commissions in the light of the discussions of the Congress, so far as the co-operation of the missionary agencies of the United States and Canada is concerned."

Immediately following the Congress, representative committees of the Boards working in these lands started at once to hold regional conferences through South America, Cuba and Porto Rico, to set in motion in each section the organized forces that should seek to carry out as early as possible, with the endorsement of such boards as may approve of such steps, the policy and methods for which the Congress stands. The regional conference for Cuba was held at Havana February 26-29, and was a remarkable gathering. It will be reported later.

The Conference for Mexico had to be deferred at this time on account of the disordered condition of the country and the prevalence of typhus fever. It is hoped it can be held in the autumn.

The Conference for Central America, which was to have been held at Guatemala, was called off because of the opposition of certain missionaries in that district who were not in sympathy with the spirit of the Congress.

This Is My Friend

Let me tell you how I made His acquaintance.

I had heard much of Him, but took no heed.

He sent daily gifts and presents, but I never thanked Him.

He often seemed to want my friendship, but I remained cold.

I was homeless and wretched and starving and in peril every hour, and He offered me shelter and comfort and food and safety, but I was ungrateful still.

At last He crossed my path, and with tears in His eyes He besought me, saying, "Come and abide with me."

Let me tell you how He treats me now:

He supplies all my wants.

He gives me more than I dare ask.

He anticipated my every need.

He begs me to ask for more.

He never reminds me of my past ingratitude.

He never rebukes me for my past follies.

Let me tell you further what I think of Him.

He is as good as He is great.

His love is as ardent as it is true.

He is as lavish of His promises as He is faithful in keeping them.

He is as jealous of my love as He is deserving of it.

I am in all things His debtor, but He bids me call Him friend.—From an Old English Manuscript.

There is no load that will break a man down so quickly and so surely as a load of revenge. The man who tries to get even with others has few opportunities of gratifying his hatred, but he is all the time corroding himself.—W. J. Bryan.

time and energy that the extent of their work in the ministry is necessarily very much limited. There are also among the resident ministers not a few who, by reason of advanced age, have largely relinquished service in the ministry, although still retaining positions of eminent esteem and influence in the Church. A considerable number of others, through change of residence or other causes, are more or less isolated from meetings of Friends. Further, it would be too much to assume that, among the whole number throughout the Yearly Meetings, some were not to be found who, through mistaken judgment on the part of Monthly and Quarterly Meetings in recording them as ministers, have failed to make full proof of their ministry.

From data of the foregoing character, so far as they are obtainable, it appears that the number of resident ministers who engage effectively and to any large extent in Gospel service does not exceed 200 at most. Taking that number as a liberal outside estimate together with the 471 pastors, and supposing no congregation to have more than one minister in its membership, our active and fruitful ministerial force falls short by at least one hundred of equaling the present number of congregations in the Five Years Meeting. If the fact that in many instances two or more ministers belong to the same meeting be taken into account, the present lack in the numerical strength of our ministry becomes still more significant.

The total number of ministers recorded during the last three years in the constituent Yearly Meetings of the Five Years Meeting, as reported in their printed minutes was 76. It would therefore appear that recruits to our ministerial force are being enrolled at an average rate of about 25 a year. The Yearly Meeting reports also show that a total of 52 ministers died within the last three years, making an average annual loss by death of 14, leaving a net gain of only eleven ministers a year.

With the present shortage of one hundred or more in the ranks of our effective ministry, at least ten years must elapse at the present rate of increase before the Five Years Meeting will have a force of well qualified ministers commensurate, numerically, with the needs of its already established churches. In the meantime what shall become of the large fields for church extension now open to Friends and on what grounds shall we base the prospect for our denominational expansion?

Only a Minute's Work

Some one tells this story of an itinerant minister, some years ago, passing through a prison crowded with convicts showing every phase of ignorance and brutality.

One gigantic fellow crouched alone in a corner, his feet chained to a ball. There was an unhealed wound on his face where he had been shot while trying to escape. The sight of the dumb, gaunt figure touched the visitor's sympathies.

"How long has he to serve?" he asked the keeper. "For life."

"Has he anybody outside to look after him—wife or child?"

"How should I know? Nobody has ever noticed him all the time he has been here."

"May I speak to him?"

"Yes, but only for a moment."

The minister hesitated. What could he say in one minute? He touched the man's torn cheek. "I am sorry," he said. "I wish I could help you."

The convict looked keenly at him, and the hard lines of his face softened, and he nodded to indicate that he believed in the sympathy expressed.

"I am going away, and shall never see you again, perhaps, but you have a Friend who will stay here with you."

The small, keen eyes were upon him; the prisoner dragged himself up, waiting and eager.

"Have you heard of Jesus?"

"Yes."

"He is your Friend. If you are good and true and pray God to help you, I am sure He will care for you."

"Time's up!" called the keeper.

The clergyman turned sorrowfully away. The prisoner crawled after him, and catching his hand held it in his own while he could. Tears were in the clergyman's eyes.

Fourteen years passed. The convict was sent to work in the mines. The minister went down one day into a mine, and among the workmen saw a gigantic figure bent with hardship and age.

"Who is that?" he asked the keeper.

"A lifer, and a steady fellow; the best of the gang."

Just then the "lifer" looked up. His figure straightened, for he had recognized the clergyman. His eyes shone. "Do you know me?" he said. "Will He come soon? I've tried to be good."

At a single word of sympathy the life had been transformed.—The Christian.

Real believers are always thinking they believe not, therefore they are fighting, wrestling, striving and toiling without ceasing, to preserve and increase their faith; just as good and skillful masters of any art are always seeing and observing that something is lacking in their work, whilst bunglers and pretenders persuade themselves that they lack nothing, but that all they make and do is quite perfect.—Sayle.

The good man is not alone. Touch him and you touch God. Help him, and your help is taken as if it were rendered to God himself. This may give us an idea of the sublime life to which we are called—"we live and move and have our being" in God; we are temples; our life is an expression of divine influence. In our voice there is an undertone of divinity.—Judge Parker.

ASENATH H. NIXON.

Asenath H. Nixon, daughter of Jehu and Mary Wickersham, was born in Wayne County, Ind., January 2, 1821, and died at Kokomo, Ind., April 5, 1916; aged 95 years, 3 months, 3 days. In 1841 she was married to Richard Nixon, of Henry County, Ind. To this union were born two daughters, Louisa Arnett, wife of Valentine Arnett and Mary Emily Ellis, widow of John A. Ellis, who passed away six years ago.

Other surviving relatives are four grandsons—Bert W. Ellis, of Memphis, Tenn.; Isaac Chester Ellis, of Washington City; Ernest E. and James Edwin, of Kokomo, Ind., also six great-grandchildren and one brother in Seattle, Wash.

In 1845 Richard Nixon and Asenath removed to New London, then a small village of a few houses and a log meeting house. Richard bought a few dry goods and groceries and began the mercantile business, which he continued for many years. In those early days the Friends of that vicinity and of Howard County belonged to Back Creek Quarterly Meeting, which was located in Grant County, near Marion. Those who attended the Quarterly Meeting generally went on horseback as the roads were not much more than bridle paths. Asenath Nixon made the journey on horseback from New London to Marion many times and was happy in so doing.

In her girlhood, Asenath was seriously impressed with the suffering condition of the colored people in slavery. She heard some lectures on the "Anti-Slavery Question," and her sympathies were enlisted with every movement that had for its object the liberation of the slaves. While living in New London she was instrumental in opening and maintaining, for a time, a Sabbath School for the colored people of that vicinity.

Soon after their removal to Kokomo in 1865 a meeting was held in the Nixon home, when it was decided by the few Friends then living in the town that a Friends Meeting should be held on Sabbath morning at 10:30 o'clock and Fourth-day morning at 10 o'clock. These meetings have been regularly held from that time to the present.

Asenath H. Nixon was converted in her young womanhood. The members have often heard her tell of the struggle through which she passed on account of her sense of sin, and the marvelous change that came to her heart and life through a knowledge of sin forgiven—how she wept and shouted and sang the praises of Him who had been merciful and gracious. Subsequent to her conversion she was led to make a full surrender of all her ransomed powers to God, and now for more than half a century she had maintained an attitude of consecration and faith for heart-cleansing. As a consequence there has been the beautiful outworking of Christian character in a long life of usefulness in our midst.

For more than sixty years she has occupied the station of Elder, sharing in the councils and services of our organization, proving herself a valuable helper in every good word and work. She was a pioneer temperance worker, having joined the Thompsonian Temperance Society in 1843.

In the fervid days of the "Woman's Crusade," she was one of the brave women who dared to kneel and pray in the saloons and streets of Kokomo when it was most unpopular to do so. When the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" was organized, she became a charter member and while she had not kept her place in the ranks of that organization for some time, her zeal for the overthrow of the rum power was unabated. She gave largely of her means for the support of the church, and was liberal in dispensing to the poor and unfortunate.

For thirteen consecutive years she served on the Yearly Meeting's Committee to hold "General Meetings." In that capacity she visited nearly all the meetings of the Yearly Meeting, having for companions, such Friends as Frances Jenkins, Martha Wilson, Margaret Bradfield, Nathan H. Clark, Samuel Trueblood, Calvin W. Pritchard, David Hadley and many others whose names are familiar to our church members. She was particularly faithful in the attendance of all our religious meetings, not only devotional, but meetings for discipline.

Domestic duties and the obligations of home were not neglected for outside interests, neither were they allowed to absorb all her time and thought to the exclusion of the Lord's work. Her experience seemed to know no alternations of heat or cold. Ever ready in testimony and prayer and words of encouragement, her life has moved on evenly and beautifully to its fitting climax in its triumphant close. "With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation."

A WORKING CHRISTIAN.

"One young man at Cedar Hurst in Jamaica was brightly converted and joined the 'candidates' class, and has thrown his life into helping the church in every way possible. If he could not do other work, he would ring the bell for services, clean the church yard, fix up the church, etc. Three others were received into church membership, one an old man who is very happy to have a church home, another a bright young woman who has been saved from much and loves much, whose life we trust is going to count for Jesus. The fourth was an East Indian woman."

ARE THE NATIVES RESPONSIVE?

This question is repeatedly asked and we are glad to let Arthur Chilson answer it. Writing from a Road Camp at a place called Kabras, between Lirhandia and Ketosh, he says: "We have been perplexed this quarter to know just what to do regarding many who have come wanting to come to school. Over 75 boys have come to us from near the chief Mwanza asking to come to school. We have had to tell them that we have not permission to start the mission here, but they insist that we write their names TO WAIT until we get permission. Others are almost daily coming to us but we ask them to wait for we do not want to take any step in this line until we hear something definite from the Government. Much of this interest may be because of the novelty of it, but we believe through it all we see the Lord touching hearts."

FACING THE FUTURE IN MEXICO.

"Friends are now going to have the greatest opportunity here in Mexico," writes Solomon Tice, from C. Victoria, "that they have had since the days of Samuel Purdie if they will only seize it. Our schools have reached such a degree of excellence that they are famous throughout this and other states, although we have never made any effort at advertising. People are ready to listen to the gospel as never before, largely the result of the effect our students have upon their communities when they return home."

In the same letter, Solomon Tice gives his impression of the Panama Congress. "I think it was the greatest event that I have ever had the privilege of attending. The work done in it is the greatest step forward that has ever been taken along mission lines in America. The question that concerns us now is, will our church be able to keep pace with that movement or will we lag behind? I trust the former."

THE TESTIMONY OF A FAITHFUL LIFE.

Digna Guillen de Iglesia departed this life February 26, 1916. She was a charter member of Holguin Monthly Meeting in Cuba, a young married woman at that time, wife of an American soldier. Her consistent life and faithfulness in attending church services, often leading the C. E. prayer meeting in a helpful way, made her a valuable member.

Later years her home was in Havana until her husband's death in November, 1915. Then with baby Maria, she returned, a tuberculosis invalid, to her father's home in Holguin. During these varied circumstances of life, she had kept the faith and by God's grace was enabled to pass through great physical suffering and without fear "through the valley of the shadow of death." The tranquil close of her life, the funeral service in the home, seemed to make a deep impression upon friends, relatives, and the family, especially the father. There were present those who perhaps for the first time heard Christ's message of hope and comfort to sorrowing sinful humanity.

After a short service at the grave, the body of Digna Guillen de Iglesia was laid to rest by the side of the infant child of Charles and Orpha Haworth, who were instrumental in leading her into the Christian life.

SUSIE J. MARTIN.

ONE WINTER OF MISSION STUDY.

It began in the Young People's Organized Bible Class. Eight members, four young men and four young women, took up an eight weeks' study of Margaret Burton's "Comrades in Service."

At the close of the eight weeks, unexpectedly to the leader, several of the young people made request for a further study. The outcome was two classes—a foreign study, Fah's "Uganda's White Man of Work," and a home study, White's "The Churches at Work."

In the meantime, members of the first class, with a concern that there be good missionary books at the disposal of the whole Sunday School loaned their copies of "Comrades in Service;" but not being satisfied with this, laid the matter of the purchase of more books before the Business Meeting of the Young People's Bible Classes. The result was that sufficient money was voted to buy seven books. When these were presented to the Sunday School, a short extract from one was told in simple narrative form, with the concluding remark, "If you desire to know the rest of the story, you will find it in this book." Needless to say, it was not difficult to dispose of the books.

There is not space to tell of the class work on "Uganda's White Man of Work" and "The Churches at Work" except to say that both from the standpoint of expression on the part of the members and of the discovery of talent on the part of leaders, all was eminently worth while.

The discussions of the Home Mission Study Class, with frequent and insistent applications to local conditions, were especially encouraging. At the close of its study, the class decided to constitute itself a continuation committee for carrying out or introducing to other organizations such lines of work as time and opportunity in development make advisable. The first definite work is now on foot. It is to be the taking of a missionary program to a nearby Friends Meeting, with the primary purpose of making real the need for a missionary library. A secondary purpose is to prepare the way for the organization of a mission study class. At the close of the program, a free-will offering, according to previous understanding, will be taken for the purchase of books for the Sunday school library. Preparation for such a program was made about three months ago when a few attractive missionary books were loaned to the Sunday School.

The Sunday School to which the members of the Mission Study Classes already mentioned belong has had no missionary committee. One person has been responsible for looking after the whole of the missionary interests, and has been supposed to have accomplished this by collecting the "Birthday" and "First Sunday a Month" offerings. But Mission Study has changed this. It is evident that the missionary activities of a Sunday School have broader reaches than a feeble and abstract $40 a year offering. Recently a missionary committee was appointed, and it will not be surprising to know that of the five members whom the Superintendent found it most advisable to appoint four of them, including the chairman, had been members of one or more Mission Study Classes.

The Committee is so young one cannot now tell of its work. It is, however, already busy planning and has started in actively upon one point of its policy.

THE IOWA PAGE

PENN COLLEGE.

The Board of Trustees of Penn College was in session April 20 and 21, holding three sessions in all. It had under consideration the financial condition of Penn College, and faced not only the present situation, but the requirements for an adequate growth in the future. There was much unanimity of opinion and action which resulted in the adoption of a forward movement policy and in arrangements so that this policy will be carried out. The Board realizes that both in the matter of campus and buildings large growth was an absolute necessity, and also that the present productive endowment must be increased so that an adequate income would be assured. To this end it has instituted a campaign for the accumulation of $400,000 to be distributed as follows: $65,000 to liquidate the present indebtedness and to create sustaining funds for the immediate future; $115,000 for building purposes—possibly for the erection of a girls' dormitory and science building, and $220,000 for the endowment fund, which amount will raise the productive endowment fund to one-half million dollars.

An excellent attendance of the members of the Board was had although it was at a season of the year when it was difficult for many to come. The importance of the matters to be dealt with, however, was sufficient to bring a full attendance. Only those who were absolutely prevented from coming were absent. It is the intention to begin a campaign in Oskaloosa and Mahaska County so that it may be determined whether the immediate locality is able to support Penn College in the way in which she must be supported. Inasmuch as some 80 per cent of the attendance at Penn College comes from the immediate locality, and inasmuch as all the financial benefit accrues to the immediate locality, it was the feeling of the Board of Trustees that the future course of Penn College would be largely determined by the amount of support which the immediate locality was able to furnish. However, in order to determine what course the Board of Trustees as servants of Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends could pursue with reference to the future of the college, it was necessary first to find out whether it was possible for the locality to support the institution in a way that would not only guarantee Penn to be a first-class college for the immediate future, but also bring her up to the standard which educational experts say colleges must reach if they may hope to be first class in the future.

On the other hand the Board clearly realized that it would take the complete co-operation of every department of the constituency of Penn College in order to accomplish what must be accomplished for her. They simply adopted the gospel plan for extension, beginning at Jerusalem, expecting to go to "Judea, then to Samaria and then to the uttermost parts of the earth."

FIELD NOTES.

Minneapolis, Minn.—A pleasant feature of the Monthly Meeting in April was the presence of Elizabeth Lloyd, of Lansdowne, Pa., and Marianna Burgess, of Chicago. They had been visiting Friends and Friends meetings in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast, and were returning eastward by way of Calgary, Manitoba. Probably for the first time in the history of Minneapolis Friends a minute from the other branch of Friends was read in this meeting. There are some things about the division which took place nearly a hundred years ago that are worth forgetting, and a closer acquaintance among Friends of today may help us to forget these things.

Elizabeth Lloyd spoke at some length on the principles of Friends as taught and exemplified by early Quakers, making application to present day conditions. Particularly she discussed the problem of peace and war. Marianna Burgess, who was at one time a teacher in the Carlisle (Pa.) School for Indians, spoke briefly.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting will observe the fiftieth anniversary of its organization at Bear Creek August 11, 12 and 13, 1916. The program committee would be greatly assisted in its work if all members or former members residing elsewhere would send name and address to the secretary of the committee. Not your name only, but others you may know would be thankfully received. It is the purpose of the committee to make the occasion one of benefit to all who attend.

Earlham, Ia.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS ASSEMBLY

The Christian Worker's Assembly, of Iowa Yearly Meeting, will be held at Richland, Iowa, June 26-29. The program and further information will be given later. A large attendance is being planned for.

PEACE CONTEST.

The first Academic Peace Contest of Western Yearly Meeting occurred at Plainfield, Ind., on April 28th. The contest was between the three academies, Plainfield, Bloomingdale and Vermilion Grove, Ill. A large company met to hear the contestants and much interest was manifest. E. Howard Brown, Chairman of the Peace Committee, presided. Austin Osborn, of Amo, offered prayer. Charleton Carter and Mrs. Symons sang solos.

The contest was a very close one and when the judges had made their decision and these were compared with the decisions of the judges on thought it was found that there was a tie for first place between Hubert Sanders, of Bloomingdale, and Miss Emily Haworth, of Vermilion Grove. The committee then decided to divide the first and second prizes and give both speakers $17.50 apiece. The prizes in gold were presented to the winners by the chairman.

The young people all did well and we hope to make the contest a permanent feature of the committee's work.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

THE STUDY CLASS.

The following is a reprint from the Study Class Manual, a booklet gotten out by our Board and is a compilation of the most recent methods in Study Class Organizations, and sold for 3 cents.

I.—Purpose.

1. To create a sustained enthusiasm in the Church for all Home and Foreign Missionary enterprises.

2. To produce leaders in a Meeting on the subject that the Meeting needs to emphasize most strongly.

3. To impress deeply a small group of people with some great religious appeal; to further the spirit of corporate religious activity; to train members of the meeting in public expression; and to stimulate the whole body with definite religious objective. It should be the aim of every study class to make the presence of Christ felt. If He is made the focal point of the corporate interest the spiritual life of all will be profoundly deepened.

II.—What is Studied.

Social questions, Missions, Child Study, Bible Study, Christian Endeavor Methods, Temperance, Quakerism, Peace and Personal Evangelism. In fact any subject that touches the corporate life of the Church.

NEWS.

Jane Balderston from China writes:

"We had a most interesting trip up the Yangtse; the scenery is wonderful. I wish the world could know more about Western China, for it is well worth knowing about. It is much more prosperous and nicer in every way than the country in and around Shanghai and Nanking. We have been detained here in Changking by the unsettled state of affairs, but now the military authorities have given us permission to proceed."

The committee in charge of the program for the Summer Conference at Cedar Lake will have its final meeting this week. We will be able to make some interesting announcements in our next issue.

Among those who have been invited to help with the program are: Clarence Pickett, of Toronto, Canada; Ross A. Hadley, Richmond, Ind.; Alexander Purdy, of Hartford, Conn.; Frank Dell, of Nebraska Yearly Meeting; Samuel L. Haworth, Minneapolis, Minn.; Perry D. Macy, Amesbury, Mass.; Ryu Sato, Bryn Mawr, late of Japan; Wm. J. Sayers, Muncie, Ind.; Ora W. Carrell, Beacon, Iowa.; George W. Naysmith, Boston, Mass.; Thomas R. Kelly, New Market, Ontario; Ozora Davis, of Chicago Theological Seminary; Chester L. Reagan, Franklin, Indiana; Elden Mills, Earlham, Ind.; Thomas E. Jones.

Cedar Lake Clubs are already being formed. Do you have one?

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Ohio State Field Secretary, Mr. Vandersall, and Thomas E. Jones have been invited to speak at the Wilmington C. E. Union Rally, on May 26-27. Wilmington Young Friends should avail themselves of the opportunity to get some live wide-awake plans and enthusiasm for work in their home meetings.

Young Friends of Indiana Yearly Meeting should plan to attend the Christian Endeavor Convention at Jonesboro May 19-21. The program is especially attractive. We note the names of John R. Walter, of New Castle; Allen D. Hole, of Richmond; Wm. J. Sayers, of Muncie; Walter R. Williams, returned missionary from China; Milo Hinckle, of Richmond; Thomas R. Kelly, of New Market, Ontario, and Thomas E. Jones. Ethel Faulkner, West Milton, is planning some attractive features for the Junior hour. Send your name to Mrs. John R. Thomas, Jonesboro, Ind., right away.

Observe the spring campaign—efficiency, education, enrollment.

Send for an efficiency chart, $1.00. Enrollment cards free.

Plan your Go-to-Yearly Meeting Campaign now. Send for instructions.

NOTE—Let every young Friend read the article on how to establish a mission study class, which appears on the missionary page of this issue. It is practical and deserves careful reading.

Young Friends of New York and Nebraska Yearly Meeting should have final plans made for their "Go-To-Yearly-Meeting" Campaigns.

I feel, I grieve, but by the grace of God I fret at nothing.—John Wesley.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR METHODS

The Prayer Meeting Committee.

It should be composed of the most spiritual leaders in the meeting. The chairman should work with the president of the Society in getting out plans to raise the spiritual standard of the meeting. A Friends Christian Endeavor Society can not live unless it maintain a powerful spiritual atmosphere. This can be realized in some of the following ways: Pass out clippings from the Christian Endeavor World, or other papers, at least a week previous. Do not allow any clippings to be read in the meeting; these should either be memorized or should stimulate one to give an original talk. Do not take part merely to fill up time. Speak only under the compulsion of God's spirit.

The chairman of the prayer meeting committee with the President and leader of the meeting should hold a five minute prayer meeting just preceding the meeting. Pray for definite things.

Vary the meeting. In the place of singing hymns, on some evenings observe periods of silence, when every one will observe some definite theme, at other times turn the whole meeting into a prayer service, with the leader suggesting a topic which will be remembered for two or three minutes, followed by some other subject.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MAY 21.

Topic—"The Blessings of Peace and how to get them." John 14:27.

In this time of turmoil, do not these words come as a benediction? Are we not lacking in faith if we do not believe them?

"My peace I give unto you,"—a gift, why do we not receive it? War is cruel and wrong. Only small boys settle their difficulties with their fists. Will nations ever grow into manhood?

All sin is war. War with our best selves, with the best interest of those whom we hold dear, and with God. Because of sin, perhaps you do not have that gift of Peace, one day feeling that all is well, the next, you are filled with doubts and fears. It is therefore not safe to trust feelings, for they change, but rather look to God, in whom there is no variability, neither shadow of turning.

EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE.

Satisfactory reports were made in the all-day session of the evangelistic committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, held in the South Eighth Street Friends Church, Richmond, April 26. These reports showed the work in good condition with 138 meetings and 100 stationed pastors. Revival and pastoral work is moving forward and the financial condition was reported good.

Nine meeting houses are undergoing extensive repairs, three new meetings are in course of construction, two of these being practically completed, and four parsonages provided in the last year.

CHURCH AT WORK

Los Angeles, California—Easter Sunday was a red letter day in the history of the First Friends Church, of Los Angeles. There was a large congregation at each service and a larger attendance at Sunday School than on any previous Sunday. The hand of fellowship was given to 26 new members, making 49 new members that have been received within the last five months, all the result of pastoral work. The church has extended a unanimous call to Charles and Lena Lescault to remain as pastors another year.

Whittier, California—The Easter service at Whittier Friends church was rendered most impressive by several marked and unusual features. Instead of preaching a sermon the pastor, H. Edwin McGrew, read texts of scripture bearing on the Resurrection of Christ, and the thought of each of these was emphasized in turn with the singing of portions of suitable hymns by the choir and congregation. Following this opportunity was given children of the church to come into the list of active members, cards having been previously circulated containing a confession of faith, which were returned with the approval of parents to the number of thirty. This number of children, ranging in age from nine to thirteen years, coming with happy faces from all parts of the large audience, and surrounding the pastor, formed a most interesting group and certainly gave a most hopeful outlook for the future of the church. Pastor McGrew in feeling and pertinent words impressed upon these young minds the duties and opportunities of this new relationship. Upon the invitation being widened three splendid young men also came forward as candidates for membership. Among those witnessing the exercises were John Henry and Miriam Douglas and the significance of their occupying places side by side on the rostrum became apparent when Mr. McGrew announced that this Easter Sunday was the sixtieth wedding anniversary of this venerable couple and bidding them stand, presented them with a token from Pasadena Quarterly Meeting and one from Whittier meeting, which enclosed specie to the amount of about one hundred dollars. Brother Douglas gave a fitting expression of thankfulness with a testimony to the abounding grace and mercy of God through a long life. Interest was added to the occasion by the presence of Robert W. Douglas, who sat beside his brother on the platform and who preached most acceptably at a recent morning service of the meeting. The evening service was in charge of the choir under direction of Prof. Howard L. Hockett of the college faculty and consisted of the rendering of the cantata, "The King of Glory," which showed not only high musical excellence, but was most impressive as a gospel message.

The musical department of Whittier College in charge of Prof. Howard L. Hockett, has reached a high degree of efficiency, one development of which is the formation and work of the Girls Glee Club of the institution, which has attained state wide fame by the high quality of the musical entertainments it has given in various quarters. The Club recently made a tour of northern cities, including Berkeley and San Francisco. The organization numbers nineteen members and is usually chaperoned in its travels by Mabel H. Douglas of the college faculty.

Thomas Armstrong recently underwent a serious operation at the Whittier hospital in the hope of relief from a chronic ailment with which he has suffered for a considerable time.

B. Willis Beede represented the Friends' meeting of Whittier, California, at the late Laymen's International Missionary Conference at Washington, D. C.

Esther Frame, who is sojourning at Pasadena, California, preached at a recent morning service at the Friends church at Whittier, California.

Carthage, Indiana—On April 21, the Loyal Workers' Adult Class entertained the members and attenders of the congregation at the meeting house. A lap supper was served, preceded by an hour of general sociability, and followed by an interesting program. In spite of the fact that the night was stormy, there were almost 200 in attendance.

On Easter night a chorus of 26 voices presented a sacred cantata, "Gethsemane to Calvary," consisting largely of an excellent musical setting to the words of the story as found in the Gospels. A congregation of about 400 taxed the seating capacity of the house, including the members and pastors of the Christian (Disciples) Church, and many members of other congregations. The capable leader, Florence F. Miner, and nearly all the singers are members of the Carthage Meeting. This form of service met a most enthusiastic response in the community.

Seattle, Washington—We have just closed a city-wide evangelistic campaign carried on in the several churches under the plans of the ministerial federation. It has been a movement rather than the customary revival meeting. The plans have been in operation since the first of the year and have included a general exchange of pulpits on a "Go-to-church Sunday," cottage prayer meetings by districts instead of denominations, special work in the Sunday Schools leading up to "Acknowledgement Sunday," which was generally observed on Palm Sunday, and such special meetings as the local church might arrange for. Early in the campaign a two-day "Ministerial Retreat" was held in which the ministers came together for prayer and spiritual counsel. Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of the Friends Meeting was secretary of the Committee on Evangelism of the Federation, which had to do with the working out of all details. During Easter week the largest theater of the city was placed at the disposal of the committee for great noon day meetings, addressed by local ministers. Friends fell in heartily with all these plans.

Edwin I. and Ida R. Niles, pastors of Lake Stevens Meeting, assisted the pastor in eight days of special services here in the Friends Church from April 2 to 9. While the attendance was not large, the preaching was of a high order and was much appreciated by the membership who were able to attend. Twenty-three members of the Sunday School, who had made definite decisions for Christ, came forward in the church services of Palm Sunday or Easter for their first public acknowledgement of their Savior. Two others have expressed themselves as ready for such acknowledgement, but were not able to be present. Of this whole number, only one comes from a family of which any member is a Friend. On Easter Sabbath four persons, two of them mothers of families, came forward as candidates for membership, and several others are expected.

Robert E. Pretlow has been quite busy the past winter and spring in the cause of peace. He addressed the Ministerial Federations of the four largest cities in the state, and some other ministerial bodies. He has given addresses before a number of church brotherhoods, Y. M. C. A.'s, groups of High School boys, etc., and has furnished material for numerous debates and essays. He was one of the organizers of the "Henry Ford Peace Club, Number 1," and was elected Vice-President of the Club. It is the only organization here doing any active peace work.

South Marion, Indiana—High water mark in attendance at the Second Friends Bible School was reached on Easter Sabbath, when there were 357 present. Considering the lack of accommodation in the way of room, this Sabbath School ranks among the best in Indiana Yearly Meeting. The excellent work in the primary department is deserving special mention. The condition of the Meeting is also gratifying. Attendance is good at all services, and real spiritual life is manifest among the members. Much credit is due to the efficient leadership of DeWitt L. Foster, who is now serving his fourth year as pastor. The pastoral committee has expressed its appreciation of his work by a unanimous request that he still continue in the work here after this year, and he has agreed to do so.

Winchester, Indiana—The Friends Church at Winchester was handsomely decorated on Easter Sunday, and with the splendid special an appropriate music by the large choir, and the very excellent sermon by the pastor, Frank Cornell, the meeting proved to be very beneficial to the large audience that tested the capacity of the building. In the evening the choir, which was composed of thirty members, under the efficient leadership of Oscar G. Puckett, rendered a most beautiful cantata entitled "The Story of Easter," which was very much enjoyed by all.

Calvary, Kansas—A missionary Easter program, "The Hope of the World," was given here on Easter evening, with some additions and subtractions, to a well filled house. It was much appreciated by the audience. We gave the children no colored eggs, as is the custom in places, but allowed them to bring as many eggs as they would for an Easter offering for missions. They brought fifteen dozens, which brought $2.30. This, added to $4.12 taken in a collection, made our Easter offering for missions $6.42. The interest in the work in general here is fairly good.

Friendswood, Texas—Friendswood Monthly and Quarterly Meetings have recently acknowledged the gift in the ministry of Samuel Stanley Perry.

Central Village, Mass—In spite of unsettled weather there were good audiences at the Friends church on Easter Sunday. The morning meeting was well attended, but a large crowd came to the evening service which was of a more popular nature. The program consisted of scripture reading, prayer, several solos, duets and selections by a chorus. Mrs. Tallman and Miss Gertrude Wood gave two readings on the Resurrection. Khalil Totah used five minutes in the description of one phase of Easter in Jerusalem. The evening was in charge of Mrs. Edward Macomber, who gave this community an Easter treat. Mrs. Robert Gifford was taken into membership at the last Monthly Meeting, April 5.

Greensboro, N. C.—The interior of the Ashboro meeting house is being redecorated and will be ready for use again sometime in May. The "Hope of the World," the beautiful Easter program, was given by the Bible School at the 11:00 o'clock service on Easter morning.

Nahunta, N. C.—Contentnea Quarterly Meeting was held at this place eleven miles south of Goldsboro, April 21 and 22. The Quarterly Meeting is composed of eight Monthly Meetings, all of which are located in Wayne County, except Bethesda. All are in rural communities except Goldsboro Monthly Meeting. There are about 900 members in the Quarterly Meeting. The Meeting was well attended on Saturday morning, representatives being present from nearly all the Monthly Meetings, some having driven as far as 25 miles. Alvin Barrett, pastor at Goldsboro; Franklin S. Blair, an elder from Guilford College, New Garden Quarter, and some other of the local ministers gave brief discourses suited to the occasion.

Franklin S. Blair, Secretary of the Yearly Meeting Committee on Prohibition and Narcotics, showed from the reports of the Census Bureau at Washington that white women have an average life of 53.6 years, while the white men have only 50.2 years, and that noted physicians and health experts explain this difference in favor of females by the fact that men indulge more in the use of alcohol, tobacco, dissipation and various forms of vice. He quoted from Dr. Albert H. Burr as saying that the principal cause is the extensive use of tobacco and that "there are volumes of evidence in

An excellent lunch was served on the long tables in the grove at the noon hour. At 2 o'clock, Franklin Blair spoke briefly on "The Bible and the Study of it." He insisted that we study and teach it in our Sunday School lessons, at least as well as we do the books of our secular schools. On Sabbath morning from forty to fifty persons participated in the Sunday School. At 11 o'clock Albert Barrett preached with reference to Christ's resurrection and its obvious merits. In the evening F. S. Blair, chairman of the Yearly Meeting Peace and Arbitration Committee, spoke on "Peace and Preparedness from a Bible standpoint." He has addressed the congregations of all the eleven Friends Meetings in the Quarter except Bethesda.

Carmel, Indiana—The Friends Church here has within the past few weeks been highly favored, first by a visit from the Yearly Meeting Superintendent on Bible Schools, who gave an inspiring talk to the School in the morning, also at a Bible School Conference in the evening. One Sabbath evening service was given over to Tom Jones, Secretary of the Young Friends Board, who inspired his audience as only he can do. On April 16th Mary Hadley, of New London, gave an address on "The Call of the World," in connection with a program rendered by Carmel Quarterly Meeting. At all these meetings the young people rendered valuable service in music. Much credit is due to our pastor, Lewis E. Stout, together with his wife, for the lively interest taken in the different activities of the church.

Wilmington, Ohio—Ellison R. Purdy, pastor of the Meeting here, recently held a series of meetings in the Friends Church at Jamestown, Ohio. He also recently gave an address on Preparedness in the Methodist Church at Clarksville, Ohio, at the invitation of the pastor. Albert J. Brown, formerly president of Wilmington College and at one time pastor of the First Friends Church in Indianapolis, is expecting to move to Indianapolis in the near future, where he will take charge of the Farquhar Furnace business. He sold his residence and ten acres of land on West Main Street to Dr. Kelley Hale, who will erect a hospital there some time in the future.

KANSAS PASTORS' ALLIANCE.

The Pastors' Alliance of Kansas Yearly Meeting met at Haviland, Kas., April 17-20, with Elma Albertson, Vice-President in the chair. Arthur Wollam, President, was not able to be present on account of sickness. The address of welcome was given by M. F. Swafford, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, and the response by Amy Hawkins.

The conference sermon was delivered by F. Olen Hunt, of Fowler, from Jude 3. This was an earnest appeal for all to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. No one can do this successfully without the baptism of the Spirit.

"Quiet Hour" was observed each morning at 9 o'clock. Papers were read as follows: "To What Extent Should Our Meetings for Worship be Programmed," by George C. Wise, Jr., of Emporia; "The Woman as a Successful Pastor," by Bertha Stubbs Sumpter, of Argonia; "The Needs of Our Business Meetings," by George Deshler, of Cherokee, Okla.; "World Peace and the Prince of Peace," by William L. Pearson, of Wichita; "The Objective of Preaching," by Alpheus Rees, North Branch, all of which were good and helpful.

"The Proposed Educational Requirement for Our Ministry," a symposium, was discussed by Scott Clark, of Alton, Kas., Albion M. Gibson, of Ingersoll, Okla., and Alden L. Knight, of Alba, Mo.

The great factor in the Alliance was Joseph H. Smith, of Redlands, Cal., who conducted a bible study each morning and preached two evangelistic sermons at the night services. His first bible study was based on Eph. 5:17, "Knowing God's Will." He said that God has a will for the world, that he has a will for men and that he has a will for me. There are three things to guide us to that will: first, the intimations of nature; second, the directions of scripture and third, the Holy Spirit's illuminations.

His second lesson was from Phil. 1: 9-11. He said that the Philippian church was Paul's sweetheart. Paul put wings to his prayers, the wings of thanksgiving. The omission of thanksgiving is the defeat of many prayers. Sanctification destroys carnality in the natural man, but does not destroy the natural man. Sanctification finishes nothing but sin. We do not become skillful in interpreting God's word or will all at

of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions. The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common. Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc. There is no war tax on land and no conscription. once. There is a great difference between the "Fruit of the Spirit" and the works of the flesh. He then dwelt upon the difference between the good and the excellent, illustrating it by Cor. 3:11-13. Hay, wood and stubble are all good, but gold, silver and precious stones are excellent. Church building, education and reform are all good, but soul-saving is excellent.

His first night sermon was from John 1:11-13. He said that every one of our denominations had more power at the beginning than they had later. The great revivals of the past have not come by the proclamation of new truth, but the restating of old truth. The text settles forever whether the disciples were converted before this time. If I did not know of the new birth I would never rest until I did. God's will is exclusive to the family. He gives the Holy Spirit only to the children or heirs. His second sermon was from John 17:21. He said there is a fixed line between the church and the world, but the walls of the church are not the line. It is spiritual life, the new birth. I want to show you that the Savior rests his hope of the world's salvation on the sanctification of the church. His last address was on Thursday morning and was a combination of exposition and evangelism. He spoke from John 4:36-38. He showed that we receive double wages. Each day we get our pay and the reward when the reaper and Jesus, the sower, will rejoice together. It was a great treat to listen to this wonderful man of God.

The closing service was a sermon by George Deshler, of Cherokee, Okla., from John 8:32, "Knowledge, Truth and Freedom." God has a plan for every life.

PEACE DAY, SUNDAY, MAY 21ST.

The Peace Association of Friends in America asks that each local Meeting of Friends belonging to the Five Years Meeting observe Sunday, May 21st, or some other day near that date, if more convenient, as Peace Day among Friends. It is suggested that some special phase of the peace question be made prominent, and that a statement in regard to the work being done by the Association as the Peace Board of the Five Years Meeting be made. In order to supply the necessary information, there will be mailed, ten days or two weeks before the date named, a brief account of the work done the past year, so that the pastor or some other member of each Meeting may have at hand in time an outline of the work which the Board has done and is doing.

It is also requested that in all Meetings, except those which have recently made a contribution to the work of the Board, the financial needs of the Board be considered and a contribution as generous as possible be made. This contribution should be forwarded to the Treasurer of the Five Years Meeting, Francis A. Wright, Jr., 520 American Bank Building, Kansas City, Mo.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON.MAY 21.

Subject—The Cripple of Lystra.

Lesson—Acts 14.

Golden Text—He giveth power to the faint; and to him that hath no might he increaseth strength. Isaiah 40:29.

Paul and Barnabas had found it wise to leave Antioch (in Pisidia) because of the opposition which had been raised against them. Included in the aggressors were the "devout women of honorable estate and the chief men of the city," whom the Jews had incited for a purpose.

From there they journeyed to Iconium where they seem to have been very successful, for a great multitude of Jews and Greeks believed. But they, after a time, had to face another popular uprising in which they were threatened with stoning, so they departed for Lystra.

Luke does not tell us how long they had been preaching here before the occurrence of the incident which forms the basis of this lesson, but we may presume they had been in the city for some time, long enough to win enough converts to found a church; or they may have remained for a considerable time after the event.

While we are interested in the healing of the lame man the results of the cure upon the people are in this case of greater importance to us. The two apostles are taken to be gods because of the special power which they seem to possess. It is evident that Zeus and Hermes were the leading gods of the city. Paul is identified with the latter, probably because he was the more prominent speaker of the two, and Hermes was considered to be the spokesman of Zeus.

Among the Jews such an event would have received a different interpretation. Instead of attributing the results to the direct presence of the gods the Jews would think of the men as possessing a special power from God, or as we say, the spirit of God was working in and through him. This difference of idea and interpretation offers an interesting situation for study. The Jews had ceased to believe in the coming of God from his abode down to the earth, as he is represented as doing when Sodom and Gomorrah were to be destroyed. God to them was no longer so intimately associated with earthly affairs. He had come to be thought of as sending his officers or Spirit to look after these affairs.

Not so with the Greeks. At this place their gods might be expected in their midst at any time. Yet it is quite probably true that at least some of the Jews thought of him as being constantly conscious of them and that which they were doing which probably was not the conception of these Greeks, for to them God was more like a human being, he could not well be in two places at once and when away was not always conscious of world affairs, for he must have his periods of rest and sleep. Even in this age we are by no means united in our conception of the character of God.

Was the cure of real benefit to the cause? It does not seem to have been because of the mistaken notions which resulted. Jesus often found such events a hindrance to his work, but we cannot say how much the event may have enhanced their later influence.

AT PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.

President Levi Pennington, of Pacific College, was acceptably present at the April session of Monthly Meeting and presented a timely message.

Charlotte Johnson, of Grinnell, Iowa, who has served for a number of years as Superintendent of the Durand Hospital for contagious diseases in Chicago, is spending a few weeks resting and visiting with friends and relatives in Pasadena and other points in southern California. She expects to return to her hospital position early in the summer.

Esther G. Frame has been sojourning with relatives in Pasadena, and has been busy speaking to Friends and other congregations. With returning physical strength, she has regained much of her old-time power and has been gladly heard by old friends and new.

Pasadena Quarterly Meeting, held at Los Angeles, April 21 and 22, was favored with the presence and services of a number of veteran ministers—Robert Douglas, John Henry Douglas, Benjamin Hiatt and Esther G. Frame. On the 22d, Robert Douglas preached a strong sermon from the text, "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal—the Lord knoweth them that are his." The attendance at the meeting was good. The final steps were taken in the transfer of Alamo M. M. near Holtville, Imperial County, to San Diego Quarterly Meeting, the sessions of which are now more accessible to Alamo Friends.

On the evening of April 11th, a large party of Pasadena Friends went to Los Angeles to participate in the supper and conference, held under the auspices of the committee appointed by the Yearly Meeting of 1915 to consider the question of establishing Friends Headquarters in Los Angeles. Friends, to the number of 135, were present from Whittier, Long Beach, and most of the other meetings of southern California. Addresses on the need and the opportunity for aggressive conservation work in Los Angeles and others parts of the state were given by Florabel Rosenberger and Joseph John Mills. A number of others, including John S. Kimber, were called upon by President A. Rosenberger, the chairman of the evening, and all agreed that headquarters for California Friends and a field worker with special training are urgent necessities for the near future. Strong resolutions were adopted requesting the Yearly Meeting to provide at the next session for this advanced step.

Others

By C. D. MEIGS.

Lord, help me live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way,
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for—OTHERS.

Help me in all the work I do,
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all I'd do for you,
Must needs be done for—OTHERS.

Let "Self" be crucified and slain,
And buried deep: and all in vain,
May efforts be to rise again,
Unless to live for—OTHERS.

And when my work on earth is done,
And my new work in Heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won,
While thinking still of—OTHERS.

Others, Lord, yes, others,
Let this my motto be,
Help me to live for others,
That I may live like Thee.

WHY SO FEW YOUNG FRIENDS ARE COMING ON IN THE MINISTRY.

Some time ago both the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight of Indiana Yearly Meeting and of Whitewater Monthly Meeting was exercised upon the above question. Three papers presented upon the subject to the latter body were reviewed by a special committee, which submitted the following report, which deserves attention by the entire church:

A Summary of the Three Papers Prepared For This Meeting by Arthur M. Charles, Josephine Burson and Milo S. Hinckle on the Subject: "Why So Few Young Friends Are Coming Forward in the Ministry."

With a firm conviction that God is calling the youth to the ministry of the Gospel and that they should be coming forward in larger numbers, we offer a few suggestions as to our responsibility thereto.

Possibly our first duty is to guard tenderly the spiritual interests of our youth, endeavoring to bring them into a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ that will give them an entirely new conception of life because of the new experience they have found in Him. We must not drop below the Gospel of "being born anew"—becoming "new creatures in Christ." To this end the ministry must be spiritual and warmly evangelistic. The life of the meeting must be alert, active, responsive, joyful, full of fervent prayer. Here the eldership sets the pace.

Our next duty may be to create and maintain a truly Friendly type of meeting for worship, which, for this section of Quakerism, must be a proper adjustment of pastoral service with our cherished ideals of democracy. Keep the minister from monopolizing the time by faithfully using—either in vocal service or deep silent worship—all the time that he does not occupy, else it produces a felt vacancy and tends toward restlessness. Be patient and appreciative of the services of others than the pastor and let the meeting know of such appreciation. Frequently participate briefly in meeting and then invite and urge young people to do so. Diligently guard against the impression that only the choir's and pastor's services are desired in the meeting. Set the example of the thing desired on the part of the youth.

Remember that practice gives confidence and tends toward perfection, but if those already trained use all the opportunities, no chance remains to develop the new and untried. Be willing to bear with the imperfections of the beginner, else he can never become proficient. Send the pastor away occasionally, if need be, and then, instead of going to hear a neighboring divine, plan the home meeting so as to make it easy for the timid ones to offer service. Studiously avoid the impression or atmosphere of disappointment on account of the pastor's absence, but grasp it as an opportunity for MEETING development. Let the youth know we want them to come forward and are glad to recognize their gifts.

Lastly, our responsibility is to develop the prayer life of the church to the end that young people may hear and respond to the call to the ministry. There is no other such mighty force in the activity of the kingdom of heaven as prayer. No other leaven will permeate the whole body with a spiritual conviction as true, sincere, faith-seasoned, continuous prayer. Prayer in our homes for our own and our neighbors' children; prayer in the public meeting for God to lay His hand upon some of the youth and help them to respond. Let the youth hear us pray for them, being careful ourselves to maintain a bearing that will give our prayers a full measure of confidence in those who hear. It is too serious a thing to pray just because asked to do so, but it is also a serious thing for young people to witness a sluggish or no response to an open appeal for prayer or other exercise.

We must pray much to know just what is our responsibility toward the promotion of the highest interests of the meeting and especially in this matter of aiding young Friends to recognize and respond to the call of God in this particular field of service.

When The Way Is Dark

It is possible, when the future is dim, when our depressed faculties can form no bright ideas of the perfection and happiness of a better world, it is possible still to cling to the conviction of God's merciful purpose toward his creatures, of His parental goodness even in suffering; still to feel that the path of duty, though trodden with a heavy heart, leads to peace; still to be true to conscience; still to do our work, to resist temptation, to be useful, though with diminished energy; to give up our wills when we cannot rejoice under God's mysterious providence.—Exchange.

The National Missionary Congress

Editorial Correspondence

As these lines are written, more than a week has passed since the close of the Laymen's Missionary Congress at Washington City. In the clearer perspective of later meditation, it is easier to comprehend the surpassing value of such a gathering. In effect, at this convocation, the religious leaders of America—a multitude of them—were sitting in executive council, taking account of spiritual stock, facing without flinching the needs of the whole world and with startling frankness laying the responsibility for world Christianization at the doors of the American church where inevitably it belongs.

We can hear again and again the stinging words of W. E. Doughty, "The church often fails because it is afraid to adopt an heroic policy." Despite Pentecost and the baptism that came with the stoning of Stephen, the Jerusalem church could not become the center of an aggressive and extended missionary propaganda. First impressions were too fixed to admit of a big program for Christianity, and thus it was that Antioch, unburdened with traditionalism, freer from the constrictive tendencies of Judaistic formalism with which the earlier Christians were perforce trying to harmonize their practices and theories, became the source of a new and mighty movement for the spread of the gospel.

As Friends we ought to accept the rebuke of Mr. Doughty's words. Do we not fail at many points because we are afraid to be heroic, because we are so wedded to tradition that we dare not see anything Friendly beyond the first experiences of our denominational life? But the call to us is a call of the world today with needs that must be met by a message interpreted in terms of present life. We are not appealing for radicalism, or change for the sake of change, but we must be heroic enough to follow the leading of the Holy Spirit in service for humanity, even though He lead us into experiences as strange as were those of Pentecost, or Peter's vision or Paul's visitations of the Gentile world. We cannot be bound by custom or any other hindering thing and expect any large share in meeting the tremendous world needs of this age. To use Mr. Doughty's words again, the church must be liberated from the "blight of the township mind," that is to say, of provincialism and narrow sectarianism, if it is to rise to the unparalleled opportunities of this generation.

An announcement of more than ordinary significance was that of the presence in our American colleges and universities of six thousand young men from the non-Christian world, sixteen hundred of these being from China alone. These men are observers and students of Christianity at first hand, and in their presence Christianity in practice is on trial as it has hardly ever been before. These men for the most part will be the future leaders of their respective nationalities, and their impressions of the church and the gospel as an uplifting force in men's lives, gained by their contact with a confessedly Christian nation, will be for the weal or the woe of the cause of world missions in the years that are to come. It was not greatly reassuring to be told of even a few of these students, who, having come to America avowedly Christian as the result of mission effort at home, had been so disappointed in their observations here and with their experiences among professedly Christian men, that they had lapsed into paganism again.

In some way the Church must learn that henceforth Christianity is to be measured not so much by the standards of foreign missions as by the ordinary, every-day living of our church members at home, and the average procedure of the church within our own land. What greater compulsion can there be for the church, both in its corporate and individual capacity, to practice the religion it professes, not alone for its own sake, and the sake of America, whose destiny depends in such vital respects upon the life and character of the church, but for the sake of the great unchristian world whose hope of progress and enlightenment within the next twenty-five years springs so immediately from the composite and realistic life of American Christianity today? In more senses than one, therefore, the task of the church is a world task, and although America might withdraw every missionary from the foreign field, the presence of these six thousand students and the presence of other thousands yet to come will make America the guardian of the religion of the Orient and the dark Continent and of Latin-America for generations to come. If there were no other compulsion, the effect upon the millions in the un-Christianized world should drive the American church to its knees with a yearning and with a consecration that in actual living at home, Christianity may measure up fully to the very best standards which have been set for it by our missionaries in the heathen world. The words of a Chinese student constitute a rebuke to American education which should not be lost upon our institutions of higher learning when he said that our "colleges and universities lay too great stress on mental training and too little on moral." Apparently we have reached the day when the church and the school must clasp hands in a mutual spirit of Christian helpfulness for the purpose of realizing in actual experience better and more positive types of Christian living among the masses.

The religious tone of the Congress was superb. Every address was given a setting of prayer, and the climax of sincerity was reached when Shailer Mathews declared that "the best advertisement of religion is a religious soul," and when Mr. Doughty, with tremendous earnestness, called upon the church to recognize again its apostolic mission and its need of the heart of fire. A new standard of patriotism was set up when Dr. Mathews reminded us that "a nation that cannot contribute to the uplift and betterment of humanity has no right to exist." There was nothing shoddy in the program anywhere. In every utterance there was a burning appeal for a realistic, burning, pulsating, spiritual life that is the only hope of the world, and for a program that would actually carry the gospel to the last man, the last woman and the last child on earth.

A lesson in practical procedure was given by A. E. Corey of the Men and Millions Movement when he said, "There is no pressure like the expression of the world's great need." Pastors and other leaders and workers in the church, who find difficulty in stirring the membership to action either in response to the claims of the foreign field or the home field, should quit begging people to do their duty and try the experiment of presenting in realistic picture the actual needs of the field in question. Multitudes who give sparingly to benevolences in general will pour out of their lap of plenty when a needy life in concrete form, submerged in helplessness, stands before them.

Important as are other matters yet untouched, we cannot prolong this correspondence. We close by reproducing from the Daily Bulletin a digest of the program of action, reported by a committee appointed to consider the recommendations of the secretary, as follows:

Methods

The committee recommended that divisional organization throughout the United States be extended, and that the work of promoting the every-member canvass for systematic and methodical giving in churches be enlarged and emphasized. Further, that increased emphasis be placed by the movement upon the standards of stewardship, that every man shall devote a portion of his life, time and money to the Lord's service, and that an educational and inspirational campaign for these standards be inaugurated.

The committee also proposed in this connection that the youth of the churches be instructed in standards of stewardship of life and property, and that the appeal of the movement be urged upon the young men of the churches in general, and especially that the Movement's work be extended in rural communities, and that its co-operation be offered to the denominational committees on work in rural districts.

Educational

The committee called attention to the advantage that would come through the maintenance of a department which would furnish the press reliable missionary information of special interest to men, and urged that the magazine of the Movement, Men and Missions, be enriched and the circulation increased and that laymen be urged to more widely read standard missionary literature, particularly books of their own denominations.

Finance

Under this heading the committee recommended that the Congress appeal to laymen of means throughout the entire church to provide promptly and abundantly the funds needed for the enlarged demands upon the Movement. Strong and abundant support is due as an expression of confidence, especially in view of the fact that the return in money to the churches as a result of the Movement's work has been so great.

War and Relief

Urging upon all Christian men the great importance of large assistance in the alleviation of suffering among the warring nations of the world and the extension of fellowship to the men of the world, especially in countries usually regarded as missionary, the report leaves to the Executive Committee the part, if any, the Movement should have in the campaign for relief.

World Visitation

The committee recommended that Christian men of all nations be invited to unite with the laymen of American churches in a strong movement in which they will all enlist for world service on behalf of the Kingdom of Christ, and that commissions of laymen visit all lands to secure this co-operation.

Evangelism and Prayer.

Emphasis was placed upon the absolute and urgent dependence of every man upon the agency of prayer.

Poured Out

By RUFUS M. JONES.

In the annals of David's life there is a very fine story of heroic daring, and of the way David, by a sudden inspiration, turned the splendid bravery of his men into a religious sacrament. In the midst of hard battle, David expressed a longing for a drink of water out of a well at the gate of Bethlehem, at a time when Bethlehem was held by the army of the Philistines. Three of the most valiant of David's "mighty men" at once volunteered to break through the enemy's line and get the water for their king. At the risk of their lives they got through to the well and brought the skin of hard-won water back to David. If he had done the usual thing and had drunk the water which his brave men had got for him, we should never have heard the story. But he did not drink it. It seemed to him too precious, too deeply tinged with the blood-red spirit of risk and sacrifice to be put to common, ordinary uses, and, uplifted by the beauty of the deed, David poured the water out unto the Lord.

What a waste! What a way to treat his brave men! is the comment of dull common sense. What a pity for the dry sand to drink up the water that had been got at such a venture! is the philistine view of the matter. But to those who have eyes for the inner meaning of deeds, this act of David's brings to light the fascinating, attractive quality of character which has made the first king of Judah with all his faults an immortal figure. He does the sublime and unexpected thing. He will not turn to personal, selfish uses the gift which comes to him deeply colored with the sacrificial daring of his men. The wine-skin holds for him not water to be drunk, but the precious life-blood of brave men to be offered to the Lord as a sacrament of love.

There is a parallel story in the new testament that is still finer and more moving. A woman who has suddenly found a new life, a new hope, a new power, through the unexpected gentleness and tenderness of Christ and through His extraordinary faith in her comes in at a dinner where He is, and, in a moment of over-mastering love and gratitude at the memory of the past, she breaks a costly alabaster vase of priceless perfume and pours it recklessly out upon the Savior's feet. The common sense observers cry out against the waste, and the economically minded figure out how much could have been purchased with this spilled ointment. But Christ sees further. He instantly catches the deeper meaning. For Him, it is the revelation of a spirit, a devotion, a passion that loves and that cannot stop to figure and calculate. He sees that there is at least one person in the world who understands Him, who has discovered His way and who feels the absolute worth of love. She has not sold her perfume to inaugurate some paltry charity that would bring her cheap fame; she has instead without any calculation made an undying sacrament of it.

The world is full of chances for this kind of sacramental service. There is hardly anything which touches our higher life that is not blood-red with the sacrifices that have won it for us. The privileges that have become our common heritage have all cost an untold amount of venture and daring and suffering and death. We too often take these things as a matter of course. We use them as we do the air and sunlight, as though they were ours by right of birth, and we do not have the high quality of poetry and religion in our nature that makes us able to raise them to a sacramental service as we should.

The cross itself has again and again been thought of and used as a symbol of security: "He paid the price;" "He died that we might be safe." It is seized upon as a way of relief. Everything has been done for us without us. Our title is now clear to mansions in the skies. Surely not thus should we accept the sacrifice. If it is what the most devout souls have believed it to be then all life henceforth must be colored and altered by this unparalleled act of love and sacrifice. Instead of bringing us the seal of perpetual security, instead of being meant for our own selfish relief, it is a call to us to pour out the life that has been given to us in the highest way of sacramental service to which we can raise our vision. If redemption has come to us in this way of uncalculating love then we can never live again in the poor, thin, common, plodding way of old; the love of Christ "constrains us" to live the bold and daring way of faith and love that ventures all and keeps back nothing.

The tremendous cost of freedom and of self-government makes the word "country" mean something new when we see it colored with unstinted sacrifice. But here again we cannot calmly drink the precious water to quench our own private thirst. We cannot settle down in security and enjoy in peace the treasures which others have won for us. Noblesse oblige. We are bound as patriotic sons of noble fathers to make their sacrificial gains genuine sacraments of life. We can do this best by risking all that freedom means to us, all that country stands for in our vision in a brave effort to bring forth and secure for our children a still greater freedom and a still loftier country. Patriotic service is made the truest sacrament when it is devoted to the task of raising patriotism itself to its higher meaning.

Is—to have been a hero."

Our own Society, born in heroic endeavor and baptized in unstinted suffering, bravely borne, has not seldom been quietly accepted as a way of ease and security. The water brought at such a risk has been drunk in shelter and in peace. We have too often felt that we were doing enough if we enjoyed our privileges and passed them on, but slightly shrunken, to the next generation. Our ideal has been "preservation." We have aimed to guard and to keep, to have and to hold.

It will not do. It is a miserable ambition. It is time for us to discover the sacramental way of treating this precious water which our ancestors drew for us. We cannot use it for our private enjoyment, we cannot save it for our children, we cannot treat it as ours, we must pour it out in uncalculating, self-forgetful devotion. It is better that we should LOSE it than that we should merely succeed in SAVING it for our own ends. It is too sacred, too red with the life-blood of heroes to be used in the dull, common way of commonplace men. It must be poured out like the Bethlehem water, like the Bethany perfume, like the life of Christ, poured out without counting the cost or calculating the results, and made a real sacrament of life, a spontaneous bestowal of love for love's sake.

Ethics and Religion—Their Relation

By THEODORE FOXWORTHY.

Every man has his ideal, which serves as a model for his course of conduct. This ideal may be a parasite in society, a character in romance, an ordinary man or woman, or an inhabitant of the celestial realm.

In trying to attain unto the model the individual may take the whole life of the ideal for his example or he may select some phase of the life. A God of power was the ideal of Lucifer when he sought to exalt his throne above the stars; and to be like the Omniscient One in knowledge was the aspiration of Adam when he ate of the forbidden fruit.

A few years ago the officers of the law discovered a rendezvous near Sioux City, Iowa, inhabited by some of the most desperate youths of the country. The shelves of this cave were covered with a very destructive type of literature. These young outlaws called their hiding place "The Red Wolf's Den," and their ideals which they were striving to follow were such men as the James boys, the Younger brothers, Harry Orchard, and Pat Crow.

Many men and women who have read unreal romantic conjecture have, as a result, lived lives of visionary fantasy, while others through studying of such men as Washington, Lincoln, Tolstoy, Gladstone, Bismark, and Livingstone have become towers of strength and influence.

The great purpose of ethics is not only to set forth systems of conduct as they have been and are; but to portray the proper course of life, to emphasize such ideals, duties, laws and principles as are well worthy of consideration.

Religion emphasizes the same fundamentals as does ethics, but it goes a step farther and dwells on the fact that a man is related to the Infinite, and that it is only through his proper relationship with this Power outside of himself that he can attain unto the highest ideal.

Ethics apart from religion is formalism, while religion without a proper emphasis laid on ethical or moral life is apt to become impractical, but if they are taken together they result in a well-rounded character.

Every individual is under obligations to himself, to his fellowmen, and to his God. For his own sake he must preserve his body, develop his mind, and protect his soul. For the sake of society he must contribute the best there is in him toward the propagation of such principles of practical living as will continually elevate mankind to higher planes of conduct. Because he is not his own and is bought with a price he owes his Maker a life of humble submission, service and sacrifice. The injunction concerning the first and second of these obligations is found in ethics, but the inspiration for all is in the Christian hope wherein is promised a crown of righteousness which the Lord will give to all those who finally reach the goal.

The intent of every truly rational man is to attain unto a high ideal. This standard is well discussed in ethical writings, but when it comes to attaining unto this standard he must seek religious instruction, forsake sin and accept as his Savior and Sanctifier the Great Master of the Art of Living, Jesus Christ.

Immanuel Kant was one of the most noted ethical writers of modern time, but much of his teaching as well as his life fell far short of the mark mainly because he failed to recognize the Infinite as the initiative force in the shaping of human conduct.

On the other hand, the Brahmin priest is religious. He has his many rites and ceremonies, and is regarded by the lower castes as a being who can at will bless or curse their destiny for all eternity. But what of his ethics? His life is worse than a failure. He is deceitful, vile, immoral, abominable, a curse to his people, and a reproach to society.

The Apostle Paul may be used as an example to prove the fact that religion and ethics must cooperate in the building of character. The apostle had a real vision of Jesus Christ; he thence set about to do the will of his Master. He realized that true religion meant daily communion with Christ and daily service for Him; that to be Christ-like meant not only to be true to his God, but to be an example to men, "in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."

True religion and true ethics go hand in hand. They are not only related, but they are inseparable. The one is the cause, the other is the effect; the one is life, the other the natural activity of that life, as it is expressed in words of sympathy, in deeds of kindness, and in acts of unselfish heroism and service.

Plainview, Neb.

Christ came to give us a justifying righteousness, and He also came to make us holy—not chiefly for the purpose of evidencing here our possession of a justifying righteousness—but for the purpose of forming and fitting us for a blessed eternity.—Chalmers.

Regional Conference on Missions for Cuba

Held at Havana, Cuba, February 26-29, 1916.

By CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

This Conference met in Havana, Cuba, Saturday, February 26th. The steamship bringing delegates from Panama arrived early that morning. The representatives of the Boards having work in Cuba were provided with entertainment as guests of friends in Havana who had offered that kind courtesy. There were twenty-seven of these representatives from the following boards: Presbyterian, U. S. A. (North); Presbyterian, U. S. (South); Methodist South; Protestant Episcopal; Baptist North; Baptist South; Disciples of Christ; Friends; and Missionary Education Movement. There were also five others as visitors. There were twelve delegates from the Cuban Missions to the Panama Congress who were also in attendance at Havana. This gives a total of forty-four in attendance at Havana who had also been at Panama. Beside these, there were forty-two delegates and thirty-four visitors from the various missions in Cuba. Most of these were natives of Cuba. Friends were represented by Charles E. Tebbetts, with his wife and daughter, from the homeland, and Sylvester Jones, Clarence G. McClean, Mrs. Ellen W. Pain and her sister, Miss Martha Woody. All these, except the last two named, had been at Panama.

The members of the Business Committee met in the forenoon and arranged such matters pertaining to the Conference as could not have been attended to previously by the local committee. The session on Saturday afternoon and evening, and the forenoon and afternoon sessions of Monday and Tuesday, were given to the consideration of the six reports of the Commissions appointed out of the Cuban mission forces to report on the subjects: Survey of Field; Evangelism; Education; Literature; Church Life and Self-support; and Co-operation. On the evenings of Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, two public meetings were provided, one for the Spanish-speaking people, addressed by native delegates who reported the Panama Congress; the other for English-speaking people, to be addressed by visiting delegates. Of the latter, on Sunday evening, the address was given by President King, of Oberlin; on Monday, two addresses by Rev. Ed. F. Cook, General Secretary of the Foreign Board of the Methodist Church South, and Charles E. Tebbetts of the Friends Board, and on Tuesday by Bishop Lloyd of the Protestant Episcopal Church, New York. There were also three sermons in English on Sunday morning at three of the Havana Mission churches, by Dr. Barnes of the Baptist Board, Dr. Thompson of the Presbyterian Board and Bishop Lloyd of the Episcopal.

Dr. Charles L. Thompson, Secretary of the Home Board of the Presbyterian Church North, presided at the Conference sessions. Mr. Harry Wade

Hicks, General Secretary of the Missionary Education Movement, was chairman of the Business Committee. Of prominent leaders present from the Home Boards whose names have not already been mentioned were Mr. Marshall C. Allaben, an educational worker under the Women's Board of Home Missions, Presbyterian Church North; Rev. John F. Goucher, D.D., of Baltimore, a leading educator of the Methodist Episcopal North; Miss Mabel Head, of the Foreign Department of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church South; Rev. S. G. Inman, Executive Secretary of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin-America; Mr. Joseph Ernest McAfee, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church North; Rev. Archibald McLean, LL.D., of the Board of Missions of the Disciples Church; Mrs. Catherine S. Westfall, Women's American Baptist Home Mission Society.

The Conference sessions were conducted in the same general manner as those at Panama. On account of the large number of Cuban delegates who did not understand English, all the discussion had to be translated in substance into either English or Spanish as the case might require. A very large part of the discussion was by the Cuban native workers in Spanish.

The atmosphere at the beginning of the Conference was very different from that at Panama. The large majority of those present had had no opportunity to get into the spirit of the movement either by their previous experience or by reading Commission reports or other literature. On account of this lack of touch, the reports of the Cuba Commissions were very meager. Though questionnaires had been sent out, only two or three responses had been received by any one of them, and the reports, therefore, were simply brief statements of such facts as were known to the chairman of the Commission and his own personal ideas of policy. Clarence G. McClean, of our mission at Holguin, was chairman of the Commission on Education, and presented a very good report, considering the failure of response to his questionnaire.

Moreover, a very large portion of the mission work in Cuba is under the care of the Southern Church of the Methodists and Baptists and the Protestant Episcopal, and in each case the ruling church authorities had been largely out of sympathy with co-operation. The prevailing feeling with them had been that, if they kept out of each others' way reasonably well and avoided open controversy, they were doing about all that could be expected. However, the representatives of the Home Board of the Methodist Church South, who had been at Panama, and were also at Havana, were quite strongly for larger co-operation, as was also the present bishop of the Episcopal Church. And the representatives of the other Boards working in Cuba were strongly for co-operation. The session given to the consideration of the report of Commission on Co-operation seemed wonderfully led by the Spirit of God. The chairman of that Commission had been very cool to any attempt at closer co-operation and his opening statement was by no means inspiring along that line. But as the discussion progressed, more and more the feeling of the Conference changed until it seemed as though the Spirit of God was melting hearts and fusing us together into that wonderful atmosphere that had been so marked at Panama. The Conference had, by vote, requested the presiding officer, Dr. Charles L. Thompson, who had been chairman of the Commission on Co-operation and Unity for Panama, to take part in the discussion. He did so after all the other speakers had been heard, and after a few minutes of warm-hearted speaking called on the chairman of the local Commission to close the discussion. In his last words, Dr. Thompson had alluded to Dr. Speer's statement that he thought it probable that there would be no Presbyterian Church at the close of this century, and said for himself he was ready now to have the Presbyterian Church merged into the one united Church of Jesus Christ, if the Methodists and Baptists would join them in it. The chairman of the local Commission, who was standing close to him, grasped his hand as he extended it and closed the discussion in a far different spirit from that in which he had opened it. Moreover, the discussion of the other themes—evangelism, education, literature, and church life and self-support—also emphasized the absolutely vital importance of close co-operation if the work in Cuba should ever attain an efficiency that should make a deep impression on the people at large. The result was that when the following report of the Business Committee was presented it was at once adopted without a dissenting voice:

Whereas, The spirit of Christian fellowship and the discussions of this Regional Conference in Cuba have enriched our spiritual life, and strengthened us for our tasks as we are about to return to our respective fields of labor, and

Whereas, The continuance of the discussions through some simple form of committee organization will accomplish still further good for each group of workers represented in this Conference, and

Whereas, The Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America recently convened in Panama, without dissenting vote continued the existence of the Committee on Co-operation in Latin-America, enlarged its membership to include one from each body sending and maintaining workers in Latin-America, adopted and already has largely provided an ample budget for the support of the work of the committee its first year, elected an executive officer to carry forward its work, and invited each country or group of countries to join in the further study of the Christian work needed to be done in Latin-America by the appointment within their respective territories of advisory or consulting committees of Latin-American and foreign workers.

Resolved, That this Regional Conference in Cuba, convened in connection with the Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America, should take action to secure for the Christian work and workers of Cuba such touch with the Committee on Co-operation as may be desired by the workers in Cuba, and

Resolved, That in order to establish and maintain this voluntary and helpful relationship it approves the organization of a Committee of Conference in Cuba representing unofficially the Christian work and workers in Cuba, this committee to have consultative powers only, except as any plans discussed by the committee shall have been approved by the Mission Boards sending and maintaining workers in Cuba, and except as these Boards request the Committee of Conference in Cuba to assist them in any specific work in their behalf, and

Resolved, That to the end that plans for common work hereby suggested may become effective we recommend to the committee so to be appointed that the following definite lines of study be considered:

1. A thorough survey of the Island that there may be complete occupation of its territory.
2. The matter of literature, in the hope that literature for common use may thus be more economically and efficiently given to all the people.
3. Some plan of common effort in education, to the end that by combination of such effort better schools of primary, secondary, normal and other desirable forms of higher education may be secured.

The COMMITTEE of CONFERENCE in CUBA recommended in the above report was appointed, and as constituted is as strong a committee as could have been selected. Our representatives upon it are Sylvester Jones and Lena Hadley. This committee met on Tuesday evening and organized, inviting several representatives of the Home Boards to meet with them for consultation. They appointed three committees on, 1st, Survey; 2d, Literature; and 3d, Education. They also adopted the following resolutions on the subject of Survey and Occupation:

Resolved—

1. That a Committee on Survey and Occupation be formed in each province.
2. That each committee, not later than June, 1916, assemble such facts as may be available, and locate sources of other information.
3. That funds be secured to insure the salary and expenses of a special agent to serve as secretary of the several provincial committees, and to give his whole time, beginning June or not later than October, 1916, to the conduct of the survey under the direction of the committees.

4. That secretaries of at least three supporting boards visit Cuba together in February of 1917, or at some other convenient date, to sit with the provincial committees and with representatives of these committees in conference upon the whole Island.

5. That in these conferences tentative plans be outlined for the several phases of the evangelical work in Cuba.

6. That the Committee of Conference in Cuba take such steps as may be proper to secure the funds, enlist the workers and effect the organization necessary to carry forward through a series of years the plans found desirable as a result of this survey.

7. That the powers of these committees and conferences be recognized as advisory and that the extent of the co-operation of each denomination, supporting board or other agency, be recognized as conditioned upon the desire and free action of that agency.

They also appointed a small executive committee (Sylvester Jones is a member) and arranged for an early meeting of the executive committee and for a full meeting of the entire committee on the 25th, 26th and 27th of April at some quiet place where they will be free from any other responsibility, to devote the three days to prayerful consideration of all the facts that can be brought before them and to outline a definite program for work.

The Conference proper closed on Tuesday afternoon in a spirit of deep thanksgiving for the conscious presence and leading of the Spirit of God. Dr. Thompson closed with a brief talk out of a full heart, and called for two closing prayers, one in English and one in Spanish.

The feeling of many of the delegates was expressed in words by some of them: "We have seen a miracle here at Havana;" "Only God could have done it."

Effect Upon Friends Work

It is too early yet to forecast the future definitely. But if a program is adopted in accordance with the spirit of Panama, it will mean a great impetus to our work in Cuba and a new responsibility on the Friends Church of America behind it. In some respects, we have been working hitherto without a well defined policy. The extent of the field for which we are responsible was without definite settlement. We had no Spanish periodical to speak for our work and were almost without adequate devotional literature of any kind, and our forces in the field and our support from the home base were on too small a scale to provide what was needed. In education we had good primary schools, but have been altogether at a loss how to provide for secondary education and for adequate training of teachers and other native workers. All these unsettled conditions can only be fully met by a full co-operation of all the mission forces working in Cuba. In that there is hope—yes, more than hope; there is full confidence that with God's help the end can be achieved. And no one who was at Panama or Havana can doubt that God is with this movement and leading it.

But it will mean a larger responsibility on our home churches. There will be far greater efficiency and also economy in the long run if this movement is carried out. But it will require a considerable contribution of funds to provide the well-equipped schools for higher grade work and for the thorough training of teachers and native workers. It is upon these well-trained native workers that we must more and more depend for highest success.

In going into this advanced movement both in Cuba and Mexico, the good name and standing of American Friends will be more conspicuously involved. If we fail to do our proper share, it will be a failure in the face of American Christendom; our standing as a church in the community of churches will depend upon how faithfully we do our part in this work. Our missionaries in Cuba rank with the very best of the workers in the island and they will do their share. We have some fine talent coming on in the splendid young life of our native church. The question is now fully up to Friends in America as to whether our part will be done. Here is an opportunity for our strong business men to invest in large sums for the Kingdom of God. This movement removes absolutely all doubt as to the stability and permanent value of the investment. Behind it will be the best business ability and fine, expert experience of all the strong denominations of America. Business men of means will know that their investment will be used with utmost skill. Such doubts as may have existed as to the ability and skill of our own Board and management will no longer find excuse. Back of this enterprise are names whose standing in the business world as men of highest honor and business ability will be a guaranty of faithful and skilful administration such as can be given by no single denomination alone. Large givers of other denominations whose hearts God has opened to make large investments for bringing in the Kingdom of God look upon this movement with deepest gratification, because they see in it the highest exemplification of sound business experience applied to Christian work in a worthy manner. God grant our own givers, whether in large sums or small, may measure up to Christian standards of stewardship.

But there must be an investment of prayer as well as of finances. And this is vastly more important. How many of us are really making a regular, definite, full-hearted investment of prayer for the Kingdom of God? Is there not a spiritual dearth in many of our meetings and many of our individual lives because of failure in our prayer life to measure up to God's purposes of grace for this world in which he has placed us? If the spirit of Panama can only reach our home constituency, it will mean a great future of the Church in America and in the world. God grant it may so be.

OUR OPPORTUNITY

By BERNICE E. HAWKINS

It is given to all in that wonderful period of aspiration broadly characterized as youth to see visions and dream dreams, for as the years pass one comes to realize very clearly that one cannot shape his environment—it is for each of us to live well and true within his own sphere, filling out in his petty circumstances the best possible interpretation of the Master's life in one's own personality.

The world needs this age of vision to make up its fulness, to stir those who have grown weary with long striving and to shake the dust from the eyes of those who are living for power alone, forgetful of that day when nothing but character will avail. The world needs youth with its vision to repaint for the old their boyhood ambitions, proving that each generation builds beyond the preceding one.

We know that vision is necessary for the advancement of the world and since this splendid vision time is more potent in youth as opposed to old age, young life bears a responsibility for giving the world its uplift. To those of us who have Friendly ancestry who are the direct recipients of that phase of "immortality that is with us," inherited through generations of personal touch with the spirit of things unseen, there is a far greater responsibility to look through present day mundane affairs and with a faith that the hand of clay can definitely shape the world's life, strive to translate in present day terms the Master's message to meet present day needs.

In the days when negro slavery was an accepted social custom, it was an innovation to believe that the system was wrong. If no one had dreamed of a day when all, "irrespective of race, color or previous conditions of servitude," would be free, that day would never have arrived. Today the need is for men who are confident that war can be abolished, that industrial injustice, political corruption and unhealthy social customs can be stopped and that the brotherhood of man is not merely an ideal to be talked of, but a working basis in industrial and social life.

The world is far from being Christianized. There is a wide field of unexplored territory where each of us may make real a vision beautiful.

May God help us to put our talents to use in the best possible way for the building of a structure worthy of the foundations our fathers have laid.

CORRESPONDENCE

Siloam Springs, Arkansas,
April 22, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

As I was reading the "Daily Meditations" in The Christian Herald this morning, I found a quotation from the Book of Samuel, David fleeing from his rebel son, who was trying to make war. When David was told that his counselor and trusty friend was with the enemy, David said, 'O'Lord, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithopel into foolishness," and immediately my prayer was that the Lord might turn the counsel of the munition makers and advocates of war into foolishness also.

On the 26th of April I will be 82 years old and my greatest desire is to work and speak for Christ's kingdom to rule and reign in every heart. My parents were from Germany, and I have heard them tell what they and others there suffered for standing firm for peace and doing the will of God. I am glad Friends and other Christians, who are young and strong, are working for our Redeemer's kingdom.

MRS. E. S. TIMBERLAKE.

SIXTIETH MARRIAGE ANNIVERSARY.

Very many of our readers will be deeply interested in the following, taken from the Whittier (Calif.) News of April 24.

"Those whom the gods love die young"—no matter how old they may be; nature blesses them with length of days, and fortune smiles upon their marital affections.

Such has been the happy lot of Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Douglas who, yesterday, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary with a family dinner at their home on South Painter avenue, and an informal reception during the afternoon, their friends calling to wish them continued length of days and happiness.

The Friends church claims Mr. Douglas as one of her best loved patriarchs and yesterday showered appreciation on this venerable minister and his faithful wife by presenting them with substantial gifts. Mrs. Douglas has been a semi-invalid for the past few years, but yesterday both she and her husband attended the morning service at the Friends church, and at the close of the beautiful Easter services they were introduced to the assembly by the pastor, Henry Edwin McGrew, who presented them with sealed envelopes, in which were loving and substantial greetings from the Friends in Pasadena and Whittier.

Mr. Douglas spoke to the large congregation, first of Easter Day, the resurrection of Jesus, and its place in the scheme of Christianity, then of his bride and the marriage so long ago, held under the old-fashioned Quaker plan, at Grassy Run, Ohio, the wedding ceremony being performed when the parties united before a church congregation.

Mr. Douglas stated that thirty-nine names were signed to their marriage certificate, and of that number only seven are living. These are scattered among seven states.

Mr. Douglas is eighty-three years and his wife a year older. Seven children were born to them, only two of whom are living, John Henry Douglas, Jr., and Miss Mellie Douglas, both of Whittier. A delightful feature of the day was the presence of an aged brother, Mr. Robert Douglas, of Versailles, Ohio.

Today and during the past week more than a hundred letters have been received by this venerable couple from friends all over America, among them five poems in celebration of their anniversary occasion.

Mr. Douglas is perhaps the best and most widely known Quaker minister living. He has been a minister for more than sixty years, and for nearly a half century of that time was very active. He was the pioneer evangelist among Quakers in America and began his evangelism at a time when Quakerism was extremely conservative along these as well as other lines. He has lived to see his methods approved by the church in full, and in many cases its evangelism is more aggressive and radical than that practiced and advocated by him.

For many years Mrs. Douglas assisted her husband in his evangelistic labors, which led them to almost every Friends' meeting in the United States, Canada, England and Ireland.

The Douglasses have lived in Whittier for four years, residing in Pasadena for some years prior. For years this aged minister has been in feeble health but has attended church occasionally, especially during the week of the California Yearly Meeting, which is held here each June.

"The extent to which we have put fear under our feet is a good measure of manhood," writes Carlyle. It is certainly a good measure of Christian manhood.—W. L. Watkins.

FROM SPICELAND QUARTERLY MEETING.

April 30th was set apart as Missionary Day at Shirley, Ind. Those visiting found a live Bible School with a young man, Vernus Kitterman, superintendent, 87 present, and much interest manifest. Prof. Edwin Morrison, of Earlham College, delivered a very impressive message at the morning meeting.

At 1:30 p. m., a conference began. The congregation sang "Unsearchable Riches;" devotional exercises conducted by O. H. Beeson, of Shirley; song, "Some One Must Tell the Story;" a short talk by the chairman, N. B. Shaffer; a recitation by Urpha Kitterman, "Send the Gospel Faster." Ancil E. Ratliff, of Fairmount, gave an interesting talk on "The Financial Side of Missions." He said, "the greatest need in rural meetings is a better grade of finance." Some one has said there will be more done in the next ten years than at any time yet. Some 500 of our boys and girls from our colleges are ready, but cannot go for lack of means. If you haven't made a Community Canvass, you are up to your ears in a rut. He told of the canvass made in his own neighborhood; 10 busy men and women went one afternoon to every home in the neighborhood. The consequence was they had plenty of money to pay expenses, to buy stoves and coal, too. He also said giving is a religious function as well as prayer or song.

We then listened to a splendid recitation by Lucy Manlove, entitled "The Great Reward." Prof. Morrison, of Earlham College, then gave an interesting talk, touching on many phases of the work. He said the Philippines do not need war; they need the school teacher and the missionary. Since Indiana Yearly Meeting only give $1.00 per member, we ought to give more and make this year the best in our work.

Earl Folger, of Shirley, sang a beautiful solo, "I'll Say Amen to Jesus." We were dismissed by Edward Hartley, of Kennard.

JULIA S. NEWBY.

DESECDANTS OF WM. PENN.

We have received a most interesting letter from George D. Hoyland, of Vancouver, British Columbia, written under date of April 27, calling attention to the fact that some lineal descendants of William Penn are now living in the interior of British Columbia. There is enclosed an extract from a letter received by Mr. Hoyland from Mrs. Lanyon (nee Hilda Mary Penn). The Lanyons are members of the Church of England, though evidently very much interested in their connection with the founder of Pennsylvania. The extract of the letter is as follows:

Edgewood, B. C., April 5, 1916.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of the 30th to hand. I was somewhat astonished, as well as pleased, as I had no idea anyone knew of our connection with William Penn, the Quaker. Doubtless it was someone who had heard we had named our youngest son William Penn, and why we did so.

I am afraid I have nothing of any real interest to tell you about ourselves, except that I remember that my father, though not a Quaker, was very proud of his connection, and bore the name of William Penn himself. My grandfather was for some years a Congregational minister in the South of England, but every year he received a special invitation to attend the Memorial Service (or something like that), held by the Friends at Penn's birthplace—as they all acknowledged his direct descent from the well-known Quaker. My grandfather's name was Thomas Fortin Penn, but I believe in all the families back there, there has always been one named William Penn.

My own father, who was a great student, died a few years ago, and now I have a brother by the name of William Penn living in New York. As neither of my two brothers have any family, we have called our youngest boy William Penn in order to keep up the name. Our little Penn will be two years old next June 24th. We call him "Penn," preferring it to William. It is our great hope that he may copy the noble example of his fore-father.

BENEFITTED BY WILL.

By the terms of the will of the late Wilson Harlan, of Wilmington, O., which was recently probated in that County, the Friends Church at Wilmington and Wilmington College will some day be greatly benefitted. At his death, a few weeks ago, at an advanced age, Mr. Harlan left a splendid farm of 191 acres, lying near Hickoryville, O., and also considerable personal property. Mr. Harlan's wife died some years ago, and his nearest relatives are four nieces, who are given the proceeds of the farm during their lifetime.

At the death of all of these nieces, it is directed that all of the real estate shall be sold and the proceeds designated as the Wilson and Sarah F. Harlan fund, the same to be paid over by the executor, one half to the trustees of the Friends Church at Wilmington, the income of which is to be used by the said trustees for the support of the ministry, and the other one half to the trustees of Wilmington College, to be used in aiding in the education of poor and worthy young men and women. The estate is estimated to be worth about $35,000 at the present time, but of course, it is uncertain what the land will sell for at the time specified in the will.

STATEMENT BY AMBASSADOR MORGENTHAU, MARCH 10, 1916.

"A residence of over two years in Turkey has given me the best possible opportunity to see the work of the American missionaries and to know the workers intimately.

"Without hesitation I declare my high opinion of their keen insight into the real needs of the people of Turkey. The missionaries have the right idea. They go straight to the foundations and provide those intellectual, physical, moral and religious benefits upon which alone any true civilization can be built. The missionaries are the devoted friends of the people of Turkey and they are my friends. They are brave, intelligent and unselfish men and women. I have come to respect all and love many of them.

As an American citizen I have been proud of them. As an American Ambassador to Turkey I have been delighted to help them."

THE WORLD ALLIANCE FOR PROMOTING INTERNATIONAL FRIENDSHIP THROUGH THE CHURCHES.

By Allen D. Hole.

The above title is the name of an organization which has been in process of formation for more than a year and one-half. The beginning of the movement dates from the summer of 1914 when there was called by the Church Peace Union, a conference of representatives of the churches of Europe and America to meet at Constance. It will be remembered, however, that the meeting at Constance was interrupted by the beginning of the European war, but those who were present were fully agreed that a world alliance of the various Christian denominations should be perfected. At an adjourned meeting in London it was further agreed that a continuation committee should be appointed to carry forward the work of organization in the various countries of Europe and America represented at that first conference. The total number constituting the continuation committee appointed in London was about sixty. Of these, seventeen were representatives of the churches of America and this American division of the general continuation committee has had charge of the work of organization in America since that time.

In view of the fact that much work should be accomplished in an international way through the churches, even though a state of war exists between a number of the countries represented, the work of organization has gone on and the American members of the continuation committee felt that the perfecting of the organization in America should not be delayed longer than the present spring. They therefore in consultation with the commission on Peace and Arbitration of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, selected a list of representatives of not only the various denominations represented in the Federal Council, but other denominations as well making a total of about two hundred and fifty persons thus chosen who were asked to meet together at Garden City, Long Island, April 25th to 27th, to consider the desirability of forming the American branch or as it is officially called, the American Council of such a World Alliance.

A large proportion of the number indicated above accepted the invitation to be present and after mature consideration it was unanimously agreed that the American Council should be formed and a permanent organization was therefore effected and plans for future work were in a general way agreed upon.

The scope of the discussion and to a certain extent, the emphasis, given in the various sessions of the conference are indicated by the following general themes which were respectively the themes for each of the five sessions which were held, namely:

"The Church and the New Internationalism."

"The World Task of the Church: a practical program."

"The Church and the Oriental Problem."

"The Spirit of Jesus in International Relationships."

In the various discussions the emphasis upon the power of unselfish love as a force in the world was especially noteworthy as indeed it might be expected to be in a group of representatives of Christian churches. A few sentences from an address by John R. Mott will indicate the way in which many of the speakers exalted the Christian principle of maintaining peace and more than that, of accomplishing positive results for good in the world. In substance Mr. Mott said that after this great war is over there will be one of the greatest opportunities which the world has ever seen to re-make civilization. To use his exact words, "all things may become new if the church is seized with the spirit of self-sacrifice," and his emphasis was on the word "may." He further made it very clear that all the long list of constructive suggestions which have been made for the reorganization of the world when the war is closed must be supplemented by an appeal to conscience; must bring into play the motives which come from the power of the Spirit; that if the new order which is being proposed is to succeed any better than the old has succeeded, there must be brought to bear in the formation and in the carrying out of the new plans, the superhuman power of pure religion. To use his phrase again, we must have "not only external arrangements which are new, but internal changes wrought by the living Christ."

It, of course, is impossible to give a complete report even in outline of the discussions of the various phases of the questions which were taken up at the various sessions. It is, perhaps, enough to say that the conference at Garden City has in it the possibilities of becoming one of the great epoch-making events in this most critical time in the history of the world.

It is of interest to all Friends to note that the churches of America generally seem now to be convinced that the work which should be done to promote the cause of peace can be accomplished effectively only when the church is definitely organized for the propagation of this particular phase of the gospel; that it is not enough to say that the essence of the message of the gospel is peace, but that it is essential that certain individuals of each of the church organizations be set apart and entrusted in a particular way with the responsibility of seeing that the message which the church has in regard to peace is given to the world in such a way as to make it operative in our present complex civilization.

The organization of the World Alliance is itself an evidence of this conviction that definite organizations for this specific purpose are necessary. Furthermore, the plan for the future work of the Alliance includes in a very definite way the making of an appeal to each of the denominations represented for the establishment of boards or committees which shall be responsible for this specific work among the membership of the denominations in question, and not only that these general supervising boards should be appointed, but that committees to be known as peace-maker's committees should be formed in each local congregation of each of the churches represented. The idea was definitely expressed that these should be boards or committees which would be responsible for the peace work, for its promotion, for its plans, but it was also strongly recommended that in carrying out the programs of publicity that existing organizations such as the Sunday school for example, should be used.

A proposition embodying the above suggested plan of work has already been forwarded to each of the denominations represented, and it is expected that the request for the formation of these Peace Committees will as soon as possible reach every organized church in the United States. Friends may congratulate themselves that they are so well organized on this very plan as they are. The Peace Board of the Five Years Meeting, the Peace Committees of the various Yearly Meetings, and in many places of subordinate meetings as well, are evidences that Friends generally have recognized that unless the peace work is made prominent by separate organizations it cannot be hoped that the message which the church has in regard to peace will be effectively propagated. Friends, however, will recognize the fact that much remains to be done within their own borders to make the organization of the church for peace as complete as it should be.

The membership of the Garden City Conference included the following Friends of the different branches, although not all of those here named were able to be present, namely:

James Wood, Daniel Smiley and Allen D. Hole from the Five Years Meeting; from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, Isaac Sharpless and William C. Allen; Hicksite Friends, William I. Hull, Benjamin F. Battin.

Although not a member of the conference, Erroll D. Peckham, pastor of Friends' Church in Brooklyn, was present for a part of the time.

Friends generally are asked to keep in mind the suggestions made above in regard to the thorough work of all the churches for international brotherhood so that when the definite request comes through the regular channels of our own denomination there may be a hearty and ready response.

ARMENIAN SUNDAY.

Officers of the World's Sunday School association, the International Sunday School Association and the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief have issued a call for the observance of May 28th as Armenian Day in the Churches and Sunday Schools of America. It is pointed out that there are tens of thousands of Armenian and Syrian children, whose homes are in Bible lands, who are actually suffering for shelter and clothes and food. It is stated that ten cents will keep a boy or girl alive for a week, and it is hoped that all Sunday Schools will average in their gifts at least ten cents for each member. All money should be sent to Charles R. Crane, Treasurer, American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, 70 Fifth Ave., New York City. Do not give the money to any agents.

AT GLENS FALLS, N. Y.

The historic old Meeting at Glens Falls, at its last Monthly Meeting, showed such a summary of successful work accomplished, that it is reported to these columns, that the many old friends of the Meeting may know how it fares with us in these days.

The fifth year of Albert G. Shepard as pastor is just drawing to a close, and the meeting cordially renewed the relation for another year, increasing the salary paid to $1,000 per annum, an increase of $200 from the amount paid at the beginning of the pastorate. The year past the parsonage has been repainted at a cost of $135, new hymnals of a very high order, one of the Century Company's best publications, have been installed at a cost of $70. The meeting house has been wired for electric lighting, at a cost of $130, and last year part of the wiring was done at a cost of about $70, or $200 all told. In addition $365.52 was paid out for benevolences, which with the quota of $106.67, totaled $472.19. All the other departments of the work have been well kept up, and all bills are paid.

On distinctly spiritual lines the Meeting is equally prosperous. There have been 61 additions to the membership, of whom 31 were by request, and of these 17 were transfers from associate to active membership. The average attendance at the First Day morning worship is 85, which is nearly 100 per cent more than it was in 1912, the average at that time being 48. The Bible School has a membership of 172 with an average attendance of 87, compared with an enrollment of 108 and an attendance of 48 four years ago, an increase here also of nearly 100 per cent. Forty-four of the 61 increase to the membership this year came from the Bible School. Four years ago we had no Christian Endeavor, and now there is a bright and growing Society with twenty active and five associate members, holding their meetings all the year, with a present average attendance of 34.

Best of all, the whole Meeting is in a happy and optimistic mood. The Spirit of the Lord is felt pulsing all through the organized life of the Meeting. We realize that we have a mission, and, in order to better equip ourselves for the fulfillment of that mission, arrangements have been completed between the Glens Falls Monthly Meeting and the Meeting at Newmarket, Ontario, for the visitation of Alfred Young, the pastor at Yonge street, to Glens Falls, in a series of meetings beginning November next, hoping thereby to weld the church into a body able to meet still more successfully the needs of the community to which we are called to minister in the name of Christ.

FRIENDS MISSIONARY RALLY.

In connection with the National Missionary Congress held at Washington, D. C. recently, Saturday afternoon, April 29, was devoted to denominational rallies. The Friends' rally was held in the Friends meeting house at 13 and Irving Streets, N. W., and was a most satisfactory occasion. Visiting Friends to the number of nearly twenty were present as were a number of the local congregation.

Charles E. Tebbetts was in charge of the exercises and gave a strong address on the present day mission situation. A number of others participated in a practical discussion of the needs and obligations of Friends in mission work.

At 5:30 o'clock the entire company, which had been augmented by the presence of additional members of the Washington meeting, sat down to well filled tables in the Sabbath School room, a bountiful supper having been furnished by the Friends of Washington. The speaking continued after supper and Edgar R. Hole, Walter Williams and Edward Kelsey from the mission field and Willis Beede, a student volunteer from California, were heard along with a number of others. It was a most enjoyable occasion. Steps were taken to get a definite and comprehensive mission plan before Friends in the near future.

The good man is not alone. Touch him and you touch God. Help him, and your help is taken as if it were rendered to God himself. This may give us an idea of the sublime life to which we are called—"we live and move and have our being" in God; we are temples; our life is an expression of divine influence. In our voice there is an undertone of divinity.—Joseph Parker.

THE MISSIONARY COMMITTEE.

In Plainview, Nebraska, missionary interest is growing. A letter from Estella Foxworthy tells hows this has come about.

"A Monthly Meeting Missionary Committee, together with the Missionary Superintendent of the Bible School, plan to have a short program sometime during the Bible School hour the first Sunday in each month. The collection taken at that time is given half for Church Extension work and half for Foreign Missions.

Quite an interest has been taken in the Missionary Library. Occasionally people are publicly urged to read these books. Missionary sermons are preached by the pastors at different times, and whenever it is possible addresses are given by return Missionaries. Plans are made to have suitable leaders for the Missionary Meetings of the Y. P. S. C. E.

The W. F. M. S. meets regularly for study the first Wednesday afternoon of each month, using as a text book "The King's Highway." The treasurer of our W. F. M. S. has a class of boys in the Bible School who are giving weekly to the support of Foreign Missions.

The Budget Plan of finances is used in our meeting and the Every-Member Canvass is made once a year when people are urged to pledge weekly the amount they wish to give to the support of the Church and her benevolences. Foreign Missions are included in one item of the benevolences."

STEREOPTICON LECTURE ON AFRICA.

A set of sixty lantern slides, more than half of them colored, is now being prepared illustrating the work of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission. The slides, with a typewritten lecture accompanying them, will be ready by June 15th. The lecture and slides may be secured by any meeting or study class or missionary society or young people's organization for an evening exhibition for a nominal rental of one dollar in addition to express charges to and from Richmond. This beautiful set of slides ought to be in constant use as soon as they are ready. Dates for those wishing to have this illustrated lecture should be made as long as possible in advance of the time when it will be wanted. Reservations may be made by writing to the Board of Missions at the address appearing at the top of this page. The lecture can be readily given by any one who will spend a few hours studying the type-written copy.

FACTS ABOUT MEXICO.

In some of the states of Mexico, there is one missionary to each 12,000 people, while in others there is not one to more than 1,000,000.

In fourteen of the states, having a total population of over 5,000,000 or one-third of the entire population of the country, there is no resident missionary. Only two of the cities along the entire western coast have any missionaries. Large nations of Indians are similarly neglected, while the city of Monterey has no less than six separate missions, Guadalajara has five and Chihuahua four.

Of the thirty states, fifteen have thirty-nine mission high schools, while the remaining fifteen have none. Three different denominations have each been maintaining a girls' school in the single city of Satallo with only 35,000 inhabitants. In the entire country, there are about twelve times as many schools for girls as for boys.

Theological training for native ministers has been carried on by eight separate agencies, while the total number of these students has been less than fifty.

Commenting on these and other facts, the chairman of one of the committees on co-operation in Mexico says:

"From such data, three clear judgments emerge. The old order, or absence of it, is the product of unrelated plans and efforts. The same agencies beginning over again would consult and plan together in the interests of the whole task. The present time of suspended and interrupted operations presents better opportunity to hew out a common policy than can be approximated again; unless seized now, there is every reason to expect the perpetuation of financial waste, confusion and loss of power.

"The reconstruction of Mexico is at a stage where, barring the rupture of a national relation with the United States, nearly all the Missions are able to resume activities in force. So much more can be done now than subsequently, to establish wisely the permanent lines along which the labors for Mexico's evangelization will proceed, that it is difficult to overstate the urgency of reaching the fullest possible understandings and adjustments among the various Boards and Missions concerned in the weeks and months immediately ahead.

Our own American Friends Board has put itself on record as heartily favoring those adjustments which will effect proper distribution of missionary forces in Mexico. It has further agreed to assume its full share in the reconstructed plan of work. To do this will involve a larger expenditure in Mexico than Friends have ever made in that country. But with the assurance that the human and material resources thus invested in Mexico will bring the largest possible returns, the Board believes that the Society of Friends in America will be content with nothing less than our full share and will more willingly support a large, courageous enterprise than a timid and over-cautious one.

TEMPERANCE IN CUBA.

On Sabbath evening, March 26th, the service in the Friends Church, Banos, Cuba, was given over to the Temperance Committee of our Christian Endeavor Society. They presented a carefully prepared program of thirteen numbers.

The chairman, Miss Josefa Sanchez, had been at work for some weeks preparing it. The first difficulty to be overcome lay in finding suitable material that had not been used too many times. She translated a dialogue from English showing the power of example. Temperance hymns, with a few recitations, two readings, and an object lesson given by Raymond S. Holding, gave a varied and very interesting program. The drilling of the children was no light task. In this, the chairman was aided by Miss Luisa Guijarro.

The object lesson gave the itinerary of the drunkards who always travel on a broad gauge road, starting out early in the afternoon from the station of Soft Drinks, then to stronger drinks, leading on to the station of Fights and Brawls, on and on until completely overcome by drink, finally reaching the station of Delirium Tremens and Death late in the night or early in the morning. The results of the entertainment certainly prove that a sure way to interest the parents and secure their attendance is through the children, for the church was well filled. All standing space was occupied and the little porch at the entrance of the church full before the hour indicated on our printed programs, some 500 of which had been distributed. There were probably from 250 to 300 persons present. All gave close attention.

WHITTIER FELLOWSHIP CONFERENCE.

Philadelphia,
10th Fifth Month, 1916.

Dear Friend:

The Whittier Fellowship Committee, associating all shades of thought among Friends, plans to hold a Spring Conference in Coulter Street Meeting House, Germantown, Philadelphia, on the afternoon and evening of Third day, the twenty-third of Fifth month. The subject of this conference will be the "State of the Society," which we think should be discussed frankly at this time. The intimate experience of our fellowship during the past five years has proved to us the unnecessary existence of misunderstandings and trivialities which can and must be cleared away if we are to go forward in the Truth to meet the problems which world wide events are bringing closer to each individual.

It is expected to open the afternoon session at five o'clock precisely with the subject of "Our Divided Quakerism" as viewed by an Orthodox, Hicksite and Pastoral Friend. These will be discussed by Dr. Henry J. Cadbury, Edith M. Winder and Leroy Jones. Supper may be procured in the building and an opportunity for greetings enjoyed at 6:30.

The evening session will open at 7:30 o'clock on the subject of "Cooperation and Fellowship." Dr. Rufus M. Jones will speak on the "History of Quaker Ingrowing," Dr. Jesse H. Holmes on "Present Day Opportunities" and Dr. William Byron Forbush on "As an Outsider Sees Us."

This is an opportunity to clear away much rubbish, as befits the season, and to plan a fruitful vintage from the seed. Come and bring thy friends. If thee will sup with us please send a postal card at once so as to make sure of entertainment. A contribution of 50 cents for supper will be expected.

On behalf of the Committee,
CAROLENA M. WOOD, presiding.
HORACE MATHER LIPPINCOTT,
Secretary.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Important action that shows the temper of the House on the regular army question was taken today, and the action has in it much to encourage those who want our country to continue its policy of moderation and dependence upon good will, fair dealing and the spirit of justice in international relations. The men on the Conference Committee that has been given the very serious task of formulating a compromise bill from the army measures passed by the two Houses, found themselves unable to agree upon several important features of the bill, notably the sections providing for 250,000 men in the regular army and the establishment of a large body of volunteer reserves. It was decided by the House Conferees, headed by Congressman Hay, of Virginia, one of the staunchest opponents of militarism in Congress, to go back to the House for instructions.

As a consequence this entire day was spent by the House in consideration of these features of the army reorganization bill, so-called.

The result of the vote—and a large majority of the members were in their seats—was an overwhelming defeat for the big army advocates. The House went on record strongly against both a standing army of 250,000 men and a volunteer reserve, another name for the continental army scheme of Former Secretary of War Garrison. Both of these propositions had been placed in the bill through amendments made by the Senate. There is no doubt whatever that the vote on the question as to size of the regular army amounts to an announcement to the country and to other nations that the United States is not going in for an enormous military system on land, at least. The vote on the other question was largely influenced by the unwillingness of many Congressmen to take action which it was feared might work injury to the National Guard.

The question of the size of the army still remains unsettled. It is now referred back to the Conference Committee. But there is at least the assurance that whatever compromise number is decided upon by the conferees will have to be nearer the number provided in the Hay bill, 140,000, than the number stipulated in the Chamberlain bill, 250,000. Some of the Congressmen, seen after the votes had been taken, felt sure that those who voted for the Hay bill would have to accept a compromise. They expressed the opinion that it would be much better for the Senate to be reasonable in its demands than to stand out for the comparatively extravagant provisions of the Chamberlain bill. If this stand were to be taken by the Senate, one Congressman said, there would probably be an unfortunate deadlock in the Conference Committee, and there would certainly be determined opposition on the floor of the House.

In the meantime the Naval Affairs Committee is hard at work preparing a bill, which, it is predicted by men at the Capitol, will startle the people of the country by the size of its program and the amount of money involved. A member of the Committee stated today that this bill would probably be reported to Congress at the end of the present week.

A NEW PLAN.

The Cleveland Bible Institute was organized more than twenty years ago for the express purpose of helping young people to prepare themselves for more efficient service, for which they had already been set apart by the Holy Spirit.

In the past many applications have come each year from those desiring work which would assist in meeting expenses. It is for the benefit of these that the schedule has been arranged so that all classes come in the morning, leaving the afternoons open for outside work. Opportunities for work in a city like Cleveland are numerous, and while the Institute cannot guarantee employment, it is practically certain that any ambitious young man or woman, who is not afraid of hard work, can meet in this way a large part of their expenses.

This announcement is being made early so that ample opportunity may be given for arrangements for next year. If you are interested in a school of this nature it will be to your advantage to investigate this at once. It might not be out of place to add that a large number of students are already working their way, but we feel that the new plan will give much greater opportunity in this direction.

THE IOWA PAGE

BIBLE SCHOOL NOTES.

Our Field Secretary has just completed a trip through Ackworth Quarter, at which time special Conferences were held in all the schools of the Quarter. The Secretary reports that good work is being done and that the work is very encouraging on the whole.

Middle River—The School here was visited on Easter Sunday. There was an attendance that day of 80—the average attendance for the year is quite high. One of the very encouraging features of the work here is the large number of children and young people in the School and community. Few places have been visited where there are more. The School is very well graded and the interest of the pupils in the classes is especially good.

Indianola—A special Conference was held on Sabbath afternoon, April 23, at the home of the Superintendent, J. O. Eno. The various phases of Bible School work were taken up with especial emphasis upon Teacher Training and the Graded Lessons. The need of trained teachers was discussed, especially in the light of the present movement toward religious education in our Bible Schools and the new demands now being made upon the church and Bible School. There was a strong sentiment expressed by those present in the conference in favor of organizing at once a special Teacher Training Class among the young people, to meet during regular Bible School hour, in order to prepare for the future efficiency of the school.

Another result of the conference was that steps were taken towards beginning a Worker's Library for the school. The school at Indianola had an enrollment during 1915 of 123. They have a Cradle Roll Department of 20 and a Home Department of 56. Splendid work is being done by the school.

Ackworth—A splendid conference was held at the home of the Superintendent on Monday evening, April 24, with practically every officer and teacher present. This school has eight regular classes and an average attendance of 91. Special mention should be made of the work being done by the Superintendent of the Cradle Roll Department. This department now has an enrollment of 35 and was recently awarded a special banner as having the largest report of any school in Hamilton County. This school lacks only a few points of reaching the requirements of a standard school and is working definitely to complete the standard.

Motor—This school now has an average attendance of about 45, with six regular classes enrolled. Quite a representative number of workers attended the conference when various matters concerning the opportunities of the Bible School, together with the need of modern, efficient methods of work were discussed.

Smyrna—A very helpful conference was held here in connection with the regular mid-week prayer meeting. Organized Class Work, the Graded Lessons, and Missionary Instruction in the Bible School were especially discussed. This School has a Cradle Roll Department of 18 members. Special encouragement was given to their work and also to the matter of organizing a Home Department. This School is doing very good work and has a great field of service all around it. One of the special opportunities just now is to organize a Young Married Peoples' Class. The matter is being definitely considered.

PENN COLLEGE.

There will be a few changes in the faculty at Penn College for the coming year. Mention has already been made of the coming of C. E. Cosand, formerly Professor of Literature in Friends University; also of the fact that Mrs. Anna M. T. Kelsey will serve as Dean of Women. Alma G. Madden, of Georgetown, Illinois, has been employed in the Department of Expression, and to have charge of the Physical Education for Women. Miss Madden is a graduate of Earlham College and of the Marden School of Expression. She has had considerable experience both as a reader and instructor and comes to her position splendidly prepared.

One of the most difficult positions to fill on the college faculty is that of Athletic Director. There are so many requirements that it is almost impossible to find all the qualities possessed by one person. The management of Penn College deem themselves much more than ordinarily fortunate in finding a man this year who combines these qualifications more nearly than it is usual to find. Mr. Vergil H. Guthrie, of Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota, has been secured. Mr. Guthrie is an all-round athlete, a student of excellent capacity, and possesses talents in other directions—being a splendid musician and a public speaker of some merit. Mr. Guthrie is a strong Christian young man and is free from objectionable habits that so often mar the usefulness of men serving in this capacity.

C. E. DEPARTMENT.

We are pleased to note that our president, Clyde Coffin, has been elected president of the Tenth District C. E.

Des Moines, C. E., through the Pastoral Committee, sent Easter cards to the prisoners at the state prisons.

On April 30, Inez Walthall, a missionary from Alaska, told the Oskaloosa C. E. of her work among the Eskimos. She had a number of pictures which added reality to the scenes described.

The Executive Committee is endeavoring to make the Yearly Meeting of special interest to young people this year. Special features are being arranged for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of that week. We hope to have Miss McPherrin, State Secretary of C. E., with us to give talks on Endeavor methods. We are also planning classes in Missions and Quaker Study. For the children, too, we are planning an hour every day. With all our work we shall need recreation, so socials will be arranged to provide this. Of course we shall have our annual picnic. We are planning to have stunts from each Quarterly Meeting, so it will be necessary for each Quarter to send a delegation large enough to represent it well.

Further information concerning our plans will be given from time to time. Begin now to make your arrangements to come. We want YOU sure on those special days.

Keep Cedar Lake in mind when planning your summer vacation.

Don't forget we should like information as to what your society is doing. Send it now!

FIELD NOTES.

Oskaloosa—Alvin Hoskins of Richland, had charge of the morning service on May 7. In the evening he gave an interesting stereopticon lecture on Jamaica. Monday evening he gave a lecture on Peace. This was illustrated by over a hundred slides. We greatly appreciate having Mr. Hoskins with us.

Die when we may, I want it said of me by those who knew me best, that I always plucked a thistle, and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow.—Abraham Lincoln.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR HELPS.

Prayer Meeting Committee.

1. Break the monotony by arranging for some original papers on subjects of interest.
2. Recitation or debates will also add variety to meetings.
3. The meeting can take the form of a Study Class. Some night let the leader assign certain pages of a text to a half dozen people. He will question these people, disagree and discuss until others will speak who have not previously arranged to do so.
4. Always keep the spiritual side high.

Social Committee.

1. Meet people at meeting with a hearty welcome.
2. Arrange social gatherings. One a month is not too many.
3. For new catchy games, get up a contest giving a prize for the best game suggested. The pastor, Christian Endeavor President and the chairman of the committee could be the judging committee.

The following suggestions came from D. H. Lewis, of Montgomery Street Meeting, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

"Each Consecration Meeting evening, we serve a light lunch at the church. At this time all committees get together and plan their work for that month. Also all the leaders meet with the Prayer Meeting Committee and plan their meetings together as that one may help the other and the services have a general purpose. It has both increased our attendance and efficiency.

"We recently held a 'College Social.' The room was decorated with pennants, rugs, etc. As the people came in they purchased a scholarship to one of six Friends Colleges. They were given a pennant for that school and they passed in to mingle and seek out their college mates. Each group was given a 'yell' for that school and they were instructed to appoint a yell leader and an athletic manager. The events of the track meet which followed were these:

1. Twenty-foot dash. (hop 20 feet with glass of water without spilling it.)
2. Standing broad grin. (Measure each contestant's grin with tape.)
3. Feminine discus throw. (Paper bag inflated with hot air and thrown from a given mark.)

4. Male hobble hurdle. (Hop length of room with feet tied together, using some form of low hurdle.)

5. Stunt race. (1st, drink glass of water; 2nd, take bite from suspended doughnut; 3rd, thread needle; 4th, string ten grains of popcorn.)

6. Obstacle race. (Cap and coat turned inside out and sleeves tied, contestants come to finish with cap and coat on properly.)

A cup was given to the winning group, and is now in the Christian Endeavor room. After the track meet, all visited 'Bakers' (the fellow who had the stand in the corner of the room) and bought refreshments.

NOTICE!

SOME SUGGESTIONS.

The following letter has been sent out by the young Friends organization of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting to Monthly Meeting in Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. It is so rich in suggestion, we are passing it on to others.

"I. Will thee secure from the recorder of thy Monthly Meeting a list of all the members between the ages of 15 and 35, together with their addresses and the year of their birth, and send the same to Eleanor Stokes, Moorestown, N. J.

II. Will thee endeavor to secure a delegate from thy Monthly Meeting to the Young Friends General Conference to be held Eighth month, 4-13, 1916, at Cedar Lake, Ind. (formerly held at Winona Lake.) We suggest three ways of securing delegates.

1. Ask the Monthly Meeting to appoint and to pay the expenses of the delegate. It is often well to ask for this even when there is little hope of favorable action on the part of the Monthly Meeting. Thee or some other young Friend should introduce the opportunity of a definite decision.

2. Decide on a good representative from your community and raise, by small voluntary contributions from 20 to 30 young people the money to send a delegate.

3. In the case of Meetings with few young people—the young people of a whole quarter should organize to send a representative from the Quarter.

Besides these measures, it will be well to encourage others who can go to Cedar Lake to do so at their own expense."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR May 28th.

Topic, "How Missions are Blessing the World" (Foreign Mission meeting), Ezek. 47:1-12.

See the article in last week's American Friend on the work of a Mission Study Class.

a. Why should I be interested in Foreign Missions?

1. Because by raising the industrial standard of a people, our country can buy a better quality of goods from foreigners at a cheaper price. Also because we will have a better market for our produce. See S. L. Gulick's "Working Women of Japan."

2. Because the educational life of the world will be raised in proportion to the number of peoples given modern educational opportunities.—Sherwood Eddy's "Students of Asia."

3. Because the social conscience of the world will be sensitized with the advance of Christianity.—A. J. Brown's "Rising Churches in non-Christian Lands."

4. Because foreign nations are losing faith in their own religions.—A. J. Brown's "Rising Churches in non-Christian Lands."

NEWS NOTES.

Bertha Smith is serving as pastor of Oak Hill meeting, North Carolina.

The meeting at Pickering, Ontario, Canada, contributed $16.50 for missions on Easter Sunday.

Nine new members between the ages of thirteen and nineteen were received by the meeting at Toronto, Canada, on April 19.

William J. Sayers, pastor of the meeting at Muncie, Indiana, gave the commencement address of the Center Township schools, Delaware County, Indiana, on the evening of May 6.

CHURCH AT WORK

Vancouver, B. C.—British Columbia Quarterly Meeting convened in Vancouver, April 29th and 30th. "Are the Present Day Beliefs and Practices of the Church in Conformity with Those of the Early Church in the time of Peter and Paul? If not, is it possible and desirable to return to them?" was a subject taken up and considered for an hour and a half. One object was to stir Friends to a realization of their responsibilities and opportunities, which was in some measure done and a very full and helpful discussion took place. The annual reports of the three Monthly Meetings, Victoria, Vancouver, and Calgary were presented, and while in the cities a good many Friends have removed, most for the time being, they presented encouraging features, and the development of the newer Meeting at Calgary was inspiring. An interchange of visits between the Meetings was arranged tentatively, and with a view to keeping more in touch with the scattered membership, a list of members and attenders is to be prepared, printed and circulated. The next Quarterly Meeting is to be held in Victoria, the 28th and 29th of October.

Richmond, Ind., East Main St.—Two very interesting and profitable evening services were held recently at East Main Street Meeting. The first was in charge of the men, four of whom participated. The general theme was, "Christian Development." Percy B. Smith spoke on "Prayer, a Dynamic In Christian Development." Edgar S. Mote spoke on "The Element of Praise In Christian Development." The topic, "Concentration In Christian Development" was considered by Jesse O. Parshall. Harry B. Reeves talked on, "Cultivating the Companionship of Christ, The Climax In Christian Development." This was a most helpful service, as was also the second, which was in charge of the women. The general theme was, "Christianity Meeting all The Needs Of Humanity." Miss Electa Henley spoke on "Jesus, The Friend Of The Needy." Mrs. Mabel Smith spoke on, "The Early Church An Agency To Promote Good Fellowship." Mrs. Alsie Crawford dealt with the topic, "The Gospel Equals The Whole Need Of Man." "The Red Cross As A Christian Agency Ministering To The Unfortunate" was presented by Mrs. Ruth Wilson. "The Need Of The World Is Jesus" concluded the program, which was greatly appreciated by a large audience. The ladies furnished the ushers for the evening and rendered all the music. The East Main Street Girls' Quartet, composed of Misses Ruth Hadley, Mary Butler, Mildred Edwards and Gertrude Clark, sang two beautiful selections.

On Tuesday evening, May 2, in the church parlors at East Main Street, a farewell reception was given to Francis and Phariba W. Stephens, who are leaving soon for a year's stay in California. Interesting remarks were made by Timothy Nicholson, Milo S. Hinckle, Truman C. Kenworthy, Marianna Kenworthy, L. L. Parks, Fred Charles, Percy Smith, Rebecca T. Davis, Emma Rhoads of Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and Phariba Stephens. Emma H. Hadley sang a solo. After a social hour, refreshments were served and the evening closed with an earnest prayer for their safety on the long journey which they expect to make by automobile.

Spiceland, Indiana—Charles Sweet of Muncie has just closed nine months of very helpful and inspiring work in Spiceland meeting. He came to us each Sabbath morning from his home and delivered two sermons and taught a Bible School class of young married people. His earnest gospel messages were very instructive and were filled with practical suggestions along the lines of efficient work for the Lord.

Roy Wollam began his work as pastor at Spiceland the first Sabbath in May. He comes fresh from his three years at McCormick Theological Seminary and full of enthusiasm and love for the Lord's work.

Emporia, Kansas—Emporia Monthly Meeting has taken in eighty-eight new members since the beginning of the present calendar year. The Bible School is increasing in interest and numbers. We are looking forward to the enlargement of the church. It cannot now accommodate all the classes of the Bible School, three classes meeting in the parsonage. A building committee has been appointed and is working on plans and hopes to report soon. George C. Wise, Jr., is pastor and is working with his usual energy and unselfishness for the upbuilding of the church. He and his family are much appreciated by the membership.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

May 28.

Subject—The Council at Jerusalem.
Lesson—Acts 15:1-35.

Golden Text—For freedom did Christ set us free. Galatians 5:1.

The policy pursued by the Christians at Antioch was bound to cause trouble sooner or later. The leaders in that church were liberals and of course had to meet the opposition of those who wished to adhere to the former practice—namely, that the rules governing proselytes should obtain. By that rule none were to be considered full members of the church who had not accepted the practices of the Mosaic law and been initiated by the usual rites and ceremonies into the Hebrew faith: Paul and his associates were not so extreme, and were permitting the Gentiles to enter the church without these initiations. Certain ones from Jerusalem had come to Antioch, and, learning the facts, had caused trouble. There was considerable agitation over the matter. Even Peter and Paul had a difference of opinion before conclusions were finally reached.

At last it was decided to carry the matter to the Christians at Jerusalem. This decision introduces a number of interesting questions connected with the early organization and practice of the church, which we cannot discuss here. But we may ask whether the Jerusalem Church had final authority in such matters? Indeed we may ask if there was a regular recognized court at Jerusalem, or was this matter just carried up for friendly advice? Different answers have been given to these questions, but final evidence as to the facts in the case are lacking.

Paul took particular pains to make his ideas clear to certain of the leaders through private conversation. The deciding testimony in the matter seems to have been Peter's statement of his experience in the home of Cornelius. The decision rendered by the group was in the main friendly to the Pauline contention, though it probably contained elements which he did not accept. Certain it is that in none of his extant epistles does he call attention to the "necessary things." In fact the results of the conference seem to have been made almost void by a certain faction in the Church which did not accept them and continued for some time to follow Paul, insisting that his converts accept circumcision and other Hebrew practices.

The "necessary things," to which reference is made, are sometimes referred to as the essential elements of the Noachian code. There are in fact but three essentials in the list. The eating of meats offered to idols, the eating of blood, and fornication. Paul certainly would accept the last one. He was very careful to guard the moral life of his converts. We know that in cases where the first one was involved he departed from the plain letter of the instructions (I Cor. 8). Of the second we can say nothing definite. This matter of the Gentiles' relation to the Mosaic law remained a question of controversy until the division of the church between the Gentiles and Jews became an accomplished fact.

Paul greatly desired to remain in harmony with the Jerusalem Church and made many sacrifices to do so, but at the same time he felt that the spiritual life of his converts should not be sacrificed to Mosaism. The problem underlying this incident is ever with us. Reaction and progress do not seem to be without their victims even today.

The Life That Counts

The life that counts must toil and fight;
Must hate the wrong and love the right;
Must stand for truth by day, by night—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts must aim to rise
Above the earth to sunlit skies;
Must fix his gaze on Paradise—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts must hopeful be;
In darkest night make melody;
Must wait the dawn on bended knee—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts must helpful be;
The cares and needs of others see;
Must seek the slave of sin to free—
That is the life that counts.

The life that counts is linked with God;
And turns not from the cross, the rod;
But walks with joy where Jesus trod—
That is the life that counts.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY

The Gospel Ministry In The Five Years Meeting.

II. Intellectual Equipment

"It is the prerogative of the Great Head of the Church alone to select and call the ministers of His Gospel." "Both the gift and the qualification to exercise it must be derived immediately from Him." In those two sentences is contained the charter of the Quaker ministry of the Gospel. It is as valid today as it ever was. So firmly is it embedded in our denominational thought that any special emphasis upon the importance of subordinate qualifications is liable to be received with a measure of caution, if not of positive disapprobation. Insistence upon the necessity for intellectual power as a factor in effective preaching incurs the risk of disparagement as being subversive of that humility and spiritual mindedness which should be the garment of every minister of Christ.

Nevertheless, the fact is not to be overlooked that the vital importance of adequate mental endowments to effectiveness in the exercise of the ministry is made a matter of special prominence in the Uniform Discipline. Its provisions distinctively contemplate much more than the apprehension of a call, a record for blameless living and orthodox theological views as the requisite qualifications, on the human side, for the ministry which is to be accredited by the church. Co-ordinate with the fundamental requirements just mentioned stand "mental capacity" and those "general qualifications" which go to make up the sum total of an effective preacher's personality.

The minister of the future, no matter to what denomination he belongs, who is to command a wide hearing must be one who deals with those things that matter. Earnestness in preaching is not enough. Mental inferiority and mediocrity are synonymous. The church, as well as the world, is becoming less and less inclined to listen to a preacher who has nothing worth while to say.

In the Quaker conception, the spiritual life of a meeting ought not to be dependent upon the vocal ministry. Nevertheless, as a general rule, if the ministry in a church is weak, spiritually and intellectually, everything else in the meeting is weak. There is a measure of responsibility for leadership resting upon every true minister from which he can no more absolve himself than he can evade the duty of proclaiming the Gospel message. "The walls of Zion will not go up, great things will not be done, unless there is great leadership." It must be a leadership of strong thinking as well as of spiritual power. Here a robust personality, of which intellectual strength is an essential element, as an adjunct of the deeper spiritual qualifications, is an imperative necessity.

Denominational distinctions are gradually ceasing to be vital issues. But in the growing federation of Christian forces each denomination contributes the greatest service to the common cause by loyalty to whatever is of permanent value in its historic mission and message to the world. That this truth is peculiarly applicable to our own denomination is a growing conviction in the minds of many thoughtful Friends. The awful cataclysm abroad in the world today marks "the removing of those things which are shaken" in the churches as well as in the nations, "that those things which are not shaken may remain." In the midst of the universal turmoil and distractions the voice of the Spirit, to adapt the words of another writer, is sending the Society of Friends back upon itself, to reconceive its mission, to revoice its distinctive evangel, and to constructively replan its program. Never was George Fox's exhortation to Friends in the ministry "to dwell in the power of life and wisdom" more needed than it is today. Neither was there ever a time when vigorous intellectual endowments were more vitally requisite in order to obtain a hearing for the Quaker message. If the Five Years Meeting is to rise to the great occasion and opportunity now before it, it must awaken to a sharper conscience concerning its duty to earnestly and practically promote the best possible mental equipment of its ministers.

JOSEPH JOHN MILLS,

General Secretary.

525 South Catalina Ave., Pasadena, Cal.

We are sure that in the future are losses, and sorrows, and death; thank God we are sure, too, that he is in it. That certainly alone, and what comes of it, makes it possible for a thoughtful man to face tomorrow without fear or tumult. The only rest from apprehensions which are but too reasonable is "rest in the Lord."—A. Maclaren.

A Denomination in Prayer

In the stress of great calamity humanity is prone to fall upon its knees in supplication. It is a weakness of the race that it is apt to forget God in prosperity, and only turns to him for help under the compulsion of dire necessity. Even the church has been slow to know the value of persistent, intercessory prayer, except as it faces grave crises and finds the arm of flesh yielding and unstable. But religion is powerless without that spiritual communion that is constantly revealing new values of relationship between God and man. Without the certainties of continuous, availing prayer that finds a pathway to God through the uneven and bewildering circumstances of daily life, faith itself might easily become a blind guide. Faith finds its fulfillment through prayer quite as truly as in association with good works.

The best guarantee of success to the church is that it abide in the spirit of prayer. Whether in prosperity or adversity, whether facing the routine of ordinary service or a great crisis such as is now upon the earth, prayer is the means by which the grace of the Divine Father is assured for his children. Men probably do not pray half enough, but the character and spirit of the intercession is far more important than its frequency. There is probably too much generality and formality in prayer. It is only the sincere soul that can really pray; it is only such a soul that can know what to pray for.

For many months we have had an increasing conviction that the Society of Friends should be found much in prayer. Among both young and old there are stirrings that betoken the strivings after better things, there are questionings that are expressive of yearnings for a more realistic spirituality, there is an unrest that voices eloquently our dissatisfaction with the commonplace and that which is purely traditional. While considering plans and programs and issues and efficiency, our only assurance of success is through prayer that vitalizes faith and energizes works and reveals the will of God in terms of present day life.

In face of the world tasks that are confronting the Christian church, in face of the tremendous need which humanity has of the vital truths of Christianity as interpreted by Friends since the days of George Fox, in face of the practical efforts which Friends everywhere are making to adjust our Quaker politics and methods to the necessities of a suffering and bewildered world, what greater issue can there be than that the Society of Friends, individually and as a body should be literally upon its knees, seeking to know with clearness and accuracy the Father's will, and imploring the divine energy and divine wisdom for all of our denominational operations? What spiritual energies would be released for world evangelization and universal human betterment, if the ideals of Friends could through prayer become the common practice of our entire membership!

For what shall we pray?

Foremost and first of all that the divine energy may possess our aspirations, our worship, our service, our organism, our life; that the Holy Spirit may be given right of way through our individual personalities and through the corporate body as channels for the operation of spiritual power upon other human life. A corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit. Clear brooklets do not emanate from muddy springs. The spirit of worldliness cannot transmit itself into spiritual life in others. If Quakerism would thrive and grow and become a positive force for righteousness in the world, it must recognize again its apostolic mission and surrender itself to the refining fire of the Holy Ghost.

Shall we not pray for the spirit of fraternity and unity among ourselves? "That they may be one." Christianity is a fellowship, not a medley. Without the surrender of individual judgment, there is a unity of the Spirit that is the very essential of Christian growth. Religion is an affair of the heart and not of the head. True religion, which is the essence of love, does not voice itself either in persecution or in the spirit of unseemly strife. Children cannot be born into the kingdom from a refrigerator nor amid contentions and suspicionings. If brethren are overtaken in a fault—or in errors of belief and judgment—steps should be taken by those who are spiritual to restore them in the spirit of meekness and love. Quakerism must ever be a brotherhood, or it must cease to exist. The best evidence of our right to claim the name of Friends is our readiness to pray for one another in a spirit of love and good will, and therein will lie our best assurance of vital fellowship.

Finally, if we can pray for ourselves and for one another, we are ready to pray for a greater Quakerism, not for selfish ends, but for purposes of greater service to humanity. It is the day of opportunity for the Society of Friends. With so much of the world in the crucible, either of war or of heathenism, there is need of a gospel message that is untainted either by selfishness or formalism, either by worldliness or lukewarmness.

The world needs our ideals now as they were not needed even in the days of George Fox. But idealism of this kind will not avail unless it be reduced to terms of service and practice. Shall we not pray and continue to pray that God will fashion us for his workmanship as a positive factor in the ushering in of the kingdom of God, until the kingdoms of this world shall become indeed the actual kingdom of our Lord?

Political Conditions in Chungking

By ROBERT. L. SIMKIN

The soldiers of Yuan Shi Kai who are waging war against the revolutionaries of Yunnan and Kweichow have had many very difficult problems, not the least of which is that of transportation. I have mentioned how they were commandeering every available boat in Ichang, and how fortunate we were that we could travel up river between two detachments, so that we had little to do with either. One afternoon, as we were out on shore for a walk, we passed some men washing gold from the sand at the bank. They inquired anxiously if there were any soldiers coming behind us, and said that as soon as they appeared they intended to leave their gold washing and run away to the hills until the soldiers had passed.

At one of the rapids a boat-load of coolies who were being taken against their will to Ichang to pull the boats of the soldiers was on its way down and had entered the stream to pass through the rapid just as some soldiers' boats were ready to pull up. Contrary to custom the latter did not wait for the former to pass, but shoved out into the stream. A collision resulted in which the soldiers' boat was somewhat damaged, and though the fault was their own, the soldiers drew their guns and fired into the midst of the coolies, killing or wounding three. Although this is happily an extreme case, that sort of treatment does not enhance the love of the Szechwanese for the Northern troops.

Having arrived at Chungking, the problem is an even more difficult one, for the Northern soldiers brought with them guns on carriages, which are totally unsuited to this country, where the roads are from two to four feet wide and full of steps. From the city to the school residence from which I write there are probably not less than two thousand steps. The wheels have, therefore, had to be discarded altogether, or coolies have had to be secured to carry them, as well as the gun itself. Every available man has been pressed into service, the soldiers stationing themselves at the city gates and stopping every man who looks—as if he ever carried a load. It is not uncommon to see as many as a dozen or twenty coolies tied together with ropes around their arms, being taken off to carry the soldiers' loads. If they try to run away, the soldiers shoot. At least twice, innocent bystanders have been killed by mistake instead of the man who was running away.

For a time there was almost a water famine in the city because so many of the water carriers had been taken, and boys in large measure had to take their places. Later the military commander issued stamped tickets to water carriers, ferrymen, and other classes of public servants, exempting them from duty. Were it not that he has also issued tickets to the servants of foreigners, exempting them from duty, we should fear to send our servants to buy food. Two weeks ago, having sent a servant with important letters to the city, I happened to be walking near the road which runs past our house to the scene of battle, about sixty miles distant), when I was called in haste to come and get this servant free. An unusually large quantity of equipment and ammunition, requiring for its transportation about two thousand coolies, was being carried out to Chikiang past our place just as our servant was returning, and the soldiers had seized him to take the place of one of the coolies who had failed them on the long hill. He had his ticket stamped by the Commander-in-Chief, but nevertheless it was with difficulty that I persuaded the soldiers to release him.

On that afternoon there must have been twenty or thirty men hiding among the trees and bushes of our hill, so that the soldiers could not find them, and I have since heard that the people of the village near us keep a lookout at a prominent point on a nearby hill to give the alarm whenever soldiers are passing through. Whenever the alarm is given the men all desert the village, and I have seen the soldiers going from house to house hunting for carriers and meeting the response everywhere that the men are all away. One of our neighbors complains that he cannot even do farming this year because his fields are so near the road.

Although we are only about sixty miles from the scene of some of the fighting, we do not get much news that can be relied upon. Nearly everyone hopes that those who are now in power will be able to maintain their authority, for a change is always difficult to make without an interval of more or less disorder. Prospects for a satisfactory settlement are brighter since the cancellation of the monarchy. Nevertheless, Yuan Shi Kai's imperial ambitions have caused him to lose prestige and the confidence of the people to such an extent that it remains to be seen whether he will be able to remain in office.

Internal commerce has suffered severely from these disturbed conditions, and travel has been made more difficult, but otherwise our work is not seriously interfered with. In some respects the troubles have enlarged the opportunity of the missionary; for it is in times of difficulty that one turns to the Great Helper.

What Is the Quaker Message and How Can We Best Promulgate It?

By HARRIET F. BROOKS

The story of the widow's oil as given in II Kings 4:1-7 has been selected as the basis of this article.

It seems to the writer that the message of Quakerism as needed for the twentieth century is much like this Biblical narrative. Two hundred and fifty years have passed since that little group of people, under the leadership of George Fox, originated the Society of Friends. The early years were a struggle because of opposition from their rulers and the Church of England.

The influence of this small band of worshipers was like the one pot of oil, but gradually others became interested and like the empty vessels were filled with the Spiritual oil from the single pot, George Fox being the Elisha in the hands of Jehovah to work the miracle of the doctrine of the Inner Light.

As a result, what are we of today doing for the promulgation of these ideals? Who are the modern Elishas and where the empty vessels?

We have enjoyed our spiritual prosperity, but now the time has come when this heritage must be charged with the electrical enthusiasm of youth in order that our faith may not be effaced from the religious world; thereby enabling us to pay our debt to the founders of Quakerism. We cannot satisfactorily fill our spiritual vessels with the forms and rituals of other denominations. How, then, shall the publication of our peculiar message be accomplished?

We listen from time to time to sermons bearing directly or indirectly upon this theme; yet remain indifferent to personal responsibility. There have been and are Friends who are living epistles of sincere consecration to Jesus Christ, for only by earnest toil, zeal and "Daily with souls that cringe and plot," as taught by the indwelling of His Spirit in each heart can God's work be perfected through human instrumentality. It is only by such lives that the Quaker message will be brought to the world of today.

Here, then, is an opportunity for young Friends. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see," said the Christ. It is as true now as when he preached the Sermon on the Mount. We need not enter the field of social service, or go to foreign countries to live and teach the Christ; while it may seem less glorious and less courageous to remain within our limited sphere and do this work, yet it is just as important. To illustrate, there comes to my mind a young man who united with Friends some time ago. He came to the Society of Friends (after trying other churches in a large city) because he found the friendly atmosphere conducive to his spiritual life. He is very sincere and zealous for the promulgation of the ideals of Friends. He, with another young Friend, is anxiously concerned about a certain matter, and both are trying to quicken the spiritual visions of those of longer standing in the church relative to this definite Christian service.

In the years to be it is men and women of this stamp that will stand true to the Quaker Church in her hour of need. This young Friend is typical of others everywhere, who are giving the strength of their youth in answer to the "Call of Christ to Me." The Master is asking for lives that are consecrated to Him; personalities that radiate the Inner Light, openly shown in the face; expressed in vocal testimony; thus showing loyalty to Christ and the fundamentals of Friends; exhibiting to the world we are not ashamed to be known as young Friends.

In our pastors and Bible School teachers we find our modern Elishas, while we are the empty vessels to be filled with the oil of His grace by these who already possess this oil, for in so doing their own supply will augment.

In these days when the chief topic of conversation among the thinking public is "preparedness," it behooves us as Friends to pour our oil of peace upon these troubled waters; while the church has progressed in order to keep up with the demands of the times; yet within her power is the privilege of doing much to stem this terrible tide of bloodshed and that other destruction which comes not alone through sword and shell, causing humanity to pause ere it is too late.

We, as the Society of Friends, have always stood for peace and arbitration as the best way of settling difficulties among nations. It is gratifying to note that our local Fellowship Group is listed with others from all over the country in the promulgation of the message of Peace. Among ourselves we have maintained the principles of Peace for truly we are Friends because we hold friendship with the Divine Friend, hence our ideals will ultimately be reached by others.

We need to come aside from the crowd for a little, finding that peace which comes through companionship with Him who left this beautiful message: "Peace, I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." For then we shall have fellowship one with another and "Peace, good will to men," which is the best form of preparedness for any country and we will be serving our denomination in one of the most vital ways for the promulgation of the Quaker message.

May it be ever true that "Peace is indeed within our borders and prosperity within our palaces, not only for the Society of Friends, but for all people who dwell in 'America, the Beautiful'."

Correspondence

Editor American Friend:

It has been a long time since I have read any extended sermon or article in your columns distinctively on the "Higher Life," "Perfect Love," "Holiness," "Sanctification," "Fullness of God" or any of the many titles that may be applied to that life that is hidden with Christ in God.

Being separated from Friends for years, my only medium of communication and information is your paper, which I read from cover to cover. The disappointment I feel urges me to pen these words. In years gone by, when the revivals conducted by John Henry Douglas and his coadjutors were bringing many thousands into the Kingdom and souls were being sanctified by hundreds, the doctrine of the higher life was the burden of both the printed and the preached word. And God blessed the work.

It may be that it is yet preached generally, but no one could find it out from reading THE AMERICAN FRIEND. In fact, I know pastors of our churches who never touch on this highest and most important of all themes in any special manner. My heart cries out for preachers who will preach the good old Holy Ghost gospel, and the whole of the gospel. Oh, for a moving, melting, fiery preaching that will warm hearts and bring things to pass!

The fatal mistake with the generality of the preaching of today is that it does not aim at that for which preaching is appointed. The object of gospel preaching, according to the New Testament, is not to get sinners saved or to get members into the church. These, good as they are, are only a means toward the end. The real end and object of scriptural preaching is to bring believers to that place where they are perfect in Christ Jesus by being filled with the Spirit.

This fullness of the Spirit, which comes by and through entire sanctification is the great and grand end of all true preaching as is seen in the ministry of Jesus and the apostles. To stop short of this is to lay a foundation and desert it. The result is no superstructure—it is ruin to the foundation and no building.

A careful study of the teaching and preaching of Christ will show that His great effort was to get His followers to receive the Holy Ghost in all His fullness. Study His last talk with the faithful eleven, followed by His prayer as given in John fourteen to seventeen, and that will convince any candid inquirer after truth that the great summation of the teaching of Jesus was to bring His followers then and now to a life of perfect love, trust and filled with the Holy Ghost.

True preaching must aim at that at which the Bible aims. The Bible makes the dispensation of the Holy Ghost the finality of all its teaching. Joel says, "It shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out my spirit on all flesh." Joel 2:28. This was fulfilled at Pentecost in a measure. God is ready to continue His part now—only man is the laggard. Oh, that every Friends' pastor, preacher and church officer would get the full glorious experience, live it and tell it on every proper occasion. It was for this the Bible was written. It was for this the church was organized, that it might be a glorious church, a mighty church "without spot or wrinkle," to reflect the glory of God among the nations. If the Bible does not teach this as the grand summation, the one thing needful for the bride, the lamb's wife, then it teaches nothing.

To have power the church must have this Holy Ghost baptism, see Acts 1:8, first clause. To me it is most unspeakably sad that the Holy Ghost is such a stranger to the large majority of the church of God.

It is heart-breakingly sad that the assumption is that God is pleased with the preaching of but the initial doctrines of salvation, the preparatory principles of His Kingdom—"Let us go on unto perfection." "Having therefore, these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord." 2 Cor. 7:1.

Work of The Friends Ambulance Unit

By PERCY ALDEN, M. P.

Lord Bryce said to me on a recent occasion, "Nations respond to the appeal which is made to them in a time of great national crisis when they have been trained to love truth and honor, to cherish justice and liberty." Some of us have long felt that there are many ways in which we can show our love of truth and honor and can continue to cherish those great principles of justice and liberty upon which our whole social fabric ought to be founded. It is not always necessary to take up arms and fight for your country. You may suffer in fighting or you may suffer without fighting. It always depends on the spirit which animates the man.

My connection with the Friends Ambulance Unit dates back to the time when a little deputation came to me to ask whether I would get them out to Servia, and as I happened to be on the Servian Relief fund I took some steps in that direction. Later on, however, in company with Sir George Newman, after a visit to the camp at which about forty men were in training at Jordans (the burial place of William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania), we came to the conclusion that it would be better for them to work with the Belgian Red Cross in Flanders. Accordingly, in October, 1914, forty-three men sailed on the Invicta, on the way over rescuing the crew of the Hermes, a cruiser which had just been torpedoed. At Dunkirk they found the hospital sheds overflowing with wounded men, and in those first terrible days following a great battle they dressed the wounds of 5000 soldiers and transhipped 6000, thus winning their spurs at the outset. Their work, for the most part, has been in that little triangle of meadowland with Ypres for its base in which over a hundred thousand men have been buried. Dunkirk is their headquarters and there is stationed one of their principal hospitals, but it was in the "Sacre Coeur" hospital at Ypres that some of their best work was done. Twice it was evacuated during bombardment and after the second bombardment nothing much was left of it.

The object of the Unit is to give help to the sick and wounded, both soldiers and civilians. Their stand with that small handful of men from the universities and colleges has now provided an opportunity for rendering effective service to many hundreds of young Friends of military age, who might otherwise have been compelled to enlist or at any rate take up service distasteful to them. Their religious convictions prevented them from bearing arms, but it cannot or should not prevent them from rescuing the wounded or healing the diseased. The work may be divided into ambulance work, hospital work, sanitary service and general assistance to civilians. The Unit now has 125 cars and they have conveyed in these cars nearly 60,000 wounded and diseased men. They have three hospitals on the continent: one at Dunkirk and two others in Flanders. They also have a large hospital in England for wounded soldiers, with 250 beds, and a hospital barge, "Secours," on a canal not far from Ypres. In addition to this they man and control three hospital trains in which they have carried already nearly 50,000 wounded. The latest addition to their labors of love is a hospital ship with 300 beds, which conveys wounded and sick between England and the continent.

Not the least important part of their work, however, is the assistance which they render to civilians in Flanders. Many villages and small towns have been laid desolate by fire and bombardment and the consequence is that in all that district it has been necessary to establish centers of social and medical aid. Could there be any work more Christlike than that which has been rendered in that battered and ruined district? At a half dozen places dressing stations were established for the wounded, whether soldiers or civilians. Two orphanages were started for the children of civilians who had been killed by shell fire. At thirty villages work shops were opened for the manufacture of lace and 1400 persons have been re-established in the lace trade.

Since the children suffer most of all in a war of this nature, owing to the lack of a proper food supply, the Unit has established a dozen milk depots so that the little ones may not suffer. The water supply in many cases was so bad that it had to be taken in hand, as typhoid was spreading. Among other useful pieces of work, the members of the Unit purified one million gallons of water and their doctors inoculated 27,000 people against typhoid.

Nearly all this work has been done in connection with the "Aide Civile Belge," which was started by two Belgian Countesses. These young Quakers, with a chivalry beyond all praise, came to the rescue of the small band of ladies working among the civilian population and since that time they have created order out of chaos in that corner of Flanders and have brought light and healing into many homes. Their reward is not the praise of men, but the benediction which falls upon the Good Samaritan. These men have saved hundreds of lives and such work must surely be in the highest sense Christian. The cost of the work is $15,000 per month and owing to the Conscription Act, which has just been passed in England, it is thought that another 500 men will be added to the 550 who are now doing this work.

Subscriptions and donations will be very gratefully received and acknowledged, and I am allowed to say by the editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that he will be kind enough to accept such gifts and forward them to the proper quarter. I hope that I may be able to say on my return to England that I have secured the promise of $5,000 a month until the end of the war, and I venture to make the suggestion that all who can should contribute one dollar monthly until the close of the war.

REPORT ON INDIAN WORK

(By The Chairman)

To the Associated Executive Committee of Friends On Indian Affairs.

Crossing the State of Missouri Southwest from St. Louis by "The Frisco" Line to Northwestern Oklahoma at about 330 miles, and just over the state boundary, is Wyandotte, at which is an Indian Reservation Government School and near it one of our oldest Mission Stations, now occupied by our Friends, Isaac and Laura Frazier. Our opportunities and relations with the Indian children at the school and through them with others have been of continuing interest and importance.

Seneca Mission, some nine miles to the Southwest and close to the Missouri line, still occupied by Harvey and Elizabeth Wallace, has continued as a religious influence for the remnant of that tribe there located.

Nearly North from Wyandotte, about eight miles, is Modoc, and West from it, beyond Grand River, and about nine or ten miles from Wyandotte to the Northwest, is Ottawa Mission.

These two posts last named, by gradual elimination during several years, have not had any financial support from our treasury since last autumn.

Our hope and often expressed wish that Modoc Meeting would be normally maintained free from our Committee has not been easy of accomplishment, but a few Friends of that neighborhood have finally co-operated, lately having paid $100 on account to our treasurer, with the understanding that an additional $100 is to be paid before a given date next spring, when we are to give title to the premises, which are to be used for a Friends Meeting for worship for that community.

The Ottawa community was granted the use of our Meeting House and Mission Home at that place for a period of one year, with the understanding that regular meetings were to be maintained together with a Bible Class and that a brief quarterly report would be forwarded to our superintendents each three months. There seemed to have been a desire to meet us in this matter, but success has been quite limited. The condition elicits our united consideration.

The twenty acres and buildings at Ottawa are of much more value than the four acres and poorer buildings at Modoc, but in relation to both we can properly recall how in times past, earnest prayerful sacrifice in an unusual degree did not fail to do its part in establishing bands of strong Christian men and women, most of whom went in later times peacefully to their rest, but memories of their history should strengthen our faith and impel us forward in our struggle while the day lasts and the Indian field still lies open to our hands.

Faithful care and prolonged correspondence by our treasurer has not yet closed the agreement of sale for our Hillside property, though we are still trusting for the balance of the purchase money to be paid to us.

At Iowa Mission, a lease for one year has been made. Much care and correspondence as to a sale of this property led to our having a deed fully executed, but the agreed purchaser failed of this purpose and the deed for $655 has been cancelled. The Indian, Robert Small, we are now assured, is a purchaser if our Committee will give him title for $600.

The five remaining posts have all been in continuous active care, as may be shown by other reports about to be submitted, and for all of which you have had monthly advices throughout the year.

At Otoe, our Friends, J. L. and S. N. Mayo, having resigned and desired prompt release last autumn they were replaced, after the usual enquiry and care as to fitness for the responsible and serious work, by Friends from Shawnee, viz: Frank and Allie Hatcher, who seem to have closely identified their lives and Christian endeavor with the Indians of that tribe and with the officers of the Government School and the children therein.

For these two Friends, as well as for our superintendents, and for each of our other missionaries, including, too, our Friend, Elizabeth Test, at Kickapoo, I would ask our earnest supporting prayers. May we each one be mindful in an increasing degree of our responsibilities in this most important matter. True, earnest prayer availeth much. May we not be neglectful of it.

Executive action has been continuous, but perhaps more confined within routine limits, as now reviewed, than during many other past years. This does not, however, indicate curtailment of Mission needs or a decline in collateral interests and associations of kindred nature with our own and with which there is direct affiliation by membership in common, as with the Indian Rights Association, the Home Missions Council, the Mohonk Indian Conference, the American Indian Association, the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., which are extending their efforts, and the Friends of Philadelphia in charge of the Indian School at Tunesassa, New York.

With all of these I feel, from first-hand information, we may deem the work of the year as of high efficiency, and if action by us were relevant, a more generous mention of their activities would prove very appealing, as may be evidenced in their several reports.

Though the mention must be brief, it seems well, too, to refer with earnest appreciation to the zealous and encouraging work of Commissioner Cato Sells and of E. B. Merritt, Assistant Commissioner of the Indian Bureau, both of whom are deserving of the cordial moral support of all true Friends of the Indian; and this whether we do or do not approve of the government system under which they work.

Another matter. Through correspondence and a conferring interview with the chairman of the Committee of Seven, authorized to plan a revision of the work of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting, came suggestions for a combination of Boards with a view to a reduction of departments which should report to the Five Years Meeting and an effort for a better adjustment of all its reporting work. We will wish to accede and co-operate with others in this matter as seems best, but as there are questions involved which are of much possible significance to our Associated Committee, it would seem right to fully understand and consider the entire subject before we determine just what may be the best for the future of Friends Indian Missions.

We need to know the Indian in order to give him help and to keep pace with his shifting outlook and environment. I feel this was well displayed by Arthur C. Parker, an able student of the subject, who is of the Seneca tribe, an influential leader of the American Indian Association, General Editor of its journal and archaeologist of the Department of Education of the State of New York. At the annual meeting of our Philadelphia Indian Aid this year, Arthur Parker gave us an able address on the present complex situation and indefinite position and lack of legal status, the Indian and his friends have confronting them, the condition being further involved by three prominent influences, viz:

- (a) Inefficient Bureau employes.
- (b) Rapacity of business interests.
- (c) Apathetic attitude of Indians themselves.

Our general thesis is large and varied and a difficulty in starting a brief paper has readily developed into an embarrassment of riches.

In conclusion, and in no light mood, the writer assumes the privilege of referring to a silent partner in the efforts of our Committee during all the years since he first became an officer of it in the year 1889.

The close of the life of our beloved and valued Dr. James E. Rhoads in 1895, who so sympathetically held all the threads together, seemed to bring a critical time in the life of our associated responsibilities. As occasion has warranted, T. Wistar Brown became a confidential and discreet adviser and a strong moral support. His interest in our Indian Missions was deep and broad to a degree not much suspected, and his appreciation of the difficulties involved on both the right hand and the left, became a revelation. Very simply I would wish to thus memorialize his quiet worth upon our minutes. It may not be a breach of his long confidence to add that the death of T. Wistar Brown on the 16th of last month closed the series of gifts of $500 which, since 1889, has yearly appeared in our treasurer's accounts as the gift of "A Philadelphia Friend."

Under a conditional trust created by T. Wistar Brown during his life, there may, after it shall have become operative, eighteen months hence, be further annual donations for the use of this Indian work.

In a feeling of enhanced responsibility and in renewed loving esteem,

E. M. WISTAR, Chairman.

Philadelphia, 8th of 5th Month, 1916.

The Right Kind of a Boy

A boy who had thoughtlessly hurt the feelings of a friend called in the evening and said, "Is Theodore in? I want to see him."

The two had a few moments' earnest talk, after which Theodore came back to the living room with a very bright face.

"Kenneth is a good fellow," he said, as his mother looked up inquiringly. "He was rather horrid to me today when I made an error on third base, and he came around tonight to apologize. He said that he was sorry that he had been rude, and he thought he had been unfair. There are not many fellows who take the trouble to ask your pardon when they have been in the wrong."

"Kenneth is a manly boy," said Theodore's father.

"Yes, and a generous one," the mother added. "We are glad to have you cultivate the friendship of a boy such as Kenneth. You won't go far astray when in his company."—Comrade.

Life's Little Days.

One secret of a sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us. We think of life as a whole, running on for us. We can not carry this load until we are threescore and ten. We can not fight this battle continually for half a century. But really there are no longer stretches. Life does not come to us all at one time; it comes only a day at a time. Even tomorrow is never ours till it becomes today, and we have nothing whatever to do with it but to pass down to it a fair and good inheritance in today's work well done and today's life well lived.

It is a blessed secret, this of living by the day. Any one can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Anyone can do his work however hard, for one day. Anyone can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly, purely till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means to us—just one little day. "Do today's duty, fight today's temptation, and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you can not see, and could not understand if you saw them."

God gives us nights to shut down the curtain of darkness on our little days. We can not see beyond. Short horizons make life easier, and give us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy living. —British Weekly.

LIFE.

By Anna Letitia Barbauld.

Life! We've been long together,
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear;
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time,
Say not, "Good night," but in some brighter clime Bid me "Good morning."

FOR REMEMBRANCE.

By Agnes Leonard Hill.

"If thy cruse of comfort faileth Rise and share it with another."
If thy light seems growing dimmer
Lift it high for some lost brother.

If thy burden seems too heavy,
Of thy neighbor's bear a part;
Two can walk where one had perished
Of a weary broken heart.

If thy feet have found the anguish
Of a thorny blood-stained way,
Soon they'll reach the blessed healing
Of the Shining Hills of Day.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Some facts that are interesting, to say the least, have been uncovered in the course of the activities of this headquarters. The work was begun last winter on the assumption that the Society of Friends might be considered to stand by its historical position with reward to war and preparations for war. It was thought that our task was simply to call the Friends of the country to action upon the question of military preparedness. Those who took this task upon themselves believed that in their anxiety to do what they could to stem the tide of militarism that was sweeping over the country, they were in accord with the whole body of American Friends. They felt that all that was necessary to bring to bear against the "preparedness" hysteria a united expression of opinion from Friends in opposition to the complete change in the military policy of our country that is involved in the "preparedness" program of government officials and others, was to give Friends information as to what was being proposed and to show them how they might act effectively. The headquarters committee believed, as people outside our Society generally believe, that Friends were truly a peace-loving people, and that they might be counted upon in this crisis to demonstrate their ideals by presenting a united front against the force method and in favor of the brotherhood and justice method of dealing with other nations.

But it is now evident that all this was mere assumption in the case of a rather considerable number of Friends, especially in the Eastern States. The favorable response to our appeal to Friends to let their wishes on the military preparedness question be known to their Congressmen has been most gratifying. We received word from about seventy-five today who had written their representatives in Congress. Every mail brings some of our report cards, as well as letters from Friends who want to give more information than a post card will carry. The other side of the case for Friends in the "preparedness" agitation is that we also get letters—we have rather a formidable number of them—from those who strongly favor increasing the military establishment of the country and who have no sympathy with the efforts of this headquarters, and that is putting it mildly so far as some of the letters are concerned. We have been accused of a number of things considered very bad, from mistaken judgment to being traitors and having the backing of Germans. And we have been informed in one case that our activities have caused a Friend to be ashamed of his membership in the Society, and in another that "if there is any considerable number of Friends who believe as you do, I will have to give up my membership."

All sorts of things have been written to us by way of approving an increase in both the land and sea forces of the military establishment. The degree of increase favored has ranged all the way from approval of the Hay bill, providing for 140,000 men in the regular army, to a navy greater than that of Great Britain.

The above has not been written in any spirit of condemnation. Although it has been something of a surprise and shock to discover so much and such pronounced disapproval of what was thought to be the Friendly position regarding international relations, we must grant every Friend the privilege of forming his own opinions. However, the facts that we have discovered surely ought to cause some deep thinking and heart-searching.

In the meantime steady progress has been made in the last week by the Congressional committees having the two most important "preparedness" measures in charge. The joint conference committee is now ready to report back to the two houses the compromise army bill, and it will probably come up tomorrow. Its provisions have been published in the newspapers. They include a standing army of 175,000 men, exclusive of certain auxiliary features of the army, which make a total of more than 200,000 men; the federalized National Guard of 425,000 men and provisions for summer camps and military training in schools and colleges, besides a twenty-million-dollar government nitrate plant. The prediction among Congressmen is that the bill will very soon be passed after it is reported, in both the Senate and House.

On next Fifth-day, the 18th, the Naval Affairs Committee of the House is to meet for the purpose of voting on questions of increase in the naval program. The so-called five-year-program involving $500,000,000 in expenditures in the next five years as recommended by Secretary Daniels, will also be considered. There is strong opposition to the proposition in the Committee on the ground that its adoption would definitely place this country in the naval expansion race with foreign powers and that it would vastly and unreasonably increase the navy of this country, besides giving entirely too much power and liberty to the naval authorities. Besides all this the very serious question is raised as to whether the adoption of a five-year program just at this time would not be a grave mistake in the light of the possibility of a move on the part of leading nations at the close of the European war to reduce rather than to increase armaments. The committee is very much divided on the question of a program to be presented to Congress. Friends should write in opposition to an increase in the size of the navy to Chairman Lemuel P. Padgett, or their own member if he is among the following list: Joshua F. C. Talbott, Daniel J. Riordan, Samuel J. Tribble, Walter L. Hensley, Frank Buchanan, Finley H. Gray, Oscar Callaway, John R. Connelly, Archibald C. Hart, Thomas S. Butler, Ernest W. Roberts, Wm. J. Browning, John R. Farr, Fred A. Britten, Patrick H. Kelley, Wm. D. Stephens and Sydney Mudd, all The Capitol, Washington, D. C.

Later: The Committee on Naval Affairs has since voted against the five-year naval plan, but will recommend the building of several ships in 1917.—The Editor.

The First Necessity—A Promoter.

He must be vitally interested in the meeting and in some subject with which the meeting should be acquainted. He may or may not be a member of the meeting.

(a) He should approach those most likely to respond.

(b) He should not take those overloaded with other church duties.

(c) He should make a personal canvass of those he wants to join.

(d) He should not coax, but plainly state the purpose, plan, time required, and possibilities of the class.

2.—The Leader.

The leader should be energetic, industrious and tactful. He should in no way pose as a dictator, but as an instrument by which one member can pass his thought on to his neighbor. The leader's great concern should be to so guide the discussion that each member will discover for himself the kernel of truth in the lesson.

3.—Course.

The course should be chosen early. Send to the Young Friends Board at Dunreith, Indiana for courses. State whether the subject desired is Missionary, Home or Foreign, Peace, Friends History, and polity, or other subjects. Announcements of text books and other literature will be sent free of charge.

NEWS.

"We are planning a summer campaign in Vermillion Grove Quarterly Meeting. We expect to hold meetings at the five different points where there are no societies, and then go to the weak societies. A leader was appointed for each meeting, letting the leader arrange for the service, getting any helpers they want. We also decided that each society should take the responsibility of their Sunday night service occasionally throughout the summer."

"All over the world during the last twenty-five years there has been an aroused interest in religious matters and a social concern affecting the Society of Friends known as the Young Friends' Movement. It is not centered in any one place, and belongs to no one group, but every young Friend who is thus awakened is a part of it. Realizing that the world problems of today are challenging the Society of Friends to a more earnest and consecrated Christian life, many young Friends are feeling the need for closer fellowship with others."

SUGGESTED SOCIAL.

Mix Missions into the monthly social.

1. Dress person in native costume. Blankets or check calico can be made into costumes easily.

2. Sing familiar songs in foreign tongue.

3. Read letter from native. His broken English will hold attention. Local person can write letter as if he were in foreign country.

4. Play Missionary games. These can be learned from the Missionary Review.

5. Serve supper of rice, tea, raw fish and other articles of Missionary diet. Eat with chopsticks or the fingers.

THE MUSIC COMMITTEE.

This is one of the most important departments of Endeavor work. The chairman should be a consecrated Endeavorer who will plan with the President of the Society, the Prayer Meeting and Lookout Committee Chairmen in arranging music for the meetings. Every hymn should bear upon the theme of the meeting. They should be sung in deep spirit or not at all. Seek—1, spiritual uplift; 2, dignity; 3, variety.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic, "The Consecration of Money." Job. 27:1-23. (Consecration Meeting)

Verse 19, "He lieth down rich, but he shall not be gathered to his fathers." Christ does not oppose riches. He condemns a selfish use of them. A selfish rich man is not to be hated any more than a drunken pauper. He is to be pitied and helped.

Every Endeavorer should consecrate his money to God. This includes earned money or that received from parents.

"Give! as the morning that grows out of heaven;

Give! as the waves when the channel is riven;

"Give as the free air and sunshine are given;

Lavishly, utterly, joyfully give!"

Listen not to a tale-bearer or slanderer, for he tells thee nothing out of good will; but as he discovereth of the secrets of others, so he will of thine in turn.—Socrates.

PLANS THAT WORK

The help of readers of The American Friend is needed in connection with this department of the paper. Will you not send to the Assistant Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions a brief description of any plans which you may have used or have seen used successfully in increasing interest in missions or in getting larger missionary offerings or in helping people to see their responsibility and privilege of helping carry the Gospel unto all the world? We won't promise to print everything you send, but if you will write briefly about something that has actually been done, the chances are that it will be used and it may prove to offer just the suggestion that is needed by the missionary workers in some other locality.

In this connection we take pleasure in printing the following article. What has been done at Whittier can be done in scores of other places.

Mission Study Successful at Whittier

Early in the year, a Normal Mission Study Class was organized to train leaders who might, in turn, organize and conduct mission study groups later in the year. This Normal Class consisted of fourteen members under the able leadership of B. Willis Beede. After the class had completed the course in "The King's Highway" eleven study groups were formed, meeting each week for six consecutive weeks, with a total enrollment of 114 members. These entered enthusiastically upon the study of "The King's Highway," making a systematic, thorough investigation of the various countries presented. After the book had been completed, a public program was given at one of the regular sessions of the local W. F. M. S. with a map exercise, showing Friends missions all over the world, locating the workers at each station. Interesting facts in each chapter were emphasized by different speakers, three of whom were in native costume of the country represented. Many testimonies were also given as to the benefits gained by attendance at the classes: an increase of knowledge, an added zeal, an enlarged vision and quickening of the spiritual life.

Many members of the church attended these study groups who were not members of the W. F. M. S., but some have since joined. We feel that the cause of missions has received a strong impetus as a result of this work, many becoming interested in the subject who were never interested before. The women of the church are more closely united by having studied together the deplorable conditions of their less favored sisters in heathen lands.

Aside from this, a reading contest of six missionary books has been enthusiastically engaged in by many of the women.

GOOD NEWS FROM MEXICO

C. Victoria, Tampas, Mexico.
April 24, 1916.

Dear Friends:

I am taking a moment to drop you a line to let you know that I am still here and that all is well. I know of nothing alarming that would even remotely indicate the necessity of my leaving here. I am beginning to feel that even if there should be a break between the two nations I would be safer right here than anywhere between here and the border or even on the border itself. Everyone here treats me with the greatest respect and consideration and even when discussing the possibility of intervention they do so with as much calmness as if I were one of themselves instead of an American. There are several other Americans here and they all feel the same so far as I've heard them express themselves. I feel that so long as men who are here on private business are not afraid that we who are here on the Lord's business ought not to get frightened more easily than they. So that unless I get a pretty plain indication that He wants me to do otherwise, I shall continue at the work as best I can.

School continues with good attendance, likewise the Sunday School. Opportunities for preaching the Gospel are coming frequently and in unexpected places. Men are beginning to inquire about the Way of Life, but "there are many adversaries." The Spiritists have made great inroads upon those who were disposed to believe in the Gospel of Christ and have led many astray, even some of our members. But thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory, most of the latter have been reclaimed and some others have been converted. Two weeks ago one man professed conversion and last night the man who guards the railroad switch on our ranch and a friend of his professed faith in Christ as their Savior. The switchman buried his little baby last Saturday and this gave us an opportunity to hold a short funeral service at his house. His wife and the wife of his friend do not yet seem to grasp the truth, though they are interested.

Sincerely yours,

R. S. TICE.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF FRIENDS IN CUBA

The Annual Conference of Friends (Native Church) of eastern Cuba was held at Holguin, April 18-21, 1916. Good-sized delegations represented Banes, Gibara and Puerto Padre and several came from the smaller stations. The total number of visitors was sixty-two. In all, there were ninety-seven registered delegates. A few of the visitors and many from Holguin attended one or more sessions, but did not register. The evening sessions were purely evangelistic and the church was filled every night in spite of all the other attractions offered in the city during "Holy Week."

One notable feature of the Conference was the active part taken by the native workers, and their efficiency. Jose Angulo, a senior at Cristo this year, very ably presided and Luisa Guijarro, one of our Mexican teachers, made a most efficient secretary. Alberto Lopez, assistant pastor at Gibara and president-elect of the Conference for the coming year, preached a very creditable sermon at one of the evening meetings, as did also Jose Reyes, the faithful pastor at Velasco and Bocas.

As usual, the papers and discussions were centered largely around the various phases of the work: Evangelistic, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and Day Schools. The matter of self-support and self-propagation also received considerable attention.

One afternoon was devoted to special conferences by sections, the four groups being designated as Pastors, Teachers, Mothers and Young People. Especially notable among them was the Mothers' Meeting. Mrs. Jones, who presided, had a very practical and helpful program arranged. Mrs. Martin and Mrs. McClean, acting as local committee, had by printed announcements and personal invitation, interested the mothers of the town and about forty responded, some of whom had never been in the church before. The practical suggestions given will doubtless be an inspiration to many of them.

The exhibits of drawing, sewing and other work done by the children in the day schools and the Sunday Schools were especially fine and merited the favorable comment of all who saw them. They were very much appreciated by the public school teachers who came to inspect them.

After three days of very helpful fellowship, the Conference closed Friday morning, April 21. Lena A. Hadley read a very searching paper on "The Place of Prayer in Our Work," then followed a time of silent meditation and prayer and the Conference was closed by an earnest prayer by Zenas L. Martin.

Professor Harlow Lindley, of Earlham College was on the program of the Conference on the Teaching of History at Vincennes, Indiana, last week. His subject was "The Old Northwest as a Field for Historical Study."

Plans are being made to hold a young people's assembly at Guilford College, August 14-21.

The many friends of D. W. and Mrs. Edwards, well known Friends of Indianapolis, Indiana, have been brought into deep sympathy with them because of the disappearance of their son, Carroll Edwards, from Earlham College some time during the early morning of April 29. He was an exemplary young man, with good standing in the college, prominent in the Y. M. C. A. and a student volunteer. His continued and unexplained absence is a matter of great concern to all who knew him. Somewhat extensive efforts are being made to locate him.

Felix W. Morley, a graduate of Haverford College and a member of Friends Ambulance Unit, has returned to this country and gave a lecture at Haverford College on Tuesday evening of this week on the subject, "Building a Nation Out of a Rubbish Heap." In a recent address before the Haverford Y. M. C. A. he made a strong argument against preparedness, saying that "the statement that war is inevitable is a confession of cowardice and an unwillingness to face our responsibility." He then declared that "it is the part of America to prove that war is not inevitable, and now is her opportunity."

The American Friend has been asked to announce the biennial meeting of the Friends General Conference (Hicksite) at Cape May, N. J., July 6-13, the purpose being as stated "to advance the principles and increase the influence of the Society of Friends." Edward Jannney, of Baltimore, Chairman of the Conference, and by James H. Atkinson, of Philadelphia, Chairman of the Executive Committee. Programs and further information can be secured from J. Barnard Walton, 140 N. 15th Street, Philadelphia.

Memorial services were held at Earlham College on Wednesday of last week for Prof. David Worth Dennis, who died on the preceding Saturday evening and whose body was cremated at Cincinnati on Tuesday. There was a large attendance from Richmond and vicinity and other places. Impressive and appreciative addresses were given by President Robert L. Kelly, Professors Edwin Morrison and William N. Trueblood, E. Gurney Hill, Timothy Nicholson and James B. Unthank, who are Friends, and by the following citizens of Richmond, who are not Friends: George H. Knollenberg, Dr. Charles S. Bond, S. E. Swayne and William Dudley Foulke. Prayer was offered by Francis Anscombe and a closing prayer by Professor Allen D. Hole. Mildred Barrett sang two appropriate solos. A fuller notice of the life and work of Professor Dennis will be given later.

In this hand-to-hand work there have come to my own soul the sweetest rewards of my ministry.—Goodell.

BIBLE SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

Center—The intermediate class of the secondary division of "Center Friends Sunday School has taken for its name, "Class in the Corner," or C. I. C. At the beginning of the year they were neither organized nor graded, but on January 22 they met and organized, calling themselves the C. I. C. Club, choosing as their motto, "Help the one who is cornered," and for a class song, "Brighten the corner where you are." They organized with twelve members, but have since grown to sixteen and hope to "Help some one who is cornered" and thereby add to their present number. Shortly after the organization they were enrolled as a graded class, using the graded lessons. This has secured better home study work. They have their certificate framed and hanging on the wall of their class room with their pennant. Their teacher, Moses Mendenhall, has adopted the star honor roll, which is proving very satisfactory. There are five different colored stars, gold, silver, red, blue and green, each counting for a certain percent. A gold star is a perfect record, a silver star is 85 percent, red is 60 percent, blue is 45 percent and a green star is only 20 percent. None desire a green star.

They hold their club meetings every month at the different homes of the members, alphabetically arranged. These meetings are becoming very interesting, as it is the aim of the committee on entertainment to arrange programs which will be beneficial as well as entertaining. For instance, at the last meeting one feature of the program was the uniting and reading of continued stories. These were very good. At their next meeting four of the members have volunteered to learn selections to be given in a miniature oratorical contest, as one feature of the evening. Owing to their heavy work in school they have not had time to engage in some lines of work which they hope to take up later. They comprise some of the best talent in the Sunday School and we hope and trust they will be a great help to the church and Christian Endeavor Society of which about half of them are members now. We are expecting great things from this class.

The Center Friends Sunday School observed decision day April 23. There were five decisions for Christ, four of which were members of this class.

This makes a total of eleven Christians in the class. In connection with their club meetings they are starting a mission study class, taking as their text book, "Livingston the Pathfinder." We earnestly solicit the prayers of God's people for this class, that they may develop spiritually and become pillars in the church.

EVANGELISTIC DEPARTMENT

Although meetings have been slow in sending in their reports of the work at large for this page, there has been a normal condition of activity over the Yearly Meeting for the past two months. Much sickness and bad roads interfered with the attendance in many cases during the winter, not only at the regular services, but also when special meetings were being held.

A series of meetings at Grinnell resulted in thirty souls coming to the altar. E. L. McCargar was in charge, but his work was broken into by the death of his father. However, Lurana Terrell took his place while he was away. Brother and Sister Sopher are seeking to carry the work forward and are seeing some results, among them being several accessions to membership.

After the Grinnell meetings closed, Brother McCargar conducted a series of meetings at H Street, Oskaloosa, with good results. He reports: "We surely saw the salvation of our God manifested in the old-time way at H Street mission. Several fathers and mothers were converted who were never saved before; one evening, during the song service, a mother came to the front and was gloriously saved." The following Friday night, after the meetings closed, they had more than sixty persons present at a cottage prayer meeting and they report a wonderful time. Brother McCargar is now taking a much needed rest after years of faithful and strenuous service.

Alvin Hoskins recently conducted a series of meetings at Richland, which proved a blessing to many. He is also rendering good service by giving illustrated peace and missionary lectures.

Blue Point Church, which was built in 1868, was closed for several years, owing to different causes. About a year ago, Laura A. Haisley began to hold meetings there under considerable difficulties. There were no lights, nor stoves, nor seats, and for almost a year the house was seated with planks, supported by packing cases. There are now a good furnace, gasoline lamps and new pews installed and the building is in good shape for home mission work. It was rededicated last month and all the money needed for renovating, etc., was subscribed.

The General Superintendent, besides attending Quarterly Meetings, has held quite a number of one-day conferences in various parts of the Yearly Meeting.

Pleasant Plain—Dr. D. M. Edwards attended both services at this place on Sunday, April 16. It was a nice day and a good audience greeted him. He also attended the afternoon service at Walnut meeting. On all three occasions he was favored with great power and liberty in proclaiming a full salvation. His clear and forceful presentation of the fundamental truths of the Gospel was greatly appreciated by all who heard him. We trust that he may be led this way again soon.

On the 23d of April, fourteen members of the Gospel team, in teams of two men each, spent the afternoon in visiting the entire membership of the meeting within driving distance of the meeting house. It was a personal-work canvass. Nothing was talked of but the work of the church and the religious life of the family. Cards were used and one filled out for each family visited, by means of which information concerning the religious condition of the families was obtained. The work was a blessing to the teams as well as to those visited. About forty families were visited.

C. E. DEPARTMENT.

The new Society at Middle River near Indianola in Ackworth Quarter, organized on March 5, is getting along nicely. Mrs. Ermile Hunt, of Carlisle is president and Mabel Pratt of the same place is corresponding secretary. There is a total membership of 35, of which 17 are active and 18 associate. Ora W. Carrell held conferences there on April 22.

Smyrna, which was reorganized this year, reports that they are in better condition than ever before. They have interesting meetings and enjoy the work.

Motor, with Everett Sams, of Milo as president, has a new efficiency chart and will reorganize their Society on this basis.

Ackworth, organized last year, has Edith Smith as president. There are a number of junior members organized under the junior committee of the C. E. with a senior as chairman of the committee. They have meetings and socials for the juniors and do social service in the nature of visiting the sick and taking flowers.

Ora W. Carrell held a conference at Indianola, where the work is encouraging. The meetings are good.

Ora W. Carrell gave two addresses at the Tenth District Convention at Ottumwa about the first of May, and two at Oskaloosa at the Eighth District Convention. All of these were much appreciated and proved helpful.

A missionary play, "If they only knew", was given by the Eighth District Conference by members of Oskaloosa intermediate and senior Societies. Many people spoke highly of the girls' work.

Remember the State Convention at Sioux City in June.

FIELD NOTES

Des Moines, Ia.—The brotherhood of the Friends Church held its last meeting of the spring on Wednesday night, May 10. All the Friends were invited to attend this meeting. H. C. Evans, who went from Des Moines with the Ford Peace Party to Europe, gave the address of the evening. It was listened to with interest and appreciation.

Richard R. Newby, pastor of the meeting here, was the guest of Wm. J. Bryan, who was touring the State of Iowa in behalf of suffrage and temperance under the auspices of the Business Men's Temperance Association in Iowa. The special train reached Des Moines on May 12, and Mr. Bryan gave his address at the Plymouth Congregational Church.

AT SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS

The new Friends Meeting House, corner of South Pine and Warren streets, Salem, Mass., which takes the place of the one destroyed in the great fire of June 25, 1914, was opened on Sunday, May 7, 1916. The attendance was large, the auditorium and anteroom being filled, so that many were obliged to remain standing.

The afternoon service began at 3:30 and was of an exceedingly happy nature. Thomas Wood, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work of the New England Yearly Meeting, presided, and after singing "The Church's One Foundation," Earle J. Harold, of Lynn, read scripture selections and Wilbur K. Thomas, of Boston, offered prayer. Harry Wilkinson, of Lawrence meeting, sang a solo. Thomas Wood gave an interesting historical sketch of Friends in Salem, saying that they have held meetings since 1670, and have been vitally connected with the religious life of Salem ever since. The house that was burned was built

Farmers pay for their land with one year's crop and prosperity was never so great.

Regarding Western Canada as a grain producer, a prominent business man says: "Canada's position today is sounder than ever. There is more wheat, more oats, more grain for feed, 20% more cattle than last year and more hogs. The war market in Europe needs our surplus. As for the wheat crop, it is marvelous and a monument of strength for business confidence to build upon, exceeding the most optimistic predictions."

Wheat averaged in 1915 over 25 bushels per acre
Oats averaged in 1915 over 45 bushels per acre
Barley averaged in 1915 over 40 bushels per acre

Prices are high, markets convenient, excellent land low in price either improved or otherwise, ranging from $12 to $30 per acre. Free homestead lands are plentiful and not far from railway lines and convenient to good schools and churches. The climate is healthful. There is no war tax on land, nor is there any conscription. in 1832 and remodeled in 1903. The new Meeting House is built upon the historic site so long occupied by the Friends.

Cyrus Jones, treasurer of the Building Committee, stated that through the generosity of Friends, not only in Salem, but in other parts of New England, the building has been paid for and was opened free from debt.

Hearty greetings and congratulations were extended by four of the pastors of other denominations in Salem. Josephine H. Carr, the local minister, responded in behalf of Salem meeting and emphasized the fact that the spiritual life of the meeting has been deepened by the trial and discipline of the past two years.

A selection was rendered by a quartet composed of Wilbur K. Thomas of Boston, Earle J. Harold of Lynn, Tom A. Sykes of East Lynn and Harry Wilkinson of Lawrence. Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford College, Haverford, Pa., gave a history of the early settlement of Friends and their experiences in Salem. He spoke of the mission of the Christian church to transform the wilderness into a garden. After a solo by Harry Wilkinson, the meeting closed with a period of silent prayer.

Another large congregation assembled in the evening, taxing the seating capacity of the house. After the devotional exercises, Rufus M. Jones gave the message of the evening, which was based upon the text, "The Grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all."

The new Meeting House is plain, but attractive. The building is of brick with limestone trimmings, and is convenient and well equipped. It has also a well-lighted basement for Bible School and social gatherings. Following the dedication a campaign of special evangelistic services has been planned under the leadership of Lewis E. Smith, of the New England Evangelistic Association.

AT WINCHESTER, INDIANA.

Members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Friends church were considerably surprised Tuesday afternoon, when shortly after arriving at the home of Mrs. Earl Wise, on South street for their regular meeting a delegation of eight ladies from the Muncie Woman's Foreign Missionary society arrived. The local members were informed by Mrs. Wise beforehand that a surprise was in store for them but what it was they could not guess.

Mrs. L. E. Moody president of the local society, turned the meeting over to Mrs. Charles Sweet, president of the Muncie society, and an interesting program was given, including an excellent piano solo and several talks. The leader who had been appointed for the meeting was Mrs. Jennie Miller. Following the program, refreshments were served, which was another surprise, for refreshments are not ordinarily a part of a missionary meeting.

Pink and white roses were used in the decorations. The occasion was most enjoyable, and in fact it was an ideal missionary meeting. Following the meeting the visitors viewed the town for an hour, after which they departed for their homes.

CHURCH AT WORK

Newmarket, Canada—Members and attenders, to the number of over seventy, met in Monthly Meeting on May 11. Reports of a very encouraging nature were read from the College Y. W. C. A., Belgium Relief and Ambulance Work, and the Sabbath School. The latter showed a gain of one hundred and three in attendance, seventy-nine repeating memory verses, nine new scholars and $206.00 collections over last month. This is a very distinct gain and encouraging to all concerned.

The pastoral committee drew attention to the fact that ten out of the twelve months of Alfred Young's term as pastor had elapsed and recommended the meeting to try and retain his services. The company unanimously rose to their feet, signifying their desire that the committee be empowered to act on their behalf in making the necessary arrangements. The whole work of the meeting is so increasing in spiritual vitality and numbers it would be a pity to make a break just now. At the close of the business session the company was entertained by Dr. and Mrs. Firth, by means of a cinematograph show and social hour. Some very interesting travel pictures, etc., were shown. A hearty vote of thanks to entertainers and the singing of the doxology brought a delightful evening to a close.

Friendwood, Texas—The baccalaureate address of Friendwood Academy was delivered on May 14, by Brother Helliard, a Presbyterian minister. It was helpful and inspiring. In the afternoon the large bible class of the middle aged members (and others) held their class meeting at the church. J. W. Barrett, their teacher, gave an able presentation of the position held by Friends on the subject of baptism. Our faithful workers, William and Edith Worth, had charge of the evening services, following the Christian Endeavor meeting.

Allen, Nebraska—The blessing of God upon the earnest efforts of loyal Friends at Springbank meeting has caused much praise and rejoicing. The report read at Quarterly Meeting at Elk Valley announced that every expense had been paid up to date, including a debt carried forward from last year, also the placing of a new parsonage upon the church grounds, with cement cellar and cistern.

A Junior Endeavor has been organized with a membership of more than fifty, also a bible study class was conducted through the winter months, held at the parsonage weekly, and attended by large crowds of young people. The actual membership numbered forty-three beside many visitors. These young people at Easter time sent about fifty-two dozen eggs to the Helping Hand Mission in Sioux City. Our Christian Endeavor Society is reorganized and the active membership now consists entirely of young people, the married folks becoming honorary members.

God is blessing the regular Sunday services in the salvation of sinners and the sanctification of believers. The midweek prayer meetings are being conducted by the married couples who belong to the church, in alphabetical order. The attendance is growing and numbers about forty.

Recently the church people spent a day at the parsonage, at which time the men put up a good fence, plowed the garden, trimmed trees, seeded the yard and otherwise improved the property, while the women cleaned the meeting house and prepared the dinner.

We have a new gospel team, numbering about twenty earnest men, who are finding many opportunities to tell the glad tidings in other communities. They desire the prayers of all earnest Christian people. A mission study class has been formed, which occupies the first half hour at Monthly Meeting. Our year-verse is "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you." Bessie Franc Brown is pastor of this meeting.

Cornwall Quarterly Meeting, held at Milton, N. Y., in April, was a season of spiritual uplift and was largely attended. The peace conference was addressed by Lindley Stevens of Poughkeepsie. The address gave evidence of deep thought and drew the interested attention of the audience. At the meeting for worship on Thursday morning there were helpful messages from ministers representing the local meetings of the Quarter. Lindley Stevens preached an impressive sermon on the second birth. The young Friends of Milton joined with those of the Methodist church in a union Easter service, and the Christian Endeavor Society of that meeting held a birthday social, at which missionary money was raised.

The Christian Endeavors of Clintondale meeting have tested the envelope system of giving and find it a success. The meeting at Clintondale is increasing in numbers and is very much alive.

Alice Stevens of Tillson preached at Stanfordville during the illness of Herbert Hoffman. The meeting at Plattekill, though small in membership, is pressing on to higher things.

Union Springs, N. Y.—"The Hope of the World" was given very effectively on Easter Sunday by the Union Springs Bible School held at Oakwood Seminary. It had been several years since Easter had come during school time at Oakwood, so the day was helpfully observed. An offering was taken for Margaret A. Holme, missionary to China, and was so liberal that it doubles the pledge made for her by the Seminary young people.

On May 3, the pastor, Ida T. Parker, invited the Friends here to her home for a social evening. The occasion was the reception into membership of Yvo Wain, the German teacher at Oakwood Seminary. Note paper in the shape of Quaker bonnets and hats had been prepared for each guest. On the Quaker hats were written interesting items concerning prominent Friends, historical and modern. On the Quaker bonnets were quotations from Friendly sources. Several photographs of Friends were on exhibition and only Quaker books were visible. An enjoyable social time was had and some information of value as well.

Scipio Quarterly Meeting was held at Union Springs in the assembly room of Oakwood Seminary May 5, 6 and 7. On Friday evening the local W. F. M. S. had the evening. A very interesting program was given, at the close of which the mite boxes were opened. The ladies had hoped to have fifteen dollars to add to their missionary offering for the year. A very interesting little ceremony was made a part of the opening of the boxes and they were found to contain twenty-three dollars. A very happy surprise as a result of some extra sacrifice. The missionary offering of this meeting has exceeded previous years.

On Saturday night Dr. James S. Riggs, Professor of New Testament Work in Auburn Theological Seminary, gave an inspiring and instructive lecture on "The Attractive Christ."

William J. Reagan, this year pastor of Poplar Ridge Friends meeting and Principal elect of Oakwood Seminary, was present throughout and gave helpful messages. Especially on Sunday his messages were inspiring and vital, giving to many a new vision of Christ and service.

Ida T. Parker has accepted the invitation of the pastoral committee to serve her sixth year as pastor at Union Springs.

Mooresville, Indiana—White Lick Quarterly Meeting was held at Mooresville, Indiana, May 13 and 14. On Friday evening a banquet for the young people was given, under the auspices of the C. E., with Thomas E. Jones and Chester Reagan as guests. Forty-seven sat down at the banquet table and enjoyed the good things together, after which Chester Reagan and Thomas E. Jones gave inspiring addresses. It is impossible to estimate the good that the young people received from this meeting. The Quarterly Meeting was especially favored by the presence of three visiting Friends, Prof. W. O. Mendenhall, of Earlham College, Leannah Hobson, of Fountain City and Mabel Quigg, of Darlington, Ind.

Urbana, Ohio—Newton Browning, pastor at Westland, Ohio, brought the message to Urbana Friends Sunday, May 21. It brought much blessing to all who heard him.

The ladies of the Friends Church at Urbana, Ohio, have organized a missionary society which is rapidly growing in interest and efficient service. They are expecting that much service for Him may be done in this branch of the church work here.

Lesson—Acts 15:36—16:15.

Golden Text—Come over into Macedonia and help us. Acts 16:19.

After the conclusion of the conference at Jerusalem Paul and his party journeyed back to Antioch, where the results of the visit were reported to the church. For some time Judas and Silas continued with them and then returned to Jerusalem. How long after this it was before Paul felt called upon to start on the second journey we cannot say, but the time came. Here follows the difference of opinion about taking Mark, the result of which was that Barnabas taking Mark sailed away to Cyprus. Paul sent for Silas—or he may have returned to Antioch in the meantime—and these two took the land route through Syria and Cilicia. It is quite possible that there were churches here and there throughout these provinces, for Paul had undoubtedly done some effective preaching in this region prior to his call by Barnabas to Antioch. From here they passed through the cities visiting the churches established on the first journey. Timothy was added to the party at Lystra. Paul was now ready for new fields in which to preach the gospel. To what point should he go?

We have here an interesting situation. Paul had evidently planned to go to Ephesus, but was not privileged to carry out his plan. He next selected Bithynia, but again he was turned aside and at last went to Troas. Here in a vision he received an intimation which he accepted as a positive direction and taking Luke he crossed over into Europe. Twice he had received negative leadings, the third was a positive one. In some such way does God seem to have directed this great evangelist. How seldom do we take incidents which thwart us as God's method of directing us into the right channels.

There are now at least four men in the party. Paul, Silas, Timothy and Luke, men who became most prominent in later mission and Christian service, Timothy, the favorite "son" of Paul, and Luke, the author of the Gospel, which bears his name, and the Acts of the Apostles. Here too begin the famous "WE" sections of the Acts. It would be well to read the rest of Acts, noting these "we" sections just to see where and when Luke has a part in the active work.

This is often said to have been the beginning of the Christian Church in Europe. This may be and probably is true, but it is quite possible that some Christians had already carried the message to some points in Italy. We might well expect some Christian merchants to tell the story in Rome at a very early date and thus to have sown the seeds of that Church even before Paul and his party landed in Philippi.

After arriving in Philippi Paul as usual sought out the meeting place of the Jews. But there was no synagogue here, only a place of prayer down by the riverside. We can only guess that there was not a sufficient number of interested men to form the regular organization, hence the place of prayer. There might be a thousand devoted women, but unless there were enough men no Synagogue could be established.

Lydia, a worshiper of God, was the first convert. She was not a Macedonian, but a resident of Thyatira in the province of Asia. She seems to have been a woman of means and was able to offer her home to Paul as a lodging place. She had undoubtedly accepted much of Judaism and was ready for the higher spiritual teaching of Christianity.

You and I must not complain when our plans break down—if we have done our part. That probably means that the plans of One who knows more than we do have succeeded.—E. E. Hale.

When you come down from the summits you do not come away from God. There is no task in life in which you do not need him. The workbench needs his light as truly as the cloister. —Phillips Brooks.

Helping Suffering Europe

The Federal Council of Churches in America issued an appeal last week to the ministers and churches of the thirty denominations, constituting the Council, in behalf of stricken and suffering Europe. The Council purposes for consideration and co-operation—

(1) A nation-wide effort for the relief of the sufferers by the war in Europe and Asia; and

(2) A movement that shall prepare our Christian churches to play the vital part that belongs to them in the Period of Reconstruction and Reconciliation that must follow the close of the war.

The Council speaks of the present situation as "the greatest challenge and test that the Christian churches have ever faced—a test involving the right of moral and spiritual leadership." The purpose is not to set up any new relief organization in addition to the many already in existence, "but to supplement their work and impel a really unselfish giving by bringing the facts home to the hearts and consciences of the millions of members in our constituency."

"The Federal Council asks your aid in bringing this movement before the various bodies of your communion that may meet this spring and autumn, and securing for it such action as shall commend it most effectively to the local churches. The Council believes profoundly that the crisis, which involves all the Churches of Christ and the progress of Christianity itself, justifies this unusual demand upon your personal assistance as a Christian leader.

"This is a time in which there are no precedents. The Divine call is upon the churches to do something large, worthy of their Master and Lord, something that shall manifest His spirit to the world and prove the reality of Christian discipleship and brotherhood. We feel sure that when you know the steps that led to this action by the Federal Council, and realize the immediate needs and the yet wider and more lasting service that our churches may render when peace has come, you will join us in the effort to bring the entire membership into co-operation in this noble work, even to the point of sacrificial giving.

"The Federal Council, in view of the facts herewith presented and the immediate necessities of the situation, urges you to bring this matter before your people on Memorial Sunday, May 28, 1916, or on as near a Sunday as may be practicable, and take an offering as an initial expression of sympathetic interest. This offering may be designated for any of the causes here presented, and the money may be sent directly to the Treasurer of the Relief Committee chosen. A list of leading Relief organizations of wide scope is given in the addenda, as a guide. If advice is desired in this regard, it will be gladly given by the General Secretary of the Federal Council, who has in his office full information as to the most pressing needs.

"The time is short? Yes, but long enough for starvation, deprivation and death to do their work.

"Some churches do not favor special appeals. But a crisis transcends all ordinary rules and even church rules. The churches that catch the vision and rise to meet this world challenge will revitalize their spirituality.

"This is where giving enriches and withholding impoverishes."

The destitute and suffering countries referred to as needing relief are Belgium, Northern France, Serbia, Poland, East Prussia and Armenia. A list of relief committees is given, information about which and many other matters pertaining to this subject can be had by addressing the Secretary, Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, 105 East 22d Street, N. Y.

BORN.

Taylor—At New Britain, Conn., April 26, 1916, to George B. and Winifred Trueblood Taylor, a son, Benjamin Trueblood.

DIED.

Beals—Cora E. Beals, daughter of Arthur and Martha Bufkin, was born at Lynnville, Iowa, June 14, 1869, and died of tuberculosis, at Greenleaf, Idaho, March 16, 1916. She was a birthright Friend and a faithful member of the Friends Church. She married I. J. Beals of Platte, S. D., in 1891. They resided there for almost six years, then moved to Searsboro, Iowa, from which place, after a residence of 11 years, they moved to Greenleaf, Idaho. Her faithfulness in the church has been an inspiration to many. Her endowment of gifts was used freely in the service of the Master. The beauty and strength of her character were evident to all. She was laid to rest in the Greenleaf cemetery.

Beals—Isaac J. Beals, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Beals, was born near Richland, Iowa, April 14, 1857, and died at his home, Greenleaf, Idaho, March 27, 1916. His childhood and youth were spent in Iowa, and his young manhood in South Dakota, where he married Cora Bufkin, in 1891. In early manhood he was converted, and joined the Congregational Church, but in 1891, he joined Friends, and has been a faithful and consistent member ever since. His life has been filled with service for the church and community, and he had been interested in every movement for the betterment of conditions about him. He served as a member of the District School Board and as Superintendent of the Bible School, and he was deeply interested in Greenleaf Academy, being President of the Board of the Academy at the time of his death. It was largely due to the interest of himself and wife that the community is indebted to Greenleaf Academy. He leaves four children, two brothers and three sisters, his wife having preceded him to the better land eleven days before.

Coffin—Henry W. Coffin, a native of Indiana, son of Levi and Catherine Coffin (of underground railroad fame), was struck by a street car in Washington City, April 29, 1916, and died the next morning. For many years he has been a resident of Washington and an active member of the community. As a result of his early training he has been, during his long and useful life, a friend not merely of the colored race, but of all whose circumstances require the sympathy and practical aid of their fellowmen. From Indiana he moved to Cincinnati where he married Sarah E. Amick. From there he moved to Washington City in 1881. At one time he was appointed to have charge of the government exhibit at the New Orleans Exposition. He was a noble, self-sacrificing Christian man, who showed in his daily walk and conversation his love for God and the principles of the Christian religion as represented by the Society of Friends, of which he was so long an honored member.

Dean—David Dean, son of Barton and Hannah Dean, was born in Carroll county, Ohio, August 28, 1828, and died at Friendswood, Texas, April 1, 1916. He married Ann Stratton in 1850. She having died in 1902, he married Phoebe A. Knight two years later. He lived a long life of devotion to his Maker, and was a true and useful member of the Friends Church, having served as elder for a number of years. He is survived by three children.

Garrity—Dennis Garrity, a valuable member of Carmel Meeting, Indiana, died at his country home near Carmel, of pneumonia, April 3, 1916, aged 73 years. He was a loyal member of the church, an honored citizen, industrious and ambitious. He leaves the widow, three daughters and one son. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Lewis E. Stout.

Gilbert—Eusebia Esther Gilbert, youngest daughter of Ross and Olive Gilbert, died suddenly at their home in Haviland, Kansas, March 25, 1916, aged 10 years, 8 months and 25 days. She left the evidence that she was ready for the change.

Greene—Clinton David Greene, son of Albert W. and Elizabeth Stanfield Greene, died at Phoenix, Arizona, April 3, 1916, aged 37 years. He was a graduate of Penn College, class of 1905.

Hall—Richard Hall, a member of Sand Creek Monthly Meeting, Indiana, son of John and Elizabeth Hall (both deceased), was born near Azalia, Indiana, October 21, 1847, and died at the home of his nieces, Achsah and Lizzie M. Cox, near Elizabethtown, Indiana, March 30, 1916. He was a cripple from birth and for the past four years was confined to his room, his suffering at times being almost beyond endurance. He bore his pain, however, with Christian fortitude. He attended Sabbath School and church as long as he could pull himself up through the door, and after that he would sometimes drive his buggy close to the church door, that he might hear the preaching and singing.

Hathaway—Henry Bailey Hathaway, whose home was at Watkins, N. Y., and who was a member of Farmington Monthly Meeting, died in San Diego, Cal., April 30, 1916, aged 74 years. Burial took place at Farmington, N. Y., the services being conducted by Reuben J. Payne, pastor of the Meeting.

Hawkes—Tacie Pratt Hawkes, daughter of Nathan D. and Tacy P. Hawkes, was born at Lynn, Mass., in 1850, and died at her home in North Saugus, Mass., February 26, 1916. She was a beloved member of the Meeting at Lynn. She was a devoted Christian, of a gentle and retiring disposition. Debarred by serious lameness from activity in service, she was interested in the work of the church and the welfare of all. She always manifested deep sympathy for those who suffered affliction.

Oren—Jesse N. Oren was born in Clinton county, Ohio, on December 25, 1835, and died at his country home near Gurneyville, Ohio, April 7, 1916. As a young man, he attended Antioch College, presided over by Horace Mann. Later he taught school, and enlisted for the Civil war in the Fortieth Ohio. He was once a prisoner in Libby Prison. He was elected three times as a member of the Ohio House of Representatives, and served four years in the Upper House as Senator. He served six years as a member of the State Board of Charities. He was a birthright Friend, and an influential member of the church. He is survived by the widow and three children.

Little Victims of the War

Do ye hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years?
They are leaning their young heads against their mothers,

And that cannot stop their tears.
The young lambs are bleating in the meadows,
The young birds are chirping in the nest,
The young fawns are playing with the shadows,
The young flowers are blowing toward the west—
But the young, young children, O my brothers,
They are weeping bitterly!
They are weeping in the playtime of the others,
In the country of the free.

Do you question the young children in the sorrow
Why their tears are falling so?
The old man may weep for his to-morrow
Which is lost in Long Ago;
The old tree is leafless in the forest,
The old year is ending in the frost,
The old wound, if stricken, is the sorest,
The old hope is hardest to be lost:
But the young, young children, O my brothers,
Do you ask them why they stand
Weeping sore before the bosoms of their mothers,
In the old Fatherland?

Only

Only a seed, but it chanced to fall
In a little cleft of a city wall,
And, taking root, grew bravely up,
Till a tiny blossom crowned its top.

Only a thought, but the work it wrought
Could never by tongue or pen be taught,
For it ran through a life, like a thread of gold,
And the life bore fruit a hundred fold.

Only a word, but 'twas spoken in love,
With a whispered prayer to the Lord above,
And the angels in heaven rejoiced once more,
For a new-born soul "entered in by the door."

How Can You Help The American Friend

These are a few suggestions, one or more of which ought to appeal mightily to a number of our subscribers.

1. Help the management by soliciting an advertisement or two from some reputable firm of your acquaintance. For instance, if you or your friend are going to purchase an automobile within the near future, arrange with the firm that a substantial amount of the purchase price shall be taken out in advertising, to be paid over to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for advertising space at the ordinary rates, which can be secured by addressing the manager at Richmond, Indiana. The same suggestion will apply to any other purchase where the investment amounts to something substantial.

2. Make note of the special offer of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to new subscribers for the next six months for fifty cents (announcements in another column) and endeavor to get a few new subscriptions under this offer. If you do not have time to see individuals personally, why not send in a check for two or three dollars with the names and addresses of persons to receive the paper for the six months indicated? This offer is for new subscriptions only.

3. Say a good word for the paper both publicly and privately as occasion requires and try to impress non-subscribers with the fact that they are losing much by not reading the paper weekly.

4. Send in brief news items of important events occurring in your meeting (unless your meeting is being frequently reported already). What has proved to be a great blessing to you locally will be an inspiration to others if they can only know about it.

5. Send us your suggestions, criticisms or otherwise, that will help us better to know what is needed and what our readers want. We cannot always comply with suggestions and criticisms, but out of the multiplicity of them we will be able to produce a better and more readable paper.

Remember

Remember that under our existing arrangement all correspondence about subscriptions, change of address, etc., should go to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Urbana, Ohio. All other correspondence relating to news matter, reports, contributed articles, advertising and general correspondence should be addressed to Richmond, Indiana.

For Young Friends—and Others

We are able herewith to announce a bit of good news—or what ought to be regarded as good news—to the thousands of Friends in America who, through their failure to read their denominational paper, are not keeping up to date with the movements of our branch of the church. From now until the first of July we will accept new subscriptions at the rate of fifty cents each for six months. This is a trial offer, made in the hope that many hundreds of our membership will be induced to read the paper for this period. It has been suggested that many of our Young Friends will be glad to participate in an active canvass to secure results under this special offer. Hundreds of our young people are becoming interested in the life and activities of Friends as they have not been before and many of them are seeking ways and means by which they can help the church.

We are not able to offer a commission at this price, but as THE AMERICAN FRIEND belongs to the Five Years Meeting and is one of the important agencies of the church in bringing new life to the membership and in stimulating interest in every department of church activity, it seems to be very proper to suggest that young Friends and others can serve the church at this time in no better way than by devoting a little time for the next few days to a canvass for new subscriptions under the terms of this special offer.

Of course this does not excuse others from participating in this canvass, and we ask pastors and others interested to make note of this special offer and bring the same to the attention of our various congregations throughout the different Yearly Meetings.

An Unparalleled Opportunity

In last week's issue of The American Friend, extended reference was made to the recent appeal of the Federal Council of Churches in America in behalf of suffering Europe. It is unfortunate if any one of our readers has failed to take note of the significance of that appeal. In a comprehensive way that is startling, the officers of the Federal Council have confronted the Christian church in America with a stupendous task. The relief that is sought for immediate needs, imperative as is this claim upon our national beneficence, is secondary in importance to the higher claim that is made upon our Christian civilization for constructive helpfulness when the war shall have ended.

The Federal Council is not alone asking the American church to play the part of the good Samaritan toward a bleeding and starving continent, but it would utilize this humanitarian act as the only practical means of guaranteeing a higher service to world civilization when Europe is brought face to face with its well nigh impossible task of continental and national reconstruction. For every dollar that the American church invests now in food and clothing and shelter for the relief of the millions abroad, we are contributing toward a larger influence which American Christianity is bound to exert in the ultimate rehabilitation of Europe. Whatever else the war has shown, it has revealed the inevitable breakdown of a religion that is largely ritualistic and formal and of a civilization that is builded upon materialistic foundations. The salvation of Europe will come through the incorporation of new ideals, both of religion and of civilization, and herein the American church must have a message that is both positive and constructive under penalty of loss both to Europe and ourselves if we fail.

It is significant of our more modern experiences that the church—and more particularly the American church—is being forced into a cosmopolitanism of service that is demanding in large degree both a reconstruction of methods and ideals. As in no other age the church is by force of compulsion being driven to become a decisive factor in world civilization. Henceforth the provincial is the surest guarantee of failure to any church that fosters it. The primal appeal of the church will of course continue to be for individual redemption, not for selfish ends, however, but that others "may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." At a time when some men are concerned about national honor and national defense, the church needs to voice the higher ideals of patriotism, showing that the demands of world patriotism, embodying the welfare of the brotherhood of humanity, are in some respects superior to national patriotism. For as "none of us liveth to himself," so no nation in these modern times can plan its course exclusive of the interests of other nations with which it has to do.

Internationalism is the essential product of good will and human brotherhood—which Christianity alone can propagate. The church is bound, therefore, by the highest obligations to escape the bonds of provincialism or provincial patriotism and proclaim the doctrine of world brotherhood. For the church will not have fulfilled its highest mission until it has brought the gospel within the acceptance of every man and every woman and every child whom God has made. Not alone therefore because the fortunes of the church in America and Europe are inextricably linked by ties of blood and mutual self interest, but because of the higher interest which a free and progressive church must have in the destiny of all mankind, the American church in this time of world disaster is obligated by the highest motives of good will to extend its hand in service and benediction to suffering humanity abroad. And what will do so much to open the way for the highest and best forms of helpful service in the reconstruction of Europe as some such great sacrificial act as is suggested in this appeal from the Federal Council of Churches?

Just now American stock is hardly at par in any belligerent land. In the stress of such times as these, when the temptation to evade the claims of international law is so great, so far as the struggling nations are concerned, it is hardly possible for the absolutely neutral nation, which insists upon universal obedience to law, to retain the cordial good will of others. In connection with this appeal of the Federal Council, the opportunity is offered to our American church to redeem the situation by acts of mercy and good will upon such a gigantic scale, as will bring a reaction in Europe in the form of a wave of gratitude and good will to America, that will make American Christianity a welcome helper in the belligerent lands when the war shall have ended.

The church in America cannot afford to turn a deaf ear to this timely appeal. Whatever the jingo goes may continue to do in proclaiming that the chief concern of the United States is to look out for itself, the church at least must adopt a more Christian point of view. It is the time of all times when the church in Europe which is bleeding at every pore can be made to feel, not only that it has a true friend in the church in America, but that this same American church is ready to go to the extreme limit in its readiness to help and to build up, and to contribute to the rehabilitation of a broken European civilization.

Facing an opportunity like this, what shall be the attitude of the Society of Friends? Time was when the messages of this body of believers contributed not only to the character building of individuals and communities, but of cities and states and nationalities as well. Have we a message less vital today or can we assume that others have appropriated its spirit and freshness to be transmitted by other methods more efficient than our own? Is not that which Europe needs most today, in the way of high Christian idealism and practical spiritual truth, the very thing that has constituted the soul of Quakerism throughout its history? From such a task and from such a need shall we turn aside and admit our inability to impress upon present day civilization the elements that have made Quakerism glorious?

To meet an opportunity like this successfully, Quakerism must bear the stamp of a National entity. The world will be affected but little by a denomination that stands for one thing in the east and quite another in the west, that is conservative here and progressive yonder, that—and we say it in all sincerity and in no spirit of personal criticism—allows itself to be rent assunder by theologic controversies, when multitudes are literally dying for want of bread and clothing and sympathy and the friendly spirit of good will and the knowledge that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is waiting to speak to the condition of every needy life. Is there any element of this appeal that is coming with such force to the American church that does not strike a responsive chord throughout Quakerism, not alone as represented by the Five Years Meeting, but in Ohio and Philadelphia as well? Is it not time for the Society of Friends to pull itself together, reuniting its shattered elements for a gospel propaganda that will make its impress felt upon American Christianity as a whole, and through it upon European Christianity as it proceeds to recover itself from the ruins of an unspeakable war?

This is the day of a transcendent opportunity for Friends, whatever its meaning to others. Shall we not enter upon a sacrificial life that will prompt large givings, even to the point of suffering, for the relief of the starving ones abroad, and shall we not contribute our full share of the practice of realistic and positive Christianity, that by the force of our teaching and example will help to lift European civilization to a higher plane?

Shall not the spirit of the call of a new day of opportunity for Quakerism possess and envelop all our Yearly Meetings, just now beginning their sessions of 1916?

There are a number of Friends' meetings, mostly smaller ones, in which there is not a single subscriber to THE AMERICAN FRIEND. We trust that young Friends and others in neighboring Monthly Meetings will make a special effort to bring this offer to the attention of this class of our meetings. We are more convinced than ever before, however, that there are very few meetings indeed where it is not possible to secure at least one and perhaps many new subscriptions under a special offer like this, if the proper effort is made to have the matter presented in a personal way.

We have perhaps seventy-five meetings scattered through the various Yearly Meetings where the pastor or some other interested Friend has been very zealous in looking after the interests of this periodical of the church. There is a far greater number of meetings, however, where apparently little effort has yet been put forth by any one in behalf of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, at least so far as we have any information. It seems probable that during the many years when our denominational papers were controlled by private interests, our membership became so accustomed to feeling no responsibility in the matter that now it is difficult to get our members as a whole to understand that the paper belongs to the entire church, and each one has or should have a direct and immediate interest in its success.

It is not too much to expect a thousand new subscribers by July 1st. We have not fewer than ten thousand Friends' families or parts of families which are not now taking the paper, and we have the fullest assurance that within the period named at least one out of every ten can be put on The American Friend list for the next six months at the nominal price of fifty cents, if only our young Friends and others will be interested enough in the upbuilding of the church to go out after them. Five hundred and twenty pages for fifty cents is a good financial investment under almost any circumstances, but when so much of the material offered deals directly with the progress and upbuilding of the church as a whole and especially of our branch of it, the offer is one than cannot be turned down without distinct loss to any and everyone who does it.

When, in addition, the question of loyalty to an important department of the Five Years Meeting is taken into consideration, we are constrained to believe that we ought by all means to have five thousand additional subscribers instead of the one thousand suggested. One of the best ways to build up the Society of Friends is to build up the subscription list of its denominational paper. Does this not constitute a great task which ought to appeal to all our Young Friends and others?

After Panama. What?

By C. G. McCLEAN.

That is what we are asking ourselves with regard to our work in Cuba, not only Friends, but all the missions represented here. At Panama we preached co-operation and we all shouted "Amen!" We all believe that it is right and want to help bring it about. At the Havana conference, the same thing was preached and we mostly all shouted "Amen!" again, but with not quite the same abandon as at Panama, for we were getting nearer the place to practice our preaching, and questions of ways and means were looming up. It was not old denominational selfishness cropping out, but a frank Christian desire to face the facts and confess the difficulties.

We did not all fall into one another's arms and pledge to do away with all denominationalism and all unite into one evangelical church. We did not feel that we are ready for that yet. But we are determined not only to keep out of one another's way but to adjust our respective territories and activities, so as to cover the whole field in the most thorough and the most economical way. That adjustment must be made carefully and prayerfully. It cannot be done in a moment for the greatest efficiency will doubtless require some shifting of forces and exchange of territory.

A committee was appointed at the Havana-conference to make a thorough survey of the field and to present, within a years' time, its findings and recommendations. This survey will be made with three principal lines of Mission work in view—evangelistic, educational and literature.

The second of these, education, is probably the one that most vitally interests Friends. We are interested in all, and all are important, but the others do not present so great a problem.

What is the educational situation at present? The Methodists have at least four boarding schools; the Episcopalians one, the Presbyterians one and the Baptists one. Besides these there are a number of very good day schools doing, principally, work below high school grade. Most of the pupils in the boarding schools are also at present below high school grade. Friends have four day schools and no boarding schools. This, very briefly, is the present situation. Now, what is the future to be? We hope that this survey of the field will enable us to lay the plans wisely.

No less an authority than John B. Goucher, after attending both the Panama and the Havana conferences, said, "Cuba should have twelve Christian educational centers, one for young men and one for young women in each of the six provinces; or, at least six if they are to be co-educational." That expresses about the opinion of the Havana conference, with the added judgment that there should be one first-class Normal school and one Theological school of high standard for the whole island.

Now we are just getting to the point, so far as Friends are concerned. Granted that the final organization for advanced work will be largely inter-denominational, there remain the primary and preparatory schools to be maintained by the various denominations. We have the primary schools, but do not have the preparatory school. And that is going to be the weak spot in our organization when the complete educational system for the whole island is worked out and put into operation. If we do not have students to send to these educational centers, they will be useless so far as we are concerned. Where are these students coming from—these who are to be our future pastors and teachers, Christian business and professional men, government officials and statesmen? Doubtless the greater part of them will come up through our denominational primary and preparatory schools. And the schools that are able to attract and to hold promising pupils are the ones that will do most to furnish material for the higher courses. As a natural consequence, the missions that maintain the best primary and grade schools are the ones that will get most of the finished product.

Now, if you have followed the argument, you are already asking how Friends stand in this respect. As stated above, Friends have four schools, all well manned (a number of workers from the Mexican field are helping in our schools this year). Three of these schools, Banes, Puerto Padre and Gibara, are all well housed in adequate buildings belonging to the Board. Holguin, with nearly twice as many students as any of the rest, situated in the largest, most central and most progressive town and the only one with much competition by non-Christian schools, is housed in an old, neglected, rented building and under such odds is trying to maintain the dignity of our Mission. This is our weak point. What we need here is a preparatory as well as a primary school, properly housed, in a building that we are not ashamed of and that the people of the community will not be ashamed to patronize.

The Mission decided two years ago that one of our schools should be developed into a preparatory school prepared to receive boarding pupils and that Holguin, because of its central location and other advantages was the place for this school. The Board approved this plan. The next step is to do it. Delays have been caused by one thing and another. The last was to await the outcome of the Panama conference. That is past. Now shall we wait for the findings of our Cuban committee and then wait for them to be discussed, adopted and put into effect? That will take at least two years, and possibly five. And what will happen in the meantime? Things are developing fast in Cuba in these days. New industries are developing almost miraculously and progress is evident on every hand. Parents are seeing the advantages of education and are putting their children into school. The public schools cannot meet the demand, either for quantity or quality. Private schools are springing up, which, if not dominated by the priest, are anti-religious in character. We have one of the latter here in Holguin whose evil influence we should be able to counteract. It would never have been here if Friends had been ready to meet the demand four years ago. But it is not too late to stem its influence yet if we act promptly.

Last fall, ten boys applied for admission as boarding pupils in our school. We had no place for them. Some went elsewhere, some found lodging with native families and came in as day pupils. One of them, a bright lad of thirteen, was especially anxious to be taken in. His father, a well-to-do farmer, offered me any price I would say to take his son into our family, but we had no place for him. He found lodging with a family and is in school. He has become interested in the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor, but just lately told me that he could not attend Endeavor any more, that the man where he stays is Catholic and will not permit it. He still comes to Sunday School, but probably has to deceive the man in order to get away. Many others have inquired about boarding school during the year, not only here, round about Holguin, but also at the other stations. I received a letter from one mother today, begging me to take her boy. The parents recognize the fact that their children need general training in other things besides the prescribed courses in books and nobody knows better than the missionaries how much greater is the opportunity to mould the life of a pupil that is in your care all the time than one who is only with you a few hours five days a week.

Holguin is a growing city of 10,000 people, the center of a big productive territory. Sugar mills are springing up all around. There is no Christian school doing higher grade work (anything above sixth grade) within nearly a hundred miles to the east and about 150 miles to the west and not a single boarding school in all this territory. It is a wonderful opportunity for Friends. And far from being in the way of final co-operation with the other denominations, a preparatory school is the one thing needed to make that co-operation worth while. It will be the connection between our primary schools and the educational work of these centers. And the result will be native pastors and teachers to take the place of the foreign missionaries and a native church self-supporting and self-propagating.

Spiritual Prosperity

By CHARLES N. FRANKLIN.

"Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." III John, 2.

These words were written by the Apostle John to his beloved friend Gaius, the companion of Paul on his last missionary journey to Asia. It was a prayer for his physical health and temporal prosperity, that it might equal his spiritual health and prosperity. It was a prayer which, if it was answered for us today, might change the circumstances and conditions of many. What change would it produce in our surroundings and conditions?

First of all, what constitutes perfect physical health.

It is not always the appearance of health. Many a man appears to be in the best of health, but suddenly you hear of his death from some cause or source that you least expected, due to an unhealthy condition. Good health consists in perfect soundness of limb and body. Good digestion and a successful resistance against disease.

What constitutes temporal prosperity?

Again we might say that it is not what men appear to be doing in business that spells prosperity, for frequently the very men that you thought were successful, and prosperous in business, fail. But prosperity may be defined as successful progress in any business or enterprise as shown by the balancing of their books at the end of the year.

What constitutes perfect spiritual health?

Some one may object and say it is impossible to obtain Christian perfection in this life. Let me say that unless you obtain it in this life you will not obtain it at all, for there is nothing about death to perfect anyone.

Certainly morality is not perfect spiritual health. The moral man is no more sure of heaven than the man behind prison bars. The words of the Master ring out, "Except a man be born again (not, given a religious education) he cannot see the kingdom of God."

It is not what people think we are always. "Man looketh at the outward appearance (profession), but God looketh at the heart."

It is not always what we think we are ourselves. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

It is what we are in the sight of God and according to his standard.

"And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." This is the relation we owe to God. How many in the world today measure up to this standard?

And again, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This is our relation to our fellowmen, illustrated by a little circumstance which occurred in the home of a returned missionary from China.

A little girl had earned three dollars picking berries and selling them. After receiving the money she gave the Lord his share, one-tenth, and divided the remaining nine-tenths with her sister, who had not been able to earn any money.

I fear that many of us think we are living up to this standard, but if we were to examine ourselves carefully we would find that selfishness, pride, envy, jealousy or some other form of evil was lurking around in our hearts.

It is heart sickening and appalling, the position that many are taking today that the New Birth is not a necessity, when Christ has said it was. But I declare upon the authority of God's word that this standard of Christian perfection cannot be obtained in any other way.

Being born of Christian parents will not do it. Religious education will not do it. Environment will not do it. Nothing but a complete change of heart, a new heart being put in the place of the old heart of sin, which is in every man, woman and child through the fall of our foreparents. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Romans 5:12.

What would be the result if our physical health were to be governed by our spiritual health?

We can easily imagine the change that would take place. Some man possessed of a strong physique would find himself overtaken by disease and robbed of his health; while, on the other hand, there are those who might be in very poor health, but possessors of a deep religious experience, who would find themselves growing strong and hearty in body. Which way would it be with you and me?

What would be the result if our temporal prosperity were to be governed by our spiritual prosperity?

A man possessed of much wealth, successful in business, might find himself being deprived of his income, his business decreasing and his money going from him; while, on the other hand, some one who was in poverty and want, yet possessor of the riches of the kingdom would find himself becoming successful in business and possessor of wealth.

"Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth."

WHITTIER COLLEGE.

By WILLIAM V. COFFIN.

In the laying out of Whittier as a Quaker Colony, an educational institution of high grade was recognized as a necessity for the success of the colony. Very early in the history of the settlement a mass meeting was called at the Friends' Church, then on the corner of Comstock and College streets, to discuss the matter of building a college. At this meeting the elevation known as Reservoir Hill was selected as the most suitable site and a subscription, promising land, labor and money amounting to approximately $130,000 was taken. This was in the early "boom" days when things went forward rapidly while they did go. Work was immediately begun on the building site and Reservoir Hill was cut down about twenty feet to its present height, when the wane in the boom became apparent and the whole project was soon abandoned. About two years later an academy was started with C. Bevan Johnson as principal, assisted by Ida B. Lindley. This ran for one year and was discontinued, owing to the financial pressure occasioned by the re-action from the boom.

In the fall of 1891, after almost all the Friends in Southern California had been visited and the matter thoroughly canvassed, with John Chawner as principal and Dr. William V. Coffin as assistant, the academy was reopened in the brick building now occupied by the Will A. Smith Print Shop. There were thirteen students the first term. The use of the building was donated by the Pickering Land and Water Company and a subscription was taken sufficient to purchase a very meager equipment. This was the beginning from which has grown Whittier College as it exists today.

After the first year, at the request of John Chawner, William V. Coffin became principal and John Chawner, assistant. With the opening of the second year the number of students increased to about thirty. In order to assure the permanency of the school an organization was effected known as the "Whittier Educational Association." This organization was incorporated under the laws of California. To those who had subscribed to the establishment and equipment of the school, stock in the association was issued, a Board of Trustees was elected, all of whom were members of the Friends' Church. The third year opened with about sixty students, and the old brick building was inadequate for so large a number.

Early in the year Washington Hadley signified his willingness to give fourteen acres of what is now the college campus, for college purposes, provided a suitable building should be erected on it. It was a heavy task to undertake at the time, but by the end of June enough money had been subscribed, in the judgment of the Board, to begin the building and, except the south wing, it was completed as it now stands. Late in the Autumn the school moved into the new building. Looking forward to the establishment of California Yearly Meeting, Iowa, Western, Indiana and Kansas Yearly Meetings made appropriations in favor of California Friends totaling forty-five hundred dollars. This money was appropriated to the completion and equipment of the College building, it being understood that this building would be the first home of the new Yearly Meeting. In March, 1895, the first session of California Yearly Meeting was held in the new building.

From this time on throughout the following five years the school was maintained and made progress, but only by great sacrifice on the part of both teachers and patrons. In 1900, in order that the school might be more intimately allied to the Yearly Meeting, "The Whittier Educational Association" transferred its interests to the Yearly Meeting and the Yearly Meeting for the first time named the Board of Trustees as follows: William E. Cox, Cyrus J. Cook, William V. Coffin, T. Elwood Newlin, Mary T. Hadley, Nannie M. Arnold, Curtis E. Way, Daniel Lewis, David C. Garwood, William M. Hiatt, Rhoda M. Hare, and Donald McMillan. Under the authority of California Yearly Meeting, this Board met at the College on July 5, 1900, at 3:00 p. m., and organized and elected William E. Cox, president; William M. Hiatt, secretary; Cyrus J. Cook, vice-president; and the Bank of Whittier (now the first National Bank) was designated as treasurer.

In 1901 the school was incorporated as a college and obtained a charter under the laws of California empowering it to establish and maintain a college for educational purposes, to conduct the same, to grant such literary degrees as are usually granted by colleges of academic standing in the United States, and in testimony thereof to give suitable diplomas therefor.

In 1902 Washington Hadley offered to give ten thousand dollars to the college for endowment provided that at least fifty thousand dollars should be raised. After a vigorous campaign this was accomplished and the friends of Whittier College felt assured of its permanency. From this time on the growth of the institution has been constant and rapid.

It became necessary in 1904 to enlarge the building by putting on the south wing. Washington Hadley again came to the rescue by offering to deed more land, about four acres lying south of the college and where the Hadley Athletic Field now is, as soon as the building should be completed and fully paid for. As the work of building proceeded the needs and plans grew somewhat and it could not be completed without putting a mortgage of ten thousand dollars on the college plant. The deed, in consequence, was withheld for a time, until the mortgage should be raised.

In the fall of 1905 a campaign was begun for increased endowment. Washington Hadley gave the impulse for this effort by offering $20,000 provided $100,000 should be raised. The matter being laid before Andrew Carnegie, he agreed to give $20,000 of the amount to be raised. To secure the remaining $60,000 required a very strenuous effort, but it was finally consummated at California Yearly Meeting held in June, 1906. At the opening of the educational session that year, $32,000 of the amount remained to be subscribed. The entire amount raised was $102,000. With this increase in the resources, the college outlook was greatly brightened.

In the fall of 1907 the Board of Trustees decided that it was time to make an effort to pay off the mortgage on the college property. In addition to raising the mortgage it was considered very desirable to purchase four lots fronting on Painter Avenue. Back of these lots was a four-acre tract of ground, the deed to which Washington Hadley had placed in escrow pending the cancellation of the mortgage indebtedness. Mrs. C. E. Tebbetts voluntarily undertook the raising of this money and carried it through to success, so that the Painter Avenue lots were purchased, the mortgage paid off and the papers were burned at the Educational Session of the Yearly Meeting of 1908.

Early in the Spring of 1910, after thoroughly considering the matter, the Board decided that it would be best to do away with the Preparatory Department by dropping a year at a time. This plan has resulted in eliminating everything not included as college work at the beginning of the current school year. The registration has not fallen off, however, and it seems reasonable to expect that the attendance will now steadily increase.

The death of Washington Hadley in 1911 lost to Whittier College its greatest patron and benefactor. Without his liberal gifts so often made, the several strides of advancement successively taken would have been almost impossible.

There never before was a time when thorough Christian training and education were at a higher premium than now, when every competent and qualified young man and woman with a Christian education can find so many open doors for service. There is a demand far above the supply for trained Christian workers in all the walks of life; for men and women of character whose lives are rooted and grounded in Eternal Truth, whose principles do not waver under trial and whose preparation is broad and thorough. It is our aim to help produce more such men and women.

The needs of the college which are within our reach at this time if we rise to the opportunity are:

- 1—Endowment increased to two hundred fifty thousand dollars.
- 2—Twenty-five thousand dollars for a new building.

After a review of the permanent funds of the College and a careful estimate of the real estate, plant and equipment values, we believe the following to be a conservative financial statement, viz.:

Permanent Funds—Endowment.....	$146,251.00
Plant—Buildings and Equipment.....	43,962.00
Real Estate—Campus	85,000.00

Total$275,213.00

From the beginning, with thirteen students and less than $300.00 in equipment in 1891, the above showing indicates a growth somewhat remarkable.

The current year, 1915-16, shows a registration of 135 students in college classes. Absalom Rosenberger is now the experienced and very efficient head of the institution. Mrs. Rosenberger, formerly holding the chair of History in Monmouth College, Illinois, is filling the same chair in Whittier College.

Whittier College is one of the smallest of small colleges, but its standing is second to none. It is fully accredited at both our great California universities, and at Haverford and Bryn Mawr. It holds an important and strategical position among Friends' colleges in America. California Yearly Meeting is rapidly growing in members. Our membership is from all other Yearly Meetings, including Dublin and London. The westward rush stops here. Whittier College is a "Quaker" necessity in Southern California and is striving to live up to the highest Quaker ideals.

The Suffering Armenians

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, of which James L. Barton, of New York, is chairman, has an extended interview with Henry Morgenthau, who recently offered his resignation as United States Ambassador to Turkey. Concerning the suffering Armenians, he says, in part:

"The Armenians were living just as quietly and peacefully as possible, in friendship and close contact with their Turkish associates, when suddenly they were picked out to be deported. It was then that my heart bled for them. I had been given the privilege of dispensing charity without stint and with full authority on behalf of the English, Russian, French and Italian nations—even the Servians had sent me money and Russia and Italy permitted me to help the poor Montenegrins in my charge. Suddenly, without available funds, I was confronted with the terrific problem of the destitute Armenians. Can you conceive how I felt? It was then I sent an appeal to the Secretary of State for help and the response came promptly.

Mere Skeletons of Children

"If the people of the United States could only see the distress as I have seen it. If they could see the gaunt, little figures of children, the little orphans brought to Constantinople by friendly Turkish officers, the need of prompt aid would be fully realized. There were two children I shall never forget who had lost their parents, and nearly dead were mere skeletons covered over by skin. There were women who came into Constantinople whose condition I cannot describe, women who had to become Moslems in order to save their lives and reach the city. If I dared to repeat the tales I have heard, sworn to and signed, they would make men and women weep and every one would see the need of sympathy and help. I wish I had the power to picture an Armenian refugee encampment and to tell how an American missionary hospital fed from its back door a thousand starving persons a day on an average of three cents a person with the thirty dollars a day we gave them.

"There is no use of accusing anybody or finding fault with any one. What this great country should do to show its appreciation of the wonderful blessings that have been showered upon us, is for each one of us to make up his mind to do his share. Picture that you are personally responsible for the starvation of one or two persons, if you do not give funds to save them. Twenty-five dollars will enable an Armenian family to be established in comparative comfort. I believe every person would be happier to sacrifice something and give $25 for the Armenians.

"The money we have so far received has not been sufficient to help many people, and up to now we have not been in a position to render very effective help. We were not permitted to do it. Now the Turkish government is consenting to our relieving the distress and suffering. It may be a little indiscreet to say this, but I want to say that unless help is given to the suffering Armenians as well as to the destitute Moslems in Turkey, there will be a fearful amount of starvation next winter. They have not sufficient seed to plant their crops or animals to plow their soil. There is less than ten per cent of the arable land under cultivation.

We Have Given 30 Cents Apiece

"The United States with its one hundred million people has contributed only the insignificant sum of $30,000,000 to all of suffering humanity abroad. We ought to drop our heads in shame. Our one hundred million people, who have an average wealth of $1600, have not given more than thirty cents apiece. Every one who has not contributed ought to be ashamed of himself. These Armenian people are exposed to the weather with very scanty clothing and nothing to eat, with disease rife among them, and hundreds are dying of starvation. We are the only people to whom they can appeal for help today, the only people who dare express their sympathy by actual giving. The people of other nations are afraid and unable to do it.

"We can raise in this country easily, five hundred million dollars. That is only five dollars per capita. If we are worth $1600 each on an average, that is less than one-third of one per cent. Let the whole world understand that we are not willing to profit by this war, but we are willing to disregard profit and be a big brother listening to the needs of the whole world."

"The extent to which we have put fear under our feet is a good measure of manhood," writes Carlyle. It is certainly a good measure of Christian manhood.—W. L. Watkins.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Ira S. Frame, Secretary of the Friends' Peace Committee, of Pasadena, California, writes that they have been distributing the peace message issued by the Peace Association of Friends in America under the title, "The Spiritual Danger to the United States From the War in Europe," adding "Our Committee has secured the publication of a portion of the message in our local paper, and I would like more copies for general distribution. Our committee has special committees on Legislation and Elections, Press and Literature, Public Meetings and Lectures, Education and Relief, and we are trying to do our mite in the great amount of work which needs to be done."

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

A number of Friends belonging to New England Yearly Meeting are active members of the Association to Abolish War. This organization has been very active ever since its organization, and is just now sending out an assortment of excellent pamphlets and leaflets on important phases of the peace question. Deserving of especial mention among the publications, are the following: 1. A series of folders by Rev. Chas. F. Dole, President of the Association, in which are set forth in brief form some of the fundamental ideas concerning peace and war which need to be thoroughly understood by our citizenship generally if the time is to come soon when wars shall cease. The topics treated in this series include "Preparedness—How Far?", "The Pacifist Principles," "The Only Hope for World Peace," "The Missing Note" and "Preparedness Questioned."

One quotation will show the tone in which these topics are treated: "We believe in the higher and spiritual forms of force, in the intelligent use of which physical force is only an incident and exception. We hold that already the moral force of public opinion, and not the fear of the sheriff, mainly keeps the vast body of human society within the lines of law and order."

II. A series of leaflets and folders by various authors; some of the subjects are: "War Fallacies," "Nietzsche at His Best," "Good-Will Versus Non-Resistance," by Dr. John Wright Buckham, of Berkeley, California, and "The War in Europe; What Is the Duty of the Christian Citizen?" by Dr. Alfred Salter; reprinted from the Labour Leader, of Manchester, England.

One sentence from "Good-Will Versus Non-Resistance" contains a truth which is in great danger of being lost sight of just now, even by sincere Christians: "This is the hour for the church to hold fast and herald far the divinely wise, courageous and victorious creed of her Lord—not 'non-resistance,' but the overcoming might of love and good-will."

The Association to Abolish War invites correspondence in regard to its literature; all communications should be directed to the Secretary, Wilbur K. Thomas, 12 Hazelwood street, Roxbury, Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

In a recent letter, Edward Thomas, of New York City, writes as follows:

"The exhibit 'War Against War,' which has been open in Brooklyn for three weeks has been moved to New York, where it is in a store near the corner of Fifth Avenue and Broadway, with entrances on both streets. In Brooklyn more than 7,000 people visited it each day on the average. At the time of the 'Preparedness Parade' in New York more than 7,000 visited the exhibit during the morning and afternoon, and a total of 11,000 during the day and evening. The attendance at the time of writing is at the rate of over 7,000 a day.

"I think it worth noting that the marchers in the 'preparedness' parade were almost entirely either from Wall Street or were representatives of the luxury trades. Thus the jewelry and lace maker trades and the silk trade added to Wall Street made about a third of the line, if first estimates were true. All employees of the United States Steel Corporation who marched had a half holiday and also were presented with a new hat and cane."

TWO NEW BOOKS.

1. "The Forks of the Road," by Washington Gladden.

This book recently issued by the Macmillan Co. is the essay which last year received the prize of $1,000 offered by the Church Peace Union for the best treatise submitted by a minister, discussing some phase of the peace question. The following paragraph taken from the publishers' notice indicates clearly the special topic discussed:

"The problem of the co-existence of war and the Christian civilization of today is vigorously discussed in this book. That all nations, even those now fighting, have ideals of peace and profess to desire the accomplishment of a permanent settlement, is, in the author's opinion, the first indication of the growth of a moral law which he calls the law of love. This law of love, which shall ultimately govern man's relations, can best be promoted by the absolute abandonment of armament; therefore Dr. Gladden calls upon this country to give up its preparedness program and to follow instead a policy of pacifism. In this movement toward unity and peace the church must lead, putting aside its differences and bringing concerted action to bear upon the issue at stake. The volume sums up in convincing fashion all the arguments that have been made on behalf of pacifism and adds to these much that is new and significant." The price of the book is 50 cents.

2. "The Last Weapon," by Theodora Wilson Wilson.

This book recently published in London presents in a series of short chapters a succession of scenes which impress in a striking way the essential truth about war, its horrors, its direct opposition to all truth, mercy and honesty, and the absolute impossibility of bringing about its abolition except by the operation of the power of unselfish love. The method of presentation while not in the form of the drama, is yet dramatic, and throughout the style is artistic even in the portions that reveal the more revolting aspects of war as it really is. The general tone of the work is, however, not to be understood as being that which is associated with terrible scenes of carnage, but rather it is the spirit of self-sacrificing, long-suffering love which is endeavoring to find a way to bring the distress of the nations to an end.

The book is deserving of wide reading for the sake of the feeling it will promote and the kind of convictions it will strengthen. It may be made useful also in the preparation of scenes for programs for peace meetings, since many of the separate chapters with but slight modification, could be used as separate numbers in presenting phases of the truth concerning peace and war.

The price of the book in paper covers is fifty cents per copy, plus postage; it may be ordered from the Peace Association of Friends in America, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.

AT SOUTHLAND COLLEGE, A SCHOOL FOR THE NEGRO, IN CHARGE OF INDIANA YEAR- LY MEETING.

The closing of the school year at Southland College was attended with its usual exercises and interest. The class sermon on May 3 was given by a noted colored minister, of Helena, Arkansas. The assembly room at the school building was filled with an interesting and attentive audience. The music for the occasion was good and was rendered in an excellent manner, causing pleasing comment from many.

On Wednesday following the class sermon, the Primary and English Departments gave a program in the afternoon. On this occasion the assembly room was not sufficient for the large audience. The program lasting nearly three hours was splendid. The audience though much crowded, gave perfect attention to the close. Many parents were present who had children in the exercises, and the parents' great delight, shown by their faces and manner, was quite sufficient pay for the expense and work in giving such a program. The parents make many sacrifices in order to have nice shoes and clothes for their little folks at the closing exercises, and without exception the little fellows looked very "spick-an'-span" in their "exhibition" clothes.

On Thursday afternoon the advance grades gave their program. It was very creditably given. The audience was as large as the day before, and just as happy and enthusiastic. A song rendered by a young man on this program was especially well received and encored and asked for again on Commencement Day. Another delightful feature was the drill given by sixteen fine looking young men and women. It required more than twenty minutes in time and was very intricate and elaborate but was perfectly given. The beautiful parasols, a part of the paraphernalia for this drill, were cheerfully loaned by one of the best dry goods firms in Helena.

At 11 o'clock on Friday, May 5th, the regular Commencement Day exercises were given. Early in the morning people began to enter the campus, coming in farm wagons, buggies, automobiles, and many walking. There were six automobiles doing service between Helena and the College, making hurried trips constantly during the day, also several large cars from Marianna, the county seat of the county lying north. These machines brought the best colored people of both places here for the day. The most prominent of the doctors, dentists, contractors, merchants, ministers and their wives and many other visitors.

Many of the alumni were present, several coming from a distance. An alumnus of the class of '02, who is a mail clerk, reached Helena at 10 o'clock on his "run," hired an automobile, brought several of his friends with him, came to the commencement exercises, and was back in the city again at 4 p. m., ready for his run out again, remarking how thoroughly he had enjoyed the day "at the old home." Many of the alumni, who could not come, sent greetings and others sent flowers. One alumnus, living in a town sixty miles away, sent several hundred beautiful roses for the day—roses more perfect than hothouse plants. By 10 o'clock Commencement Day, the campus was crowded with people and at 10:30 o'clock when the assembly room doors were opened only a few minutes were taken to closely pack the room. None but adults were allowed to be present at this program, thus giving the parents and visitors a better chance to attend.

There were twenty-two graduates from the English Department, sixteen from the Normal and four from the College. The College and Normal graduates gave orations, and these without exception were given in a very satisfactory manner. The parents and visitors always show unbounded delight on hearing these productions, and many times these orations have been of great help to the people. Every word seems to be eagerly taken in as though they were thirsty for the thoughts and ideas. The crowd for this day was estimated at 1,500 to 2,000 people. For the handling of the people for the day there was no police supervision, and the day passed without incident or accident of any kind to mar its joyousness. It was indeed a gala day for the colored people of this and the adjoining counties.

Many who came brought picnic dinners. All dormitory students were served lunches, given out by the dining room matron and the lunch stands provided for the wants of others. Although there were many visitors for two nights at the College, many parents coming for their children, and much extra work and care, yet with it all, every one at the institution knew his place and duties and no one seemed worried or confused. It was just one large birthday party of the fortieth Southland commencement.

SUFFERERS FOR CONSCIENCE SAKE.

Edward Grubb has an article in the London Friend of May 12 to the effect that the no-Conscription Fellowship has information concerning conscientious objectors to service in the war as follows, but the statement is made that there are probably many cases of which no direct information has been received.

Number of men in military custody	153
(of these six have had no civil trial)
Number of men undergoing punishment after court-martial ..	25
Released after imprisonment till called up again	5
Released after imprisonment on grounds of health	10
Released after imprisonment on accepting alternative service	0
Released after imprisonment for other or unknown reasons	9
Joined the army	11

The most severe punishment appears to have been inflicted on ten men (including several Friends), who are in the Harwick Military Prison undergoing twenty-eight days' imprisonment in dark cells on bread and water, and in irons part of the day. In addition to these, six are in the Wandsworth detention barracks, also reported to be "in irons" and on bread and water. I am not quite sure what the phrase "in irons" means, but I have heard that the wrists and ankles are attached to chains so that the man cannot stand upright.

The fact that men are willing to bear such punishments patiently is surely abundant evidence of the reality of their conscientious objection to warfare. But is this what the Government intended, when it provided for the exemption of conscientious objectors? The one ray of hope is that the faithfulness of these men to their convictions will make the permanent imposition of Conscription forever impossible in this country.

Learn to entwine with prayer the small cares, trifling sorrows, and the little wants of daily life. Whatever affects you, turn it into prayer and send it up to God.—Methodist Times.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

A LIVE MISSIONARY COMMITTEE AT CENTRAL CITY.

The committee organized at the beginning of the year made a policy, assigned the work of the various departments to different members of the committee and arranged for an every-member canvass.

The work in the Sunday School has been very encouraging. The committee has endeavored to call the attention of the school to missions on the first Sunday in each month. The general exercises and talks, illustrated by blackboard, have been given in both the primary and adult departments. The regular missionary collections have increased and a growing interest has been manifested in the Birthday Box. Attention has been called to this box every Sunday and it has brought us in more than twenty dollars.

Missionary enthusiasm has not been lacking in the Endeavor. With Ruth Joyce as chairman of their committee, they gave a very good missionary entertainment entitled "A Day in a Missionary's Life." They took up a good collection, which was applied to the church missionary fund. They also made an every-member canvass for missions. The Junior Christian Endeavorers have read some missionary books in their meetings. Our committee has co-operated with the Endeavor in starting a missionary library.

A report of the missionary work of the church would not be complete without mention of our W. F. M. S. This society is very much alive and has been doing some aggressive work, especially in Mission Study and in raising funds. The women have adopted the plan of giving the Sunday eggs for the benefit of the society. And it is remarkable how the "hen" has helped. Emma Gibson has successfully led the Mission Study. Special programs have been prepared for nearly every meeting. The annual meeting was made an all-day meeting and the men were invited. About sixty in all were present. After a good dinner and a program in which the men took part a collection of about twenty-five dollars was taken.

During the second semester at the college, both the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have organized and held Mission Study Classes. The chairman of your committee has had the pleasure of teaching one of these classes.

Chairman.

RAIN NO OBSTACLE IN JAMAICA

In January, there were to be two series of meetings, but on account of heavy rains, only six meetings were held, and these at the Cedar Hurst Station. They were blessed meetings. A Presbyterian minister was the evangelist. One night, out of the little company of thirty that gathered in the rain, twelve came forward for blessing at the altar.

Two of those who came stand out prominently in memory. One was a girl of twelve years, who really seemed demon-possessed in her opposition to Christianity. She could not bear to see her companions come out on the Lord's side and in former meetings had tried literally to drag them from the altar. During these meetings, she surrendered her life to Christ and began holding prayer meetings among the girls. Another, a grandmother, widowed, and who has the care of five grandchildren, without means, having lost all her property, laid her weary burdens down at Jesus' feet.

The nights we could have no meetings at the church, we had prayer and Bible study at the Glen Haven cottage. Sometimes twenty would gather through the rain to these meetings, and one decision for Christ was made there. It has been difficult to have the regular services on account of continuous rains. The day school and Sunday School have suffered much on this account. The Christian Endeavor has been able to keep up with new life and energy. Four have joined the candidates' class this quarter.

A DAY AT KITOSH—AFRICA.

Events are so uncertain here that a description of one day may not at all describe another. There is only a part of the day's program that can be depended upon with much regularity. The work is not a hum-drum monotony in this regard. Usually I am up at 5:30. At about 6:30 the drum beats for the boys to turn out for their work before school time. Forty of them answered the roll call for work this morning. Each had to be assigned to his task, and food given out to those who are fed on the station.

We have nearly finished planting for the present season, and now there will be more than the usual amount of planting required to keep them all profitably employed. This morning, we were preparing for planting fruit and shade trees, for which porters were sent to Kaimosi on Monday. Others were plastering with mud the new teacher's house we have been building. It is no small job to oversee all the work and keep the boys busy.

At eight o'clock, Mrs. Ford has her girls' school. She has a two-hours' session before the boys' school. This is all the time that the girls can have away from their daily tasks at home. And there are few who are willing for their girls to have even this amount of time for school. At 9:00 a. m. medicines are dispensed. People come with various aches and pains, ulcers, itch, boils and wounds. Sore, running ears, and sore eyes are very common cases. At times more serious ailments come.

But this is only the prelude to the day's work. The school is held from 10:00 to 12:30 a. m., and from 2:00 to 4:00 p. m. There were today 66 boys in all stages of ignorance, up to what may pass for the Second or Third grade work in some subjects only. My only assistant, a boy from Maragoli, goes to Murunga's school each morning. The mass of the boys are in the chart classes. I find it necessary to care for each of them personally in order that he may learn anything. We have a series of twelve charts, beginning with the vowels, and leading up to the First Reader; each beginner starts on the vowels. It often happens that very small boys help grown men to master these rudiments. In one case here, a small boy of possibly ten years reads in the Second Reader while his father is on the third chart. We stay within the "four R's" entirely. In the afternoon, the whole school has a lesson together in the Gospel of Matthew now. We studied Mark previously. In the morning, beside the chart classes, the more advanced boys write in exercise books three days each week. All do something at arithmetic. In the afternoon, beside the charts again, there are three reading classes in the First and Second Readers, respectively and in the Gospel of Mark.

Usually the boys are free for play after 4 p. m. But today, on account of the porters having arrived with the trees, I asked for volunteers to help plant them. Quite a number helped at that until sundown. After the evening meal, which is the chief meal of the day for all the people here, the boys have their own praise and prayer service, conducted by the native teacher, while the missionary does what he can to keep in touch with the Friends at home.

CHURCH AT WORK

Arba, Indiana—The Friends meeting at Arba observed Mothers' Day on May 14. All mothers in attendance were presented with a carnation by the Gleaners' Class of the Sabbath School. Many of the congregation wore white flowers in honor of their mothers. We had a splendid meeting consisting of an informal program and a good short sermon by the pastor, Percy Thomas.

Entiat, Washington—On May 10, Jacob and Susan Replogle, of Entiat, father and mother of Charles R. Replogle, missionary in Alaska, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. About seventy-five neighbors and friends called at their home and were served with ice cream and cake and hot drinks if preferred. The company left many cheering words as well as tokens of love. During the evening a purse of about $140 in gold was presented to them. Charles and May Replogle, who are in Alaska, remembered them with $50 in gold. Tennyson Lewis, of Everett, gave the evening address after a short program and presented the token from Everett meeting and also surprised them with the gift from Alaska. Jacob is quite a cripple, not having yet recovered from an accident which he sustained a few months ago.

Everett, Washington—Everett Monthly Meeting has been receiving several new members of late. The Bible School is doing fine work and some changes in the way of room for the primary department are being made.

Fairmount, Indiana—Fred E. Carter has been presented with a unanimous request by the pastoral committee to continue as pastor of this meeting for the coming year. During his term of service here Mr. Carter and his estimable family have won a warm place in the hearts of the people of Fairmount. He is progressive, up-to-date, liberal and yet he is a sincere advocate of the old-time orthodox religion. The attendance at the meeting has never been larger than at the present time. This is true not only of the Sunday morning meeting, but of all the services.

Greenfield, Indiana—Oscar H. Trader, who has served this meeting as pastor for almost two years, has tendered his resignation so far as the pastorate for another year is concerned. During his stay with us he has been a faithful and conscientious laborer and has done splendid work. The meeting and Bible School have increased in numbers and interest, the prayer meeting has more than doubled itself numerically and most of those attending take active part in prayer and testimony. Aside from being an efficient pastor he is gifted in singing and with his help the choir has greatly improved. He has made many friends here not only in our church, but among others. Our best wishes go with him and his family.

Knightstown, Indiana—Union services were held by the churches of this place during the week preceding Easter. Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, in the place of the pastor, Willis H. Bond, preached the sermon on the Resurrection at the Friends church on Easter morning. On that evening a program of unusual interest was rendered by the children of the Sunday School, assisted by the young peoples' chorus. On the evening of May 5 the Young Men's Bible Class gave a banquet for the young women's class, planning the menu and acting as general managers. Sixty-five persons were served. Many young people have recently been taken into membership. Prayer meetings are well attended, almost everyone present taking some part in the services. The Lord is wonderfully with us. Union services for July are being planned by the Ministerial Association.

Rockford, Ohio—Van Wert Quarterly Meeting was held here May 6. The meeting on ministry and oversight was well attended and on Friday evening Esther Cook, pastor of the meetings at St. Marys and Spencerville, brought a very helpful message. Luke Woodard, of Fountain City, Indiana, brought the message on Saturday morning and that evening Fred Wilcoxen, of Western Yearly Meeting, a converted Catholic, gave the history of his life. Truman C. Kenworthy, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, brought a stirring message on Sabbath morning and on Sabbath evening Robert Douglas gave an able message on the doctrines of our church, or what Friends believe and why. Other visiting ministers were John Kittrell, of West Milton, Ohio, and George Bird, of Portland, Indiana. Other visiting Friends were Dr. H. R. Pearson, of West Milton, Joseph H. Goddard, of Muncie, Elvira Woodard, of Fountain City, and Cora Kittrell, of West Milton, Ohio. All the meetings in the Quarterly Meeting were well represented, all the different pastors being present.

Liberal, Kansas—Rose Valley Monthly Meeting is in the center of a large farming community and in this busy season of planting crops we had a four days' revival effort with most excellent results. Farmers left their implements in the fields while they came to the day meetings. O. B. Ong, of Pasadena, was the evangelist in charge. Seven services were held, during which sixty-five persons knelt at an altar of prayer for pardon or entire sanctification. Among these were two young men who received a call to the ministry. This makes four young men who have been called to preach the gospel from this meeting within the last year. Two are now in active work.

Oklahoma—Revival meetings have been held this spring at Valley Queen and Happy Hill by J. A. Bales and wife, who have done good work. There were twenty-nine conversions at Valley Queen and twenty-one joined Friends. There were thirty-seven conversions at Happy Hill with four additions to the church. A big tent meeting is being planned for the last week in August at Columbia, Oklahoma.

Stafford, Kansas—Stafford meeting was well represented at our last Quarterly Meeting held at Hopewell. Our meetings for worship and our Sabbath School have had a very good attendance this spring. Able J. Bond, our pastor, and some others have been going to Antioch, ten miles southeast, for a few Sundays past in the afternoon, helping in the Sabbath School and holding services. Mrs. Bond's health has improved, so she has been getting out to meeting lately.

Wichita, Kansas—At a recent chapel service at Friends University, William R. Lewis, who has been on the Pacific coast for some time, spoke on the subject of "Things That Abide." It was a real heart-searching, inspiring message. On Friday evening at a meeting of the members he told the story of the origin and purpose of the Gospel Band, which was designed to promote Christian life and service in the midst of school activities. Mr. Lewis has for some time been engaged in home mission work in California, but is now conducting a campaign for funds for Nebraska Central College.

Gasport, N. Y.—Mothers' Day was observed at the morning service in the Friends church here on May 14. An appropriate sermon was delivered by the pastor, George Hull, at the close of which each mother was asked to come forward and receive a white carnation. Seven new members were received.

Ypsilanti, Mich.—Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at the Friends Church near here May 5-7. No stranger ministers were in attendance, but Fred J. Cope, of Adrian, preached on Saturday and H. Lawrence Linton, of Tecumseh, on Sabbath. Mr. and Mrs. Harper, of the Baptist Church, missionaries from Burmah, came from Detroit on Sunday morning and gave a missionary address in the afternoon. The weather was very nice and the house was full. There were services as usual at most of the home meetings throughout the Quarterly Meeting.

Bloomington, Indiana—Bloomington Academy closed its seventieth year with the usual commencement exercises. The baccalaureate sermon was an inspiring message from Willard O. Trueblood, of Indianapolis. Julia Fried Walker of the Teachers' College, Indianapolis, gave the class address, taking as her theme, "Indiana, Past, Present and Future." Following the commencement program, the alumni association gave a reception in honor of the graduating class, in the gymnasium. Hadley H. Kelsey remains at the head of Bloomington Academy for the coming year.

Thorntown, Ind.—The men of Sugar Plain church recently enjoyed a banquet given by the ladies in our new church basement. L. O. Brown, from Clinton, Indiana, was the speaker of the occasion and gave a very interesting and helpful talk on the subject of "Our Opportunities." Our C. E. Society presented "The Hope of the World" on Sabbath of Easter.

Leesburg, Ohio—The Friends church was highly favored on May 7 by a visit from Edgar Wollam from Cleveland, Ohio. He preached helpful and instructive sermons both morning and evening. We greatly appreciated having him with us again, he and Merrill Coffin having held a series of meetings with us a year ago.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The results of the many months' of "preparedness" agitation have now been determined so far as the land forces of the country are concerned. Since we wrote a week ago, that little group of men comprising the Conference Committee reported the compromise army reorganization bill, which it was stated in our last letter had been agreed upon. The Senate immediately took up the report and passed it unanimously. The House was not in such a hurry, but the Representatives also passed the bill after a few days delay. This more popular branch of the Congress did not give entirely unquestioned approval of the bill. There were twenty-five dissenting votes, and a few members answered "present" when their names were called. Some of those who voted in the negative did so because the bill did not go far enough to satisfy their ideas of "adequate preparedness," while on the other hand some Congressmen voted against the bill because they thought it went too far. * * *

The standing army as now authorized by Congress will be about double what it was only three months ago, and we have now embarked upon the dangerous looking, at least, policy of federalizing the National Guard. But the increase is nothing like as large as many feared it would be.

But the passage of an epoch-making army bill was not the only important "preparedness" event of the last week in Congress. As announced by the newspapers, the House Naval Affairs Committee, after months of hearings and deliberation, met last Fifth-day, the 18th, and settled upon the bill to be reported to Congress. There had been no doubt in the minds of people in touch with members of this committee that the bill reported would provide for a considerable increase over the programs of previous years. But the measure decided upon and sent to Congress for its approval was in more than one respect a complete surprise to many Congressmen as well as people on the outside. The bill does carry additions of new ships, equipment, men, etc., that run the appropriations up some fifty millions over the program of last year. But there is evidence that the men on the committee who stand for moderation had much influence in the shaping of the bill. The five-year program of the Navy Department, involving the expenditure of five hundred millions of dollars in the next five years, was thrown out; no provision was made for dreadnaughts and there were other cuts in the number of vessels of various classes demanded by big navy men. On the other hand a most significant feature of the bill is the provision inserted through the efforts of Congressman Hensley, of Missouri, that at the close of the European war the President shall call a conference of the important nations of the world on the question of disarmament. If this provision becomes law and is carried into effect it may easily serve as a recompense for any increase in the size of our navy forced through Congress this term.

These children, men of the child-heart, keep the world sweet. Three righteous men saved the city, the child-heart saves the world from the decrepitude and ghastliness of old age.—Joseph Parker.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

C. E. CONVENTION.

Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union just closed one of the most successful conventions it has ever held. Jonesboro's doors were open wide, and the program was an exceptionally strong one.

The Resolutions Committee suggested a campaign for the coming year, that promises a great revival among young Friends. It met with the hearty approval of the convention, and already plans are laid and are being rapidly started for the realization of this program. It is as follows:

1. "The Entire Church at its Entire Task." Prayer that the spiritual life of the entire church may be raised.

2. Adoption of the Efficiency Campaign.

3. Share of Millions Campaign:
1,200 New Members of Christian Endeavor.

1,200 New Church Members.

1,200 New Dollars for Church Extension.

3,000 New Members of the Peace Union.

25 New Christian Endeavor Societies.

50 New Comrades of the Quiet Hour.

50 New Tenth Legioners.

25 New Life Work Recruits.

100 New Endeavor Experts.

50 New Subscribers to the Christian Endeavor World.

100 New Subscribers to The American Friend.

50 New Study Classes.

All young Friends enrolled in the Directory.

4. Every Member Canvass.

5. Church Visitation.

6. Delegates from each Society to Cedar Lake Conference and Yearly Meeting.

Does this appeal to you? Will you help, whether it does or not? When any of the above points are gained will you not report it to Edgar Mote, Richmond, Indiana, who is chairman of the Campaign Committee, or to the Young Friends Board.

Talk this up, not down—and lend a hand.

STUDY CLASS.

4. Members.

The personnel of the group will depend upon the promoter.

Approach those most interested first.

Solicit both the influential and unpromising church members.

Valuable church workers have been discovered through the Study Circle.

(a). Number.

The class should range from six to twelve in number.

(b). Finding Members.

1. Personal solicitation.

2. Advertising. The pastor, Sunday School Superintendent, or other leader in the church should speak on the advantages of the Class, and urge people to join. Send post cards to those desired. Carefully plan some preliminary meetings on the subject to be taken up. A program such as a paper, apt songs, a stimulating talk by the promoter, and an address by pastor, or other leader, will doubtless awaken interest. Have maps, chart, and a copy of the text book present.

(c). Attendance.

Regularity should be insisted upon. Each member should be urged to study the lesson beforehand. Every household should own a text book.

THE LOCAL UNION.

There are at least eleven kinds of Christian Endeavor Unions. Among these and one of the most important, is the local union. These unions are the strong links in the chain of Christian Endeavor. They are organized for the purpose of mutual helpfulness and Christian fellowship. Consequently they comprise two or more societies, usually more, and the more, the stronger. The strong local union is a union with a purpose. It will be interested and a strong factor in the moral, social and spiritual uplift of the community in which it is located. It will be a power for righteousness.

PILGRIMAGES.

Has your Young People's Society undertaken any Pilgrimages this Spring? Next Sunday will be a good day to begin. Go to the nearest weak meeting. Hold a regular Christian Endeavor or Fellowship Meeting. A program of two or three ten minute talks, interspersed with appropriate songs, might be arranged. Go with a concern and minister for God.

We all are as children in his household, heirs, indeed, of a glorious inheritance, but yet children and then nearest to him when we realize most fully our duties at his feet.—Brooke Foss Westcott.

DEBATE IN POPLAR RIDGE.

About 120 braved the snow storm Friday night for the Washington's Birthday Party at the parsonage of the Poplar Ridge Friends Church, New York. The house had been appropriately decorated by the committee in charge, and flags and pictures reminded one continually of the event celebrated. Supper was served about 8 o'clock.

A social hour followed the supper, and then people settled themselves for the real event of the evening. A debate had been scheduled. The question was "Resolved, That Edwin Mosher would make a better mayor for Poplar Ridge than Alfred Simkin." Several surprises were in store for the guests.

They had no idea there were such debaters in the county. Mr. Merritt and Mr. Montgomery defended Mosher and Mr. Rodenhurst and Mr. Wheeler defended Simkin. Then all were surprised at the very distinguished and able business men in the little city. Finally, though Poplar Ridge is appreciated by loyal citizens, they had no idea of the remarkable future which the town is to have. On this point the debaters were agreed.

One of the five judges refused to vote because of the heat of the argument and the even balance of the sides. Two voted for Simkin and two for Mosher, and Poplar Ridge's first mayor was about to be twins. But finally after careful thought one man changed the vote and Simkin won. He was immediately and appropriately and effectively presented to his people by the defeated candidate.

He began his duties at once by suggesting that it was time to go home. People donned warm caps and heavy coats and faced the storm again, well satisfied with the evening's fun.

Incidentally the social cleared $25, which will go into the piano fund.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic—"The Will and the Way." Phil. 4:1-13.

The motto of the Chicago Convention last summer was, "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for Strength, I will." No word in Christian Endeavor is more typical of its spirit, more vital to its life, or more responsible for its success, than these words of the Christian Endeavor Pledge.

If we go His way, He will give us the strength. His will is best. Christ said, "I am the Way"; for the Christian, He is also the Will. He has given all, and asks all in return. The Master is grieved when we hold something back. Be generous in self surrender. If we love Him, we can say, "I delight to do thy will, O my God!" Do we not hear Him say, "Wilt thou have me for a friend? Wilt thou follow into suffering, endure hardness, loneliness for my sake, asking no reward save my smile of approval? Wilt thou give me absolute control of thyself and all thou hast? Wilt thou be content to please me only? May I have my way in all things?"

May our surrendered hearts reach out in eagerness to embrace the dear sweet will of God!

SIXTIETH MARRIAGE ANNIVERSARY.

Henderson and Lydia J. McKinney, of Des Moines, Iowa, celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage on May 17. They were married in Dallas County, Iowa, in 1856, and were among the pioneer settlers of that county. Henderson McKinney was born in Stokes County, N. C., in 1835, coming to Iowa in 1854. His wife was born in Marion County, Indiana, in 1836, coming to Iowa in 1853. They have lived in Des Moines 37 years and are members of the First Friends church. Mrs. McKinney is a birth-right Friend.

FROM THE FIELD.

Smyrna—Ackworth Quarterly Meeting was held at Smyrna commencing on Friday evening, May 19. We had with us George McClellan, pastor of Cedar Creek meeting in Salem County. Charles Moore, pastor at Indianaola, was here on Friday and Saturday. Our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, H. R. Keates, and the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, LeRoy Hawks, were present at all the sessions. Harry R. Keates preached on Friday night and also Sunday morning and afternoon. Charles Moore preached on Saturday morning and LeRoy Hawks on Saturday night. George McClellan led the praise service on Sunday morning and gave his illustrated missionary address at night, and also his illustrated address, "The Man of Gallilee," on Monday night. The theme of the Quarterly Meeting was "Power." We feel that the Lord was with us in all these sessions and we trust they will be of lasting benefit.

True Christians love one another with sincere affection; they delight in each other's presence; they share each other's happiness, and sympathize with each other in time of sorrow; they are always ready to promote the welfare of their brethren—all because they give expression the same spirit.

AT WEST INDIANAPOLIS.

Very tender and impressive services were held at the Second Friends Church in Indianapolis Sunday, May 21, it being the farewell meeting in the old "church in the valley." The church will dedicate its new building Sunday, May 28, with an all day program. Gertrude Moon Reinier, of Noblesville, will be with us in our morning meeting. The dedicatory services will be held at 2:30 P. M. preaching by Albert J. Brown. Willard O. Trueblood will preach in the evening.

John R. Hobson composed and read the following poem at our farewell meeting in the old meeting house.

THE CHURCH IN THE VALLEY.

How dear to my heart is the church in the valley
Where for years we have met to study God's Word.
The old house, the coal shed, the lot with no alley,
Leaving them now my emotions have stirred.
The wide-spreading roof, the chimney that's leaning,
The brick foundation which some stories could tell,
The small vestibule, these all add some meaning
To the church in the valley we all love so well.
The old frame church, the weather-beaten church,
The Second Friends church we all love so well.

The church in the valley I hail as a treasure,
For on the Lord's Day when from labor I rest,
I've found it a source of great joy and much pleasure
To meet with you here and with you be blest.
The pulpit, the rostrum, where the minister stands
The old cupboard which too could unfold a tale,
The little bookcase made by loving hands
Are memories of the church that stands in the vale.
The old frame church, the weather-beaten church
The Second Friends church that stands in the vale.

Oh have we met here in joy and in sadness,
We have mingled our voices in prayer to our Lord
As oft has he heard us and filled us with gladness
Believing on Him and trusting His word.
We meet here no more in this church we've outgrown,
There is joy, there is sorrow—'tis willed from on High.
We joy in the blessing of a new Sabbath Home,
We sorrow in saying to this one good by,
To this old frame church, this weather-beaten church
This much beloved church, we now say good by.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Seaside, Hectors River P. O.

Jamaica, B. W. I., 5-11-16.

Editor The American Friend:

Dear Sir: Some time ago, in a report of a meeting held by Ora W. Carrell, your paper gave out the impression that I had been arrested as a German spy. I write to correct this false impression.

Briefly stated, the facts are these: A certain amount of suspicion rested on me at one time, owing to the peace principles which we hold as Friends and which prevented me from taking part in recruiting meetings and in assisting in raising money for other than relief work. Added to this was the fact that my name is of German origin. When it became known to me that the authorities held such suspicions, I secured letters from prominent planters and citizens, in which they expressed their entire confidence in me. Later, I secured official copies of my birth record, and these were all forwarded to the office of the Governor, who expressed himself as satisfied with the evidence produced to prove my citizenship in the United States of America. Since then I have experienced no further difficulty.

Our own people, throughout the time when tongues wagged busily, were exceedingly kind. When the reply was received from the Governor and read at our monthly meeting, there was a time of general rejoicing. One officer said that if their minister had been found guilty as a spy that not only he, but many of the members of Friends meetings here would have lost their lives, so loyal had they been to us in the trying time through which we passed. We believe it has been the means of establishing greater confidence between minister and people, and that the effect of the suspicion has thus been, to a great extent, overruled by the Divine hand that shapes our lives.

As I am still receiving letters seeking information concerning my imprisonment, I write to ask that you publish this explanation.

Yours truly,

CHARLES KURTZHALS.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON.

JUNE 11, 1916.

Subject—Sowing and Reaping.
(Temperance Lesson.)

Lesson—Gal. 6.

Golden Text—God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. Gal. 6:7.

"Bearing one another's faults" is the gist of Paul's teaching in the first five verses of this chapter. Moreover this is the Christ like way of living. It is, after all a very common kind of life—with mothers. Jesus enlarged the family circle. He would in this respect have us be mothers to the unfortunate. It seems that we cannot understand the passage until we see how true it is that the parent enters the cell with the imprisoned son and suffers with him all the anguish of the hour. This element of God's nature is that which makes Him a father to us. It was this fault sharing which sent Jesus amongst men. He had compassion on the multitudes; He ate with publicans and sinners; He could say neither do I condemn thee, go and sin no more; on the cross amid the deepest soul sorrow, His love caught the dying words of the thief and promised him that together they should go into paradise. If—if we only could enter into this deeper appreciation of the need of the unfortunate ones, if we could only reach this height of divinity—God alone knows what would happen.

"Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap;" and the more we look into the depths of nature the more do we find that this statement contains a fundamental truth. It is true in the farm and garden. It is true in the soul, if we sow hate, hate we shall reap; if we sow love and forgiveness—if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. Jeremiah understood this truth very well and gave it utterance in these famous words: I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts. Jesus gathered this idea up and intensified it in his sermon on the mount; Ye have heard it said, but I say unto you—etc. But our boasted civilization has a new motto—sow preparedness and reap peace. It is hard for some people to be logical!

Verses 11-16 revert again to the subject of Mosaism—to the question which for so many years was the bone of contention between Paul and certain members of the Jewish Christian Church. Paul insists that the acts of the ceremonial law are in themselves nothing. Their observances may serve the desire for display, but the true Christian is interested in that which is substantial. It would be well for Christians of this day to keep this conception well in mind, that Life is of more value than "ism." "I bear branded in my body." This has always been an attractive passage to me. Paul had suffered much, in many ways, for his faith and the Church. Others might talk about their faith, but here was a man who bore the scars, positive evidences of a willingness to sacrifice all for the one and the cause he loved.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

"The Way to Personality," by George B. Robson. Published by Headley Brothers, Kingsway House, Kingsway, W. C. London, England. 210 pages; price two shillings, six pence net.

In the words of the author the book attempts to answer the question "Has the teaching of Jesus any regard and final value for the complex relationships of life in the present day?" The question is further raised as to whether or not Jesus would give the same counsels if he were amongst us in the body today as he did when he lived upon earth, and the statement is made that "We shall certainly have to make up our minds about these things if we desire to be sure that never again shall such a calamity be sprung upon an unprepared Christian church" as has come upon Europe within the last two years. Among the concluding words of the book are "Love, we find has given us a new understanding. We see men differently, we can approach them differently. Behind every face the Son of man greets us: The Son of Man, who is the Christ, the Son of the living God. The last word then is this: the Way of Life, the Way to Personality, is the way of Love." The whole book is a most vigorous effort to face without flinching the meaning of the message of Jesus to the world.

"Including You and Me," by Strickland Gillilan. Published by Forbes & Co., Chicago. 191 pages; price $1.00. The book contains over a hundred and, for the most part, humorous poems by the well known author of "Including Finnigan." Each poem seems to have the charming quality of human interest for which this well-known humorist is universally known. The author expresses the hope that every reader will clasp the volume more closely and say "My, that fellow's smart! Why, he knows the very same things I know." The book might well be prescribed as a sure cure for the blues.

"Your Baby," by E. B. Lowry. Published by Forbes & Co., 443 South Dearborn Street, Chicago. 254 pages, price $1.00. The book is a guide for young mothers and contains much that a mother wants to know and must know regarding the care of herself and her baby. Dr. Lowry not only pleads for better babies, but plainly tells how to prepare for them. That which is essential to the happiness of the mother and child is told in sixteen chapters.

"Russellism Under the Searchlight," by Rev. N. B. Cooksey, Published by the Abington Press, 222 W. 4th St., Cincinnati, 68 pages, price, paper cover, 15 cents, cloth 25 cents.

The author deals very vigorously with many of the well known fallacies of what has come to be known as Russellism, as preached by Pastor Russell throughout the country for some years past. Many of his statements and references to scripture are quoted, and the reader is left in part to judge for himself as to the unsafe character of the teaching of Russell.

MOSES BROWN SCHOOL

"A Book of Common Verse," by Albert L. Berry. For sale by A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. 38 pages.

This little work includes a selection of pleasing poems written in fine spirit, about which a reviewer has said: "It is like a walk in the country bringing me near to nature's melodies. I like its originality. I can never see moonlight on the water again without remembering

"And I saw the winds on tiptoe run Across the shimmering deep."

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

"We Can Bring Blessing"

By JENNIE E. HUSSEY

(In a Japanese home for lepers some Christians have formed an Intercessory Prayer Guild. They say: "We are the weakest of all God's creatures, but we want to work for Him. We know He will hear and answer our prayers, and we believe we can bring blessing to moral lepers." Many persons send requests for prayer to them.)

Bound by a malady nothing can cure,
Severed from contact with others,
Keeping a faith that is active and pure,
Reaching afar to their brothers:

"We are the weakest of creatures of God;
Still, by our prayers interceding,
We may help on in the path where they plod Others our ministries needing.

"We, in the bondage of physical pain;
They, in the thrall of temptation,
Seeking the haunts where their virtue is slain
Almost beyond restoration.

"Claiming Christ's word to the 'two that agree', Strong in the faith that 'He hears us,'
E'en the most sinful salvation may see,
Such is the promise that cheers us.

"Thus in our weakness approaching the throne,
Humbly His mercy confessing,
Boldly we plead that His favor be shown.
Thus we bring others a blessing."

A TRIBUTE

RICHARD S. AND SARAH W. COLLINS.

The Occasion Being the

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THEIR WEDDING DAY.
FOURTH MONTH 8, 1916

By Alice Earle Stevens.

Hail, dear Ones! the streamlets of whose noble lives,
Have blended into one through sixty useful years.
The retrospect reveals the golden sheen of love Shine brightly forth in all your labors, smiles, and tears.

A home where many children rose to call you blessed;
A home where genial hospitality abounded,
For when the old-time Quarterly Meeting came,
Large groups your glowing hearth and lavish board surrounded.

Full often in your hearts' and home's embrace were sheltered
The faithful servants of the Lord of noted name,
Who loyal to the Master's call there preached and prayed,
Regardless each of earth's brief and empty fame.

A stronghold of our Quaker faith, 'mid peace and plenty,
Appears that spacious home, mid scenes of nature's beauty;
All consecrated with a love divine for service,
Where joy serene kept pace with sterner sense of duty.

Within your gentle hearts the dove of peace has brooded,
There wars' dread scourge your souls' depths stirred.
Your protest 'gainst this blood-red carnage fearful,
With earnest voice persistent is ever to be heard.

Another curse that blights the fair land of our birth, Wrecks homes, breaks hearts, sows seeds of sin untold;
'Gainst this, your staunch souls wage a holy conflict firm.
Your prayers for vict'ry in golden censers angels hold.

In all good words and works, with God's free grace abounding,
A heavenly radiance gleams along your onward way.
The world is better made since you have lived among us,
With hearts surrendered to Christ's love and Kingly sway.

Life's flowing stream draws near eternity's vast ocean,
Within you is "the secret of the Lord," your souls' elation.
"With long life will I satisfy," His promise is fulfilled,
He will reveal in realms celestial, His glorious salvation.
Sunnycote, Tillson, New York.

How You Can Help The American Friend

These are a few suggestions, one or more of which ought to appeal mightily to a number of our subscribers.

1. Help the management by soliciting an advertisement or two from some reputable firm of your acquaintance. For instance, if you or your friend are going to purchase an automobile within the near future, arrange with the firm that a substantial amount of the purchase price shall be taken out in advertising, to be paid over to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for advertising space at the ordinary rates, which can be secured by addressing the manager at Richmond, Indiana. The same suggestion will apply to any other purchase where the investment amounts to something substantial.

2. Make note of the special offer of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to new subscribers for the next six months for fifty cents (announcements in another column) and endeavor to get a few new subscriptions under this offer. If you do not have time to see individuals personally, why not send in a check for two or three dollars with the names and addresses of persons to receive the paper for the six months indicated? This offer is for new subscriptions only.

3. Say a good word for the paper both publicly and privately as occasion requires and try to impress non-subscribers with the fact that they are losing much by not reading the paper weekly.

4. Send in brief news items of important events occurring in your meeting (unless your meeting is being frequently reported already). What has proved to be a great blessing to you locally will be an inspiration to others if they can only know about it.

5. Send us your suggestions, criticisms or otherwise, that will help us better to know what is needed and what our readers want. We cannot always comply with suggestions and criticisms, but out of the multiplicity of them we will be able to produce a better and more readable paper.

Remember

Remember that under our existing arrangement all correspondence about subscriptions, change of address, etc., should go to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Urbana, Ohio. All other correspondence relating to news matter, reports, contributed articles, advertising and general correspondence should be addressed to Richmond, Indiana.

For Young Friends—And Others

We call attention again to the announcement in THE AMERICAN FRIEND last week, to the effect that until the first of July new subscriptions to this paper can be taken at 50 cents for six months. At a time when the Young Friends' Movement and the C. E. Unions of some of the Yearly Meetings have set as their goal the securing of a certain number of new subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, this offer affords the opportunity to make good their resolutions.

We trust that all Young Friends—and others, will re-read the article under the above heading, beginning on page two of last week's issue, and that a team in each local meeting will begin at once a thorough business canvass of the membership. Remember that this means twenty pages of reading matter each week for twenty-six weeks, or 520 pages in all, and all this for 50 cents.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF QUAKERISM IN AMERICA

S. EDGAR NICHOLSON, Editor and Manager

Old Series
Vol. XXIII. No. 23.

SIXTH MONTH 8, 1916.

New Series
Vol. IV. No. 23.

A Greater Quakerism

It is more pleasant to contemplate the past than it is to face the stern realities of the present. It is far easier to feed off traditionalism than it is to construct a living organism that is adequate for the generation in which we live. It requires less thought—and courage—to proclaim against the sins of Israel than it does to specify the delinquencies of present-day civilization. The problem becomes more difficult if questions of ecclesiasticism are involved, for it has been the weakness of the church in all the ages that it is prone to run to forms and ceremonies, which, in reality, is only another way of stressing traditionalism.

It is in no pessimistic spirit that we raise the issue of a greater Quakerism, yet the fact can scarcely be ignored that the Society of Friends has been much given to the practice of traditional formalism in certain directions, while protesting against it in other directions. Of course it must be admitted that our protest has been mainly against the substitution of ceremonialism for vital, living Christian experience, but bondage to form in the methods of propagating religious truth is almost as dangerous as bondage to form in the expression of that truth. In either case the bondage is of a sort that hinders healthy growth rather than helps it.

We are not suggesting that the Society of Friends shall undergo a revolution. On the contrary, it is our conviction that something of the ancient practice of worship, wherein is involved a larger freedom of expression and the universal responsibility of the worshipers is healthy for this age and for any age. Yet, at a time like this, when the whole church is confronted with the responsibilities of world regeneration and of the reconstruction of the world's civilization to an extent that has never existed before, the Society of Friends needs to be more ready and able to adjust itself to the demands of the changing problems, and, to the extent that our methods of operation need revolutionizing, we should have the courage to face the issue.

As we see it, the Society of Friends is face to face with the alternative of continuing as a provincial church, operating in detached and widely scattered sections, with probably decreasing influence, or of broadening its operations until Quakerism, as at the beginning of its history, shall become potential again in national and world life. There is not much consolation in being told that denominations have gradually assimilated the fundamental truths for which Quakerism has stood. The fact in itself is splendid, but, standing alone, the meaning is irresistible that Quakerism is a dead issue. There must be something more vital in our appeal than this if Quakerism is to survive. The call to our youth and to our virile manhood and womanhood, anxious to do their part in making the world better here and now, must embody a living message and present a task worth while, if it is to meet a ready and irresistible response on their part, and on the part of others whom we would seek to influence. The coming few years will probably determine the ultimate destiny of our branch of the church, so far as its place in world regeneration is concerned.

It is not a question whether or not the Society of Friends is doing Christian work that is worth while. That will be readily granted. The question is whether or not it is doing the best and greatest work of which it is capable, and whether or not it is preparing its membership for the still greater tasks ahead. The indifferent farmer tills his land in the old way and makes a bare living year in and year out. The thrifty farmer improves his land, increases his crops, adds to his possessions and stores up wealth and energy as the means of greater blessing to mankind. Both life and service are good, but there are conditions in which only the more abundant life and a maximum of service will satisfy.

With evil triumphant in the world, and with war breaking down the bulwarks of civilization, the question has become a world question, as to how far the teaching of Jesus is a practical rule of conduct for human society and for international life, whether or not it is to be taken literally, and whether or not he would speak the same message to this age that he did to Judaism and the Roman world two thousand years ago. The church must meet this question without flinching, and its answer constitutes the supreme issue of the church, not only now, but in every age.

Has the Society of Friends no answer to this honest question of the world? To George Fox

there came the startling but soul-satisfying revelation that Jesus was able then to speak to every needy condition. It is just that revelation that the world needs today, and who better than Friends are able to speak its truth in life-giving power, until not only American civilization shall hear and heed, but questioning Europe and the non-Christian world as well. To be sure, we are few in numbers, and, above all, we are a modest folk, but modesty is not a virtue when mighty truth needs to be proclaimed with boldness. In the early days the Quaker apostles of truth went abroad into every land with their messages of new-found truth and Quakerism was heard and felt throughout Christendom. Real truth will always find an audience if only there are willing messengers to proclaim it.

Quakerism today needs a prophetic voice. What are we doing to produce it and to prepare the way for its coming? If it were to come, are we ourselves ready to welcome it and to back it up as the composite message to the world of a sincere body of believers, in whom the tenets of Jesus have found satisfactory exemplification? This voice must be both a cultured and educated voice. Have we been willing to put into our colleges that measure of spiritual worth and educational value that will enable them to contribute their full share to the preparation and equipment of this voice when it shall appear? It must be a sympathetic voice, sympathetic with youth and old age, with labor and capital alike, with the starving and with the affluent, with every condition of human life. For Quakerism at its best is religious democracy that makes Christianity available for all men and all nations.

Is it not time to take counsel together about our denominational standing and our corporate responsibilities? Facing the domination of evil in our own land, the appeals of a suffering continent abroad and the degradation of the non-Christian world in the Orient, the dark Continent and Latin-America, do we not hear the imperative call for a greater Quakerism, not for the sake of ecclesiastic profit, but for the sake of the world for whom Christ has died and to whom he bids us minister?

The Greatest Miracle

By ELIHU GRANT

(In response to a questioning letter from the Editor concerning the article under the above heading, the author has sent the following note, which seems to be explanatory both of the meaning and purpose of the article and which we publish herewith, with the consent of the author, in connection with the article itself.)

Northampton, Mass., May 12, 1916.

Dear S. Edgar Nicholson:

I did not have any hidden meaning in the article, but have come to believe that love and forgiveness are all of a piece whether so-called human or divine, to the Christian. Saying with Paul, "it is no longer I, but Christ, etc.;" it would seem to be the power of Christ that enables Christians to do his will and his word in this matter of offenses, to carry on his ministry and incarnate the Lord here and now. It is so much easier to give the body to be burned, to bestow gifts, to preach, to pray, to make a name, etc., than it is to forgive that it seems like love to spring from the greatest. From experience it seems the greatest miracle and to spring only from God and God-possessed people. My only doubt is whether I am a fit one to preach so exalted and so profound a doctrine. But I was preaching it to myself out of real need.

Please send it back and I will look it over and see what I can do with the article.

Fraternally,

ELIHU GRANT.

In my Bible reading the other day, I came upon the answer to an old question: What is the greatest miracle? It is in the familiar story in Mark, the second chapter, where the palsied man is brought by four helpers to the very presence of Jesus. Much attention has been given to the peculiar means by which those men introduced the patient to Jesus' attention. Jesus was especially attracted to the great exhibition of faith, and outraged the sensibilities of the Scribes by saying, "Son, thy sins are forgiven."

The Scribes voiced their horror in the question: "Why doth this man thus speak? He blasphemeth.

Who can forgive sins but one, even God?" As a child and youth my thought was always directed to that word, "God." It seemed to me that Jesus was saying in an indirect but convincing way, "therefore, I am God." But in the recent reading of the passage, it seemed clearer than ever before that whatever Jesus thought about that subject, he was not at that time giving it any attention, but he was leading the way in one of the greatest discoveries and performing his greatest miracle.

The great miracle of the forgiveness of sin must be prepared for. If people have an inadequate sense of the awfulness of the horror of sin, they will not realize the boon of forgiveness in its richness and uniqueness. Some one who sensed the similarity between Jesus' service and that of the great Hebrew leader of the same name, wrote, "and thou shalt call his name Jesus (or Joshua); for it is he that shall save his people from their sins." There has never been a time when it was not known that God could forgive. What Jesus spent his lifetime trying to show was that man could forgive. While the Scribes were right in their theory they were wrong in their spirit and attitude. What fruit is there in the theory that God forgives, if God's people refuse to be the conductors of that grace to each other? Priests, and special groups or institutions have arrogated much to themselves on this preaching, that God alone forgives. By claiming that God appoints special distributors of the grace and practically charging for the favors, worldly churches have been built up in the times of man's ignorance.

It is necessary to notice here that while the gospel John emphasizes Jesus' relation to God, the more primitive gospels emphasize his relation to man and represent truly that the habit of Jesus' speech was to use the title "Son of Man," which brings out the great truth that Jesus was the deliverer and Savior of man, the representative man, the revealer of what man may attain. Many of the lessons of Jesus show their true meaning when we remember the truth that he was living the kind of life that God wishes us to live. With a glow of revealing light, Jesus, our Lord, proceeded to show that his claim is true, "that the Son of Man hath authority on earth to forgive sins." And he said much more than that God, in heaven, forgives sins while the Son, on earth, forgives sins. Jesus said also, what is of tremendous importance to us, individually and socially, that He, as our representative, forgives sins.

One of the heresies that has appeared in the history of the church has been the denial of the humanity of Jesus. It has been a dangerous thought because its practical effect was to make it seem that what Jesus did could not be a practical guide for human beings. The fathers repudiated the heresy and claimed that Jesus was truly tempted and won real victories over evil, that there is blessed encouragement for us in every achievement of His. Just this is certainly included in Jesus' thought in Mark 2:10, "I, the typical man, right here on earth, can forgive sin, and it is the greater miracle beside which the mere matter of healing the physical body is secondary in importance."

Religion increases not by divine thoughts alone, but also by divine practices. Jesus evidently did not think of himself as doing things which his followers could not do. And this, His greatest deed, is for us, that we may forgive one another. Is there anything quite so hard as forgiveness in all its reaches? Surely the exact nature of forgiveness ought to be better understood. We have noticed how John put it in the words, "love one another." Have we not often failed of perfection because we have not understood the realms of forgiveness? Even the forgiveness of one's self, oftentimes the hardest for very sensitive spirits is to be included in our subject. We know how the withholding of forgiveness blocks, strangles, and chills endeavor and how societies stagger under wars that come of that evil spirit.

The authority of humanity in the name of its head, the Son of Man, to deal adequately with this great social problem of forgiveness is not to be disputed successfully. The question of the power and the willingness to carry out the function depends upon our acceptance of Jesus Christ. Without Him we have found that we can do nothing. The beautiful idea crumples under the drive of competition. Bitterness and hate are engendered and Christ is driven from the heart by the indulgence of revenge.

Age makes matters worse and except we become as little children we stay without the kingdom of heaven.

Jesus Christ's profoundest ministry is in the realm of forgiveness. Here we must find the spirit with which to understand the atonement. Here are the miracles of love. Here, too, alas, is the saddest reluctance of Christians to follow the Lord. In a mysterious way the individual Christian and the Christian society may bind or loose on earth and it will be done in heaven. Read Matthew 18:15-20 and notice the four measures urged there, not for the purpose of getting rid of the offender nor of simply clearing one's self, but in order to save, if possible, the erring one. First, see him about it; second, try with a select group to make peace; third, seek the help of the congregation; fourth, since he has determined to stand outside all these, acknowledge the fact and consider him outside. But this is to be done in genuine love and tender sadness and the principle that we are to forgive, times without limit, applies to him as well as to others. Of course, it takes two sides to make salvation result from forgiveness. Jesus would fain dispossess us of the demons of bitterness, hatred and grudge and be inspired with the Christlike disposition of love. Is this not the greatest of miracles?

Young Friends and The Ministry.

By ARTHUR M. CHARLES

(Prepared for Meeting on Ministry and Oversight.)

It may be possible that the failure of young Friends and others to be coming forward in the Ministry is partly due, first, to lack of freedom in our meetings for worship and second to lack of feeling of responsibility for using the freedom we may now have in the meeting for worship. I would therefore consider the meeting for worship as the point upon which to focus our attention in looking for causes and cures of the above noted failure. I will endeavor to set down some description of such a meeting for worship as might offer no cause, and effect some cure for such failure.

Our worship should be simple, free from ritual and reasonably free from formality. Its essential spirit should be freedom, individual liberty. Unreality in religion is answerable for much of the opposition to it which we find. Therefore we should strive after sincerity in worship by leaving each one free to speak, or to be silent, as prompted by the Divine Spirit. "God often reveals Himself to the waiting souls in a striking manner in our quiet assemblies." Rufus Jones speaks of worship as the "act of rising to a personal experimental consciousness of the real presence of God which floods the soul with joy and bathes the whole inward spirit with refreshing streams of life." Worship has been called a lost art. This consciousness of the real presence of God may come through a hymn rendered, through the uplift of an inspired sermon, through the message, crudely, falteringly uttered by any earnest soul in the congregation. To some, I believe, to many, whether Friends or not, it would come clearly in the corporate hush of the assembled group, waiting and each one expectant of "the positive experience of the real presence of God."

If worship has been called a lost art, may it not be because of the desire so common today of always to be having something "doing." With our busy driving modern temper we have lost the art of meditation of concentration of spirit which may yield the opportunity for the personal meeting of the soul with God.

But if, as asserted above, the essential spirit of our meeting for worship is freedom, we must be careful not to insist upon a Quiet or Silence in our meeting which would exclude freedom for vocal service any more than we should insist upon a service of hymn, sermon or testimony to the exclusion of a live silence.

If I were to outline a meeting which would not limit freedom, this individual liberty, unduly in any way, I would suggest that the meeting open, not with a hymn or any formal opening, but usually by all settling themselves in silence to prayer and praise and mediation. Each one should not merely feel free, but should feel an obligation to continue in silent worship or to break the silence by song, prayer or other spoken word as the Spirit gave him utterance. And here is where the elders may feel and exercise their responsibility. By each seeing for himself this silent worship is vital, by being himself ever attentive and sensitive, ready to use, to the Divine Voice as it may direct to vocal service, by seeking to bring the waiting congregation into a habit of expectant waiting, where each one will expect and will realize the real presence of God, and lastly by wise, tactful encouragement of individuals, get those who have a latent gift of expression to use that gift in the meeting.

The elders should work with the pastor in removing from the meeting the feeling that may exist that the silence of the meeting is merely an interlude to the real purpose and service of the meeting, and in bringing the members to see in it one of the most vital forms of our Divine worship.

Now, if I may add something on the pastor in the meeting, I would say that a clear, definite, inspiring message is something our members (in East Main Street) have come to look forward to each time we go to meeting. I believe we should continue to so expect and to welcome this pastoral message. But at present it does not in our meeting, and it certainly need not ever exclude the individual liberty, the spirit of freedom throughout the meeting if the pastor prizes this spirit and is careful to maintain and develop it. But this freedom should be a full freedom and as such should extend to and include the pastor, with the result that he certainly should feel under no obligation to preach if a visiting minister or other Friends, or if a local minister or other Friends should be led to such vocal service as would consume a reasonable part of the time of the meeting. And this latter condition, that is, expression from members in the body of the meeting is likely to so increase under the fostering care of a wise eldership, that more and more frequently the pastor may find his prepared sermon modified by, or even yielding place entirely to the Divine Spirit guiding and ruling in the meeting. As such a condition comes about this ministry and oversight body may cease to be troubled over the lack of Friends coming forward in the ministry.

Christ's Attitude Towards War

By W. H. CHAMBERLAIN

At this time, when so many professedly Christian nations are engaged in the bloodiest war of history, the question of Christ's own attitude towards war assumes a compelling interest. Serious thinkers, alike in the countries at war and in those which are still at peace, are striving to reconcile the teachings of Jesus with the apparent necessities of the modern world. Now it is obvious that a satisfactory solution of this problem can be obtained only by an honest and impartial study of the life and teachings of Jesus, as revealed in the Gospels, not by vague and arbitrary conjectures about what Christ might have said and done, if He were alive today. And a careful examination of the Gospel records, without preconceived prejudice in either direction, will, I think, prove beyond reasonable doubt that the great Teacher of Galilee was an unqualified pacifist, an advocate of "peace at any price." There are two ways in which we may determine a man's attitude towards a problem: first, by his words; and, second, by his actions. Let us first consider the words of Jesus Christ which bear upon the problems of war and non-resistance.

The Sermon on the Mount, as preserved in the fifth and sixth chapters of Matthew and in the sixth chapter of Luke, is universally regarded as one of the most decisive and significant expressions of Christ's thought. This sermon is simply filled with the plainest and most direct exhortations to passive submission, even to the most unprovoked and outrageous insults. "Resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also." "Whosoever shall compell thee to go with him a mile, go with him twain." Moreover, the Beatitudes, with which the sermon opens, exalt meekness and patience as the highest virtues. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Some of those who believe that Christ's teaching can be reconciled with defensive war maintain that these expressions were only meant for the rude and quarrelsome peasants who made up the major part of His audience. But the dangerous fallacy of this contention is almost too obvious to need refutation. Nearly all of Christ's sermons were delivered to audiences of rude and uneducated peasants and fishermen. If the character of His audience is to rob these sermons of their universal significance, then no part of His teaching can be said to rest on a secure foundation. Another objection to applying the principles of the Sermon on the Mount to international disputes is based on the assumption that principles which hold good for individuals are not necessarily valid for nations. It is very difficult to believe, from all that we know of Jesus of Nazareth, that He ever intended to sanction any such Machiavelian distinction between individual and national morality. But, laying aside this consideration, we find that He expresses himself decisively on the question of defensive war in another place. In Matthew 22, the Pharisees ask Him whether it is lawful to pay tribute to Caesar. If Jesus had considered the ideal of national freedom worth fighting for He certainly would have expressed Himself against submission to Rome. If any war is justifiable, it is a war for the preservation of national freedom and integrity. Yet Jesus said: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." Certainly this answer was not based on considerations of cowardice and expediency. Jesus spared neither His own life nor those of His followers when principles which He considered vital were at stake. Therefore we must believe that He condemned war, even when waged in behalf of national independence.

A great deal is made of Christ's statement that He came on earth to bring, not peace, but a sword. But, in this passage, He goes on to say that families shall be set at variance, the son against the father, the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law, etc. As it can hardly be supposed that Christ wished to promote domestic pugilism, we can only infer that He meant to indicate figuratively the disruption of families which would follow the advent of His new religious idea. There are only two passages which have even a faintly militant tone. In Luke 22:36-38, He advises His disciples to provide themselves with swords; and, when told that there are only two swords among His followers, replies: "It is enough." But, when we weigh against these two sayings alike His own conduct during His trial and the uniformly pacific attitude of the early Church, it is almost impossible to associate a militaristic flavor with His words. Moreover, in all the four Gospels, we have innumerable passages which impress on His followers, in the most unmistakable terms, the principles of forgiveness of injuries, love of one's enemies, and passive submission to wrong and injustice. It is not to be understood, from this last phrase, that Jesus ever advised His followers to acquiesce in or compromise with wrong doing. On the other hand, He exhorted them to protest against evil to the utmost, nay, even to lay down their lives, as He Himself did, in defense of truth and right. It is the use of physical force and violence as a means to resist wrong that He sweepingly and emphatically condemns.

The actions of Christ are quite as decisive as His words. In only one case can He be accused, by the wildest stretch of imagination, of using aggressive physical force. This one instance is, of course, the driving of the money-changers out of the Temple. And here the provocation was certainly great enough to excuse and explain His departure from His ordinary rule. He saw the Temple, which to Him doubtless represented the highest spiritual aspirations of the Jewish people, turned into a paltry business house; He saw the worship of the true God cast aside for the worship of Mammon. Certainly this one example of righteous indignation cannot outweigh the lessons which we must draw from the rest of His life, and still more from His death. Attempts have been made to derive a justification for war from Christ's bitter denunciation of the Pharisees. But these attempts lose all weight when we stop to consider that these denunciations are never accompanied by any exhortation to the people to rise up and overthrow this Jewish spiritual oligarchy by force of arms. On the other hand, even when Jesus was being condemned by the foulest judicial murder, He made no attempt either to escape or to stir up popular feeling in His favor; but fell a passive victim to the bigotry and malice of His enemies. There were innumerable reasons by which Christ might have justified a longer continuance of His stay on earth. But He preferred to drink His bitter cup to the dregs, to die at the very beginning of His ministry, rather than to violate the principles of non-resistance, of overcoming evil with good, which were the very cornerstone of His philosophy. Can any Christian nation claim that the preservation of its life and integrity is more important to humanity than was the preservation of the life of Jesus of Nazareth?

In a case where the interest of the Christian clashes so obviously with his duty, we have, quite naturally, a flock of arguments to prove that Christ's disapproval of war was conditional and local, not absolute and universal. One of the most specious of these arguments claims that, while a Christian has no right to avenge his own personal injuries, he has both a right and a duty to avenge those of his friends and neighbors. Perhaps this argument can be most effectively refuted by imagining, for the moment, that Christ were alive today, a Frenchman or a Belgian. We can well imagine Him cheerfully exposing His own life in helping the maimed and wounded victims of the war by every sort of consolation, spiritual and material. But can we imagine Him crouched in the trenches, waiting for a chance to kill some of the invaders, His face distorted with the frenzy of battle, His heart black with hatred and thirsting for revenge? Or, perhaps, leading a bayonet charge, consumed with the desire to hack, thrust, kill or destroy? The bare idea is so incongruous with every picture that we have of the life and character of Jesus that we turn away from it in horror and disgust. We have already considered the argument that Christ's active opposition to evil lends sanction to a righteous, or "defensive" war. Leaving out the fact that the ultimate responsibility for war is usually fixed after all the participants are dead and buried, that each side is always devoutly convinced that its enemies are the aggressors and that it is waging a righteous defensive war, leaving out these vitally important considerations, we still find that Christ did not regard war, and physical violence in general, as legitimate weapons in His warfare against evil. Rightly or wrongly, He thought that the persistent power of evil could only be overcome by the more persistent power of good; and His professed followers, if they are sincere, should certainly be ready to accept this conclusion and abide by the consequences.

Probably the most convincing argument against non-resistance in the minds of many, is the wonderful spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice that is now being shown on every battlefield in Europe. It seems preposterous to assert that men whose nobility and strength of character are so obvious, should be excluded from the ranks of Christ's followers. Certainly no honest or generous pacifist would wish to detract in any way from the credit that is due to men who are, every day, laying down their lives for a cause which they believe to be just and sacred. But, on the other hand, it seems sufficiently evident that while Jesus Christ would have applauded the courageous loyalty to ideals that has sent millions to fight and die in the trenches, He would have bestowed on the whole theory of war His unqualified and unsparing condemnation. The question whether Jesus Christ and His followers dying the passive death of martyrs, or Leonidas fighting to the last breath with his band of devoted Spartans represents the highest and most effective sacrifice for humanity and freedom, is not to be settled lightly or hastily. There is much to be said on both sides. But for a man to profess faith in Christ as a divine and infallible Being in one breath, and to violate one of His most sacred and unmistakable injunctions in the next, is certainly gross and inexcusable inconsistency. Christianity is accepted too hastily and thoughtlessly by many of its advocates. If a man believes that Christ's doctrines of love, unconditional forgiveness of injuries, and non-resistance, represent the highest possible ideal, then, and only then, does he have the right to claim Christ as his Lord and Saviour. If, however, he comes to the conclusion that these doctrines, however beautiful in theory, are impracticable and would actually promote wrong doing and injustice in practice, then, however much he may revere other phases of Christ's life and teaching, he can hardly call himself, with justice, a Christian. For these beliefs are almost the cornerstone of Christ's philosophy; and the man who rejects them, in theory or in practice, not only rejects Christ as an infallible divinity, but also disclaims faith in Christianity as a power that is destined ultimately to conquer and subdue the world.

It is at once ludicrous and pathetic to observe the complacency with which some advocates of religion view the increase in devotional fervor which appears in time of war. That men are so ready to express dogmatic faith in Christ at a time when they are about to violate one of His most solemn spiritual precepts, should be, to true Christians, a source, not of satisfaction, but of regret and shame. The issue stands out with clear-cut vividness. On one side war, patriotism, revenge of injuries, satisfaction of national honor; on the other side peace, internationalism, forgiveness of injuries, passive endurance of wrong and injustice. Only when the latter principles are carried out to the fullest extent can Christianity be said to stand forth as a prevailing, conquering world-force.—From The Haverfordian, April, 1916.

Perfection

J. H. B. in The Friend (Philadelphia).

The doctrine of Perfection had relatively a large place in the propaganda of early Friends. From the point of view of the present we often wonder why this was so, as the subject is one about which it were unusual to raise any question now. Perhaps this difference is due to the fact that the early Friends were face to face with an established religious order. Under the establishment the rites of the Church (baptism, confirmation, etc.,) and the assumption of priests in administering these rites, were regarded as essential parts of salvation. In the face of that situation the contrary claim struck at once at the root of priestcraft and at all the supposed virtues of sacerdotalism.

Without reviving the controversial presentations of the case the following quotations will show both how scriptural and how reasonable the doctrine was presented by Friends. Thus John Banks:

"When faith was begotten in my heart to believe in the Spirit of Truth that reproved me, I received power from Him in whom I did and do believe, to overcome one sin after another in order to a perfect freedom from it, which must be in this life, or else there is no entering into the kingdom of heaven. For all who live and die in sin are unclean and therefore cannot enter the kingdom. . . ."—Journal of John Banks, Friends' Library, vol 2, page 67.

Isaac Pennington is not one whit less emphatic—in some respects he may seem more clear:

"And this I can faithfully witness, that when the power is revealed, and the blood washeth, the soul is clean and as white as snow, and the enemy hath not power to break in, but life triumphs over him. And why may there not be a continuance of such a state? Yea, I verily believe many can witness a continuance of such a state, which the Spirit of the Lord doth not call less in them than a perfect state, a sound state, wherein Christ the Heavenly Physician hath healed them perfectly, and made them witnesses of true soundness of soul and spirit in the sight of God. O that all knew and enjoyed it, who truly desire and long after it!"

In both quotations it must be plain that the perfection that is claimed is a perfection of experience, a perfection of God's cleansing work in the heart. The salvation is "complete—nothing requisite is wanting."

In that early day, as in this, some of those who heard this doctrine thus proclaimed were confused because they understood it to be a claim for perfection in act—the possibility of an "ideal faultlessness" in human life. In the face of the belief that Jesus alone was thus perfect such pretensions seemed not merely unwarranted, they savored of blasphemy. In modern times we are not without instances of the same misconstruction of the doctrine of perfection. Under the claims of "holiness" and "complete sanctification," attention has been focussed on the acts of a man's life instead of on his heart experience. These human acts often have seemed very imperfect, and lacking in correspondence with the spiritual experience that has been claimed. Thus we have an evident misapplication of the doctrine of perfection if not a denial of it.

Some well concerned Friends have been uneasy with a presentation of the doctrine of Perfection contained in a letter of Archibald Crobie's in "The Friend" of Tenth Month 21, 1915.

A. C. says: "It is, however, a mistake to imagine that even the most devoted follower of the Master can reach perfection while the spirit remains in the body. The most spiritually-minded men and women have all along realized that their experience (in the acts of their lives) at its best is a striving after a higher, closer fellowship with God, to attain which is a continual warfare, a pilgrimage by a narrow path leading to eternal life." We have added the parenthesis "in the acts of their lives." Were this passage to stand alone we should feel that it was at variance with what we have quoted from John Banks and Isaac Pennington. It is, however, preceded by the following: "And Jesus, speaking of His people in His time, and of people of all time, said, 'He that liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.' That is that the ordinary life of the Christian should be in conformity to the will of God, and when the period comes that the spirit leaves the body no change should take place in its character. . . . Thus it is of the highest importance that we ever bear in mind that it is while in our present career that we get fitted for the conditions of the future. The devoted Christian is already in heavenly places with Christ Jesus by conformity to His law. And while this is an internal experience, it of necessity works outward, and men take knowledge of such people that they 'have been with Jesus,' because of their likeness to Him in character and conduct." It seems very clear to us that our friend intended to put in contrast the "internal experience" with the "character and conduct." We cannot reproduce the circumstances that gave rise to the letter, but we should expect to find that it grew out of the pretense of some to "perfection in human conduct."

Remember, too, that this paper is the property of the Five Years' Meeting and EVERY family should feel the responsibility of supporting it by a subscription, especially as the paper contains so much of direct benefit and interest to the whole church.

Will our Young Friends—and pastors not select their canvassing teams at once so they can get busy early in June? Friends ought not to be less loyal to their denominational paper than are others. We will feel that somebody has failed somewhere, if by the first of July we have not received under this offer at least 1000 new names. But this can be done only by an effort being made in every local meeting.

Present Tendencies Among Quakers

(Under the above heading, The Congregationalist had an article some weeks ago by R. W. G. of Chicago, which is in part as follows.)

The Quakers do not believe in war. They believe that the Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," applies to nations as well as to individuals. None of them will volunteer to do service in the army because there they would be obliged to kill. Yet they are willing to risk their own lives in other service which needs to be done in connection with the war. They will sweep the seas for mines, which is a dangerous occupation. They are fearless and conscientious in this work. Every mine they destroy means the possible saving of lives, according to their views. One English Quaker in his trawler removed 250 of these mines from the sea. Ordinarily the Quakers do not increase their membership to any large extent. Friends from the beginning have been consistent advocates of peace—in fact, they were the original "Peace at any price folks." In our own wars they suffered greatly the beginning have been consistent advocates of peace—in fact, they were the original "Peace at any price folks." In our own wars they suffered greatly for their advocacy of peace. The draft in President Lincoln's day got them into all sorts of trouble.

They have always been reformers and followed up their reforms at almost any cost. At least five of the world's great reform measures have been aggressively advocated by Friends—Peace, Absolute Equality of Women, Prison Reform, Temperance and Anti-Slavery. Women have had the same privileges in being recommended for ministers that men have had. As Miss Addams suggests, Friends have not grown in numbers appreciably, but for many years they have been a mighty force for leavening the whole lump. They have been a "corn of wheat" flung into the ground to die, and they have brought forth much fruit, though it is not called by their name.

This age does not deal gently with Friends. Their loose church government, the reputation for being a peculiar people and a certain lack of aggressiveness in seeking numbers, have kept them from growing. They have passed through a like evolution to that of Israel when it wanted a king. In the West especially they have demanded pastors, music, an order of worship and more conformity to the "world." They have gotten these, but the spirit of gentleness still persists and keeps them from the desired growth. In their striving after the things that had the credit of making other denominations great, Friends have fallen somewhat from their high estate.

I sat at the head of an old-fashioned Friends' meeting for five years, so I can never forget the characteristics that gave to their gatherings a remarkable religious power. There was the silent meeting—a living meeting, for the atmosphere was alive with the presence of the Eternal, and God spoke home to human hearts with a still, small voice. No doubt this was in the consciousness of Whittier when he wrote:

"Drop Thy still dews of quietness
Till all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of Thy peace."

Hurry was unknown in those meetings, nor was there anything of the feeling that something must be going on during every moment. God was there, waiting to bless every life that opened to him—that was enough.

Many Friends' meetings, especially those of the West, now have a pastor. It not infrequently occurs that he or she is quite uneducated and inexperienced and it sometimes happens is little more than a "ranter." Many of their meetings have lost the dignity, the quietness and the waiting for God to speak that characterized them formerly. In some cases Friends' boasted lack of form has become in itself a formality. The plan that Friends follow of "recommending" to the ministry those who give promise of being helpful in public speech in their meetings, without giving the candidates special training for the task, has brought about this condition that they probably have more of those they call "recommended ministers" who are unfitted for the task of edification than any other denomination, numbers considered. These larger meetings, especially in the East, still retain the dignity and reverential atmosphere of other days.

The music in most Friends' meetings is poor. It is not possible to bring a denomination suddenly to great musical standards. Friends are so new at the task that they have little or no heritage of hymns. They have produced few hymn writers and their meetings do not take kindly to spending money for music or for proper musical instruments. They protested so long against worshipping God with machinery that it is hard now for them to get into the musical mood. So far as their music is concerned, many of their Western meetings differ little from the old-fashioned Methodist revival.

Friends, with all their supposed quietness and calmness, have not been free from theological troubles. They had, as did Congregationalists, a controversy over the Person of Christ, which resulted in a separation so that there are now at least two bodies of Friends: the Orthodox, who are Unitarians, and the Hicksite, who are Unitarians. The latter is a very small body and does not grow at all. If I remember correctly, Whittier always remained a Hicksite Friend, though many of his writings are very Orthodox. Their theological troubles now are concerning Higher Criticisms and modern kindred doctrines.

What of the future of Friends? Even if they do not grow, or face gradual extinction, they have done an immortal work. They are to be found in every denomination and are usually loyal to the great fundamentals, are spiritually minded and are usually on the right side of great questions. The great denominations have almost without exception come to emphasize the spiritual message that made Friends great. They have kept their fundamental doctrines before the world until greater forces than their own have caught the vision. They have indeed brought forth much fruit.

"The Present-Day Message of Quakerism," by Charles M. Woodman, just issued by the Pilgrim Press, has a fine setting forth of the basis and guide of the Quaker life, the creed of the Society and the field for its message. The book is a worthy contribution to an understanding of this small but spiritual body of religionists, save that perhaps it idealizes somewhat the consistency with which Friends have lived their creed.

The Wrong Learning

A man may know all about the rocks, and his heart remain as hard as they; he may know all about the winds, and be the sport of passions as fierce as they; he may know all about the stars, and be as a meteor, whose end, after a brief and brilliant career, is to be quenched in eternal night; he may know all about the sea and his soul resemble its troubled waters, which can not rest.

A man may know how to rule the elements, yet not know how to rule his own spirit; he may know how to turn aside the flashing thunderbolt, but not the wrath of God from his own guilty head. He may have all the knowledge of a Newton, a Laplace, a Watt; he may know many mysteries and understand many hidden things, but if he has no personal knowledge of the love of God, brought near to sinful men in Christ, what shall it avail?

"For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Mark 8:36, 37).—Ex.

God grant that not only the love of liberty but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set his foot anywhere on its surface and say, "That is my country."—Franklin.

Women Ministry

By ESTHER B. L. TERRELL

It is not my purpose to discuss the rightfulness of the gift of women ministry. It is understood that our Church recognizes such gifts. But there is a strong feeling existing from coast to coast that women ministry is on the decline, that there is not the place for the women ministers there once was, or in other words, women ministry is not now very popular.

What is the cause of this condition? Some one says, women ministers have made mistakes and have not been true to their trust. But have men ministers succeeded any better? I do not think this an adequate reason. I know there have been mistakes made on our part, and at this time, I would entreat my sister ministers that we go before the Lord constantly and with His divine help, examine ourselves, seek to see ourselves as others see us, and pray constantly for grace and wisdom that we may not make mistakes which will hinder the cause and bring reproach upon us.

Let us always keep humble, "In honor preferring one another." As great a man as Paul said, "I am least of the Apostles; I am not meet to be called an Apostle." Jesus said, "Blessed are the meek." He pronounced woe upon the Pharisees because they loved the upper seats in the synagogues. We remember the Master's parable, "When He marked how they chose out the chief seats," Luke 14:8-10, and closed by saying, "Every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled: and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

If the Church does her duty (and we trust she will) she will push us up to the positions we are capable of holding and deserve, without our working wires to put ourselves there.

One reason for the condition under discussion is, in this stage of the world's progress, when specializing is called for, the Church has failed, first, to hunt out the young women who feel a call to the ministry, and second, has failed to encourage them to prepare themselves, or to make it possible for them to prepare themselves adequately for the work.

Another reason perhaps is, it is the common understanding that if the young woman marries, upon her falls the care of the home and the rearing of the children; therefore, she does not have the liberty for ministerial work which the man does.

To the young woman who feels that God is calling her to the ministry I want to say, forget all about the possibility of getting married, and as God opens the way, thoroughly prepare thyself for the work of the ministry and then enter into that work. After which, if the Lord opens the way for thee to marry, it will not hurt the cause in any way for thee to give up the active ministry if necessary for a few years while rearing the children. Thy usefulness in the world will only be the richer for the experience when thee again takes up the work. Therefore, this should not be an excuse for barring women from the ministry.

Every Yearly Meeting should take this subject under serious consideration and appoint a committee to search out the young women called to the ministry, encourage them to prepare themselves for the ministry and if they are not able, make it possible for them to do so.

Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings took up the matter in a quiet way last fall, and I hope all other Yearly Meetings will do so this year.

My Chief Need

My heart needs Thee, O Lord, my heart needs Thee! No part of my being needs Thee like my heart. All else within me can be filled by Thy gifts. My hunger can be satisfied by daily bread. My thirst can be allayed by earthly waters. My cold can be removed by household fires. My weariness can be relieved by outward rest. But no outward thing can make my heart pure. The calmest day will not calm my passions. The fairest scene will not beautify my soul. The richest music will not make harmony within. The breezes can cleanse the air, but no breeze can cleanse a spirit.

This world has not provided for my heart. It has provided for my eye; it has provided for my ear; it has provided for my touch; it has provided for my sense of beauty; but it has not provided for my heart. Provide Thou for my heart, O Lord. It is the only unwinged bird in all creation; give it wings, O Lord. Earth has failed to give it wings; its very power of loving has often drawn it into the mire. Be Thou the strength of my heart. Be Thou its fortress in temptation, its shield in remorse, its covert in the storm, its star in the night, its voice in the solitude. Guide it in its gloom; help it in its weakness; direct it in its doubt; calm it in its conflict; fan it in its faintness; prompt it in its perplexity; lead it through the labyrinths; raise it from its ruins.

I cannot rule this heart of mine; keep it under the shadow of Thine own wings.—George Matheson.

Spiritual Density

Is not God, who made the sun to shine, also willing and able to let his light and his presence so shine through me that I can walk all the day with God nearer to me than anything in nature? Praise God, he can do it. Why, then, does he do it so seldom and in such feeble measures? There is but one answer: You do not permit it. You are so occupied and filled with other things—religious things, perhaps—that you do not give God time to make himself known, and to enter and take possession.—A. Murray.

It is not going out of port, but the coming in that determines the success of a voyage.—Henry Ward Beecher.

The Last of a Bad Boy

By SUSAN HUBBARD MARTIN

The stone had made a clean-cut opening through the beautiful, stained-glass window. Whoever had thrown it had aimed true.

Mrs. Day turned to Mrs. Abbott that Sabbath.

"Another window broken," she exclaimed.

"Isn't it dreadful that we have our church in such a bad neighborhood? We ought to move it."

Stephen Best saw it, too, as he went up the aisle that Sabbath, but all the comment he made was: "Brethren, we must redouble our missionary efforts. We have need of them in this community. Another of our beautiful windows has been broken."

The next day he saw a little, round-faced boy playing in the sand near the church. "Do you know who broke that window, my lad?" he asked, pleasantly.

The small boy looked up. "Yes, sir," he answered. "Garth Raymond broke it; I saw him throw the stone." The boy paused. "He's an awful bad fellow," he added. "You won't tell him I told you, will you? He'll lick me if you do."

"No," replied Stephen Best, "I won't tell him. Do you know where he lives?"

"Yes, sir; in that house over there where the gate is down."

It was a small, dingy place, fast falling into wreckage. The back yard was full of old boards and tin cans. A pale-faced woman in a faded dress was just carrying in some wood.

"Thank you, my boy."

"The next moment Stephen Best had started toward it. Just before he got to the gate, however, the door opened and a tall boy sauntered out. His hat was on the back of his head; he wore no collar. He walked with something of a swagger. As he reached the space that had once been a gate he stopped and lighted a cigarette.

Stephen Best went up to him. "Are you Garth Raymond?" he asked.

"I am," insolently replied the boy.

"Did you throw a stone through one of the stained-glass windows of my church?" The voice was still pleasant.

"I did." The boy's voice was more insolent still. There was a scowl on his face. "Well, what are you going to do about it?" he sneered.

Stephen Best laid a hand on the boy's shoulder. "I'm not going to do anything about it," he said, gently. "The fact is, Garth, I think you need me."

"Need you?" cried the boy, his eyes blazing—"me need you? I haven't got any use for a preacher."

"So I suppose; nevertheless, a preacher has his uses. You see, my boy, I didn't go into the ministry to help the good boys. I went into it because I thought I might be of service to boys like you.

Garth stared. In all his life he had never heard any one speak like this. He wanted to get out of sight; still, there was something very attractive to this boy about the big, broad-shouldered man with the kind eyes.

"What do you want with me, then?" he asked, sullenly.

"I want nothing; only to be your friend."

"My friend?" There was a catch in Garth's voice. "Do you really mean it?"

"I really do."

The boy dropped his head; then all at once he lifted it. "Then I'll tell you something," he cried. "I'm tired of being a bad boy—of being looked down on, with nobody to give me a kind word. I'm tired of living in a place like this. I'd like to be different, but there's never been any one to help me."

Stephen Best laid his hand again on the boy's shoulder. "There's your Saviour, my lad, and me. My church is a very beautiful one, as you see, but, I repeat it, I am not in it because of the good people there. I am working in that church, Garth, because of those outside. The good boy, the boy who does his best, doesn't need me."

Garth looked at him squarely. But "the boy—the bad boy who broke your window—he does. Isn't that it?"

The minister smiled. "Very like it," he admitted.

Garth Raymond stood still. "And you'll be a friend to me?"

"The best I can be, my boy. We'll talk this matter over right now and see what we can do about bettering things for you, Garth."

"Yes, sir."

Such was the beginning of Garth Raymond's new life, a life, a life destined to be full and useful, a blessing to the world; and all because of the great, loving heart of the minister of that church whose window he had broken.—Watchword.

Those Who Stray

"The old shepherd who offered prayer in a Welsh revival meeting put it exactly right when he lamented his backsliding in these words: 'Lord, I got among the thorns and briars, and was scratched and torn and bleeding; but, Lord, it is only fair to say that it was not on Thy ground; I had wandered out of Thy pasture.' And there are many others whose scars were obtained in the devil's thickets outside the field where duty called them."

Oh, beware of your own way! Follow the Lord fully. Take no path that conscience tells you is doubtful. If God's smile is not on it, abandon it forever. Christians bring sorrow of heart upon themselves, darkness of soul and loss of peace, not so much by taking wrong paths as by taking doubtful ones.—Frederick Whitfield.

In the struggle of principalities and powers of which in childhood we knew nothing, we learn to say, "Our Father," with the same faith and heart with which we said it when we first repeated it.—F. D. Maurice.

A SUGGESTION FOR THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

One society held a mid-summer picnic for its usual meeting in a nearby grove. The near neighbors as well as the ladies' households were special guests. The program was given late in the afternoon to avoid the excessive heat. The young people gave the music. They closed the service in time for supper on the lawn before dark. The social side of such meetings is most helpful, as it gives an element of sociability to our work that is much needed in most of our auxiliaries.

THEATRE MEETINGS AT SAN MANUEL.

The owner of the theatre at San Manuel in Cuba has placed the building at the disposal of our mission every Sunday afternoon. Lloyd Mendenhall from Puerto Padre, has been going over there once each month to conduct service in English for the Jamaicans who have made San Manuel their home. And now the Jamaicans are beginning to hold services themselves on the Sunday afternoons when there is no preaching service.

TEACHERS' TRAINING CLASS AT SANTA CRUZ DEL NORTE.

Six girls and young women at this station in Havana Province, Cuba, have entered a class in Training for Sunday School teaching. They hope later to be placed in charge of classes.

WORK AMONG MEN AT VICTORIA, MEXICO.

A Men's Bible Class was started a few weeks ago by Solomon Tice. It meets regularly on Sunday afternoon. Mr. Tice reports that there is remarkable readiness on the part of men to investigate the claims of evangelical Christianity. Two men recently made an open confession of Christ for the first time. Others are seriously considering the same step. Writing on April 30th, Mr. Tice says, "I think there never was a time when we needed the prayers of God's people as much as we do just now."

FOUR MEETINGS UNITE IN CONFERENCE.

On Sunday, May 14th, the missionary superintendents of Spiceland Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, conducted a union missionary conference at Cadiz. Shirley, Kennard, Clear Springs and Cadiz meetings were all well represented in the afternoon session. The regular morning service was conducted by Prof. Morrison, of Earlham College, who spoke especially to the church membership upon their opportunities and how to make use of them. In the afternoon, two excellent readings were given, one by Mrs. Ira Bell, of Clear Springs, the other by Miss Kitterman, of Shirley. Prof. Morrison followed with a strong address on "Personal Responsibility." W. M. Stafford, of Carthage, gave a brief sketch of our mission fields, and Oliver Beeson, of Shirley, gave his personal experiences relative to tithing. Both were very valuable. A letter from Russell Burcham, a local young man who is in school preparing himself for missionary work, was read. Good music throughout the program helped to make the time well spent. A similar conference was held at Shirley in the same Quarter two weeks earlier than this one.

DISPENSING JUSTICE AT KETOSH, AFRICA.

Today, as I was at the dispensary, a woman came with a grievous tale about one of the school boys who had taken a chicken. She expected me to have him return the fowl at once. When the boy was called he said the husband had obtained beef from him long before to bring in poles and grass for his house, and that, as he had not brought the poles and grass, he had taken the chicken in place of the beef. A chicken here is never worth more than 8 cents, sometimes only 4 or 5 cents. As I could not be certain of the truth of the matter, it was left until more competent witnesses can appear. This is only a sample of the every-day run of little and larger neighborhood difficulties that they believe the missionary should adjust. Sometimes it is a garden injured by goats or cattle, or a wife who refuses to go to the man who has bought her.

I deal only with cases in which my school boys are involved; all others must go to their chief. One morning two men came to get a letter to compel some one who had bought honey from them, two days' journey from here, to pay them for the honey. A white man's letter hath wondrous power in this land. They were sorely disappointed when they did not get the letter. They even offered to pay 3 cents for one. But what did I know about the case? And what authority had I to tell people there to pay money, even if they did owe it?

"MISSIONARY PROGRAM MATERIAL"

Graded for the Sunday School

A new book, by Anita B. Ferris, bearing the above title is not a book of programs, but is the material out of which programs can be made. It contains graded material for missionary programs in the beginners', primary, and junior departments of a Sunday school. The material may also be used for a Sunday afternoon or evening concert, a week-end interdenominational and social evening, or an informal department gathering.

The most of this material is compiled from standard books and mission board publications. A part of it is original. It recommends certain good material; it prints some material; and gives many suggestions as to the source from which other valuable material can be obtained.

Miss Anita B. Ferris, the author, is an experienced Elementary Sunday School worker and has tried out the most of this material in her own Sunday School, or has known of its use in some other neighboring school.

The book starts with a description of the making of a program, and two specimen programs are given. Then there is a short description of how to use devices to increase interest, followed by a section on missionary hymns and songs with references to the books where the hymns can be found that are not printed in full. The main body of the book is composed of seven sections as follows: American Indian, Africa, China, India, Siam, Mohammedan lands, South Sea Islands, and General. The General section includes missionary recitations and exercises that are not related to any particular country. The sections on the various countries contain a Bibliography, instructions on the use of costumes, a story or two, and the names of stories that may be used, with reference to the sources of the stories. The material varies for the different countries. The Chinese section gives some of the Chinese Mother Goose jingles, Chinese games, exercises, and a demonstration.

This book is one that will be useful to any person who is looking for good material to be used by Elementary pupils. The material is choice, wholesome, well arranged, and well adapted.

The price is 50 cents, postpaid. The book may be ordered from the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Indiana.

CHURCH AT WORK

Marion, Indiana—Charles E. Hiatt has accepted the urgent invitation of the First Friends Church in Marion to remain another year as its pastor. His decision to stay was heartily endorsed by the Sabbath School, by the press of the city and by a unanimous expression given by the congregation at the morning meeting on May 14. He and his wife began their pastorate here in October, 1908, and have rendered faithful services since that time, with the exception of one year spent at Long Beach, California. His preaching is clear and uplifting and his life among us is an inspiration.

Our Sabbath School is a living and active organization under the leadership of Fred Lillard, its energetic young superintendent. The average attendance the past month was 304, with an average collection of $10.91. The large attendance of adults, both men and women, is an encouraging feature. The primary department has its separate organization, with Mrs. Everett Reece as its superintendent. She has proved herself to be an untiring and efficient leader. Extensive preparations are being made for the observance of Childrens' Day on June 11. Mothers' Day was suitably observed on May 14. The collection taken for Southland on May 21 amounted to $13.62. On May 28 the pastor made a stirring appeal for help for the starving women and children in the war countries, resulting in an offering of $24.29.

The men of the meeting and neighborhood have organized a Penn Fellowship Circle and are expecting to do good work for the betterment of the community. Several of our young people attended the C. E. Convention recently held at Jonesboro and interesting reports are being given in the C. E. meetings.

Poplar Ridge, N. Y.—A collection amounting to $13.00 was taken in the morning meeting May 28 for "The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief."

A young men's class has been started in the course outlined by Jenks in "The Social Significance of the Teaching of Jesus." Seventeen attended the class Sunday.

A student Volunteer Team from Cornell University will speak at both services on Sunday, June 4. A meeting has been appointed for them at Venice Center, a village three miles away, where there is a church but no regular services. The members of the team are: Prof. L. E. Wolferz, of Pekin University, a Ph.D. from Cornell University this June. Miss E. I. Boardman, graduate of Smith College, Medical student in Cornell; D. S. Hatch, in the Extension Department of the Agricultural College of Cornell University appointed to do Y. M. C. A. work in Mesopotamia, in Arabia, in the war zone, and E. J. Anderson, instructor in Cornell University, preparing for educational work in India.

The evening meeting, May 28, was dismissed on account of a meeting at Ledyard, a stereopticon lecture, The Trial of John Barleycorn.

W. J. Reagan spoke to the Endeavorers of the Presbyterian Church at Scipioville, Sabbath evening, May 28, on "The Business of Being a Christian."

Dover, Ohio—Sabbath, May 21, was called "Brown's Day" at Dover. For some time Albert J. Brown was pastor of this church and as he is soon to leave the state and go to another field his many friends of Dover invited him to come as a farewell. He was present at the Sabbath School and gave an enthusiastic lecture on Sabbath School work in general and emphasizing the spirit of the contest which we are now having with our neighbors—Chester. At the noon hour a great feast was spread in the shade and all enjoyed the social hour. In the afternoon, after the singing of "All Hail the Power," and prayer by Mrs. Sydney Bailey, President Brown preached a powerful sermon on "The Invisible and the Value of Friendships." Although the house was crowded every one listened with greatest attention to catch every thought, because it was all so worth while. The music which was much enjoyed was furnished by Messrs. Austin, Villars, Jones and Brann from Wilmington, with Mrs. Austin as accompanist. The day was also gladdened by the presence of so many of our friends, especially that of Josephus Hoskins, who spent the winter in California. We left the church feeling that it had been a great day and wishing President Brown and his family great success in their work in their new home.

NEWS NOTES.

Pliny Fry, Harry R. Keates and Richard Haworth, of Iowa Yearly Meeting, attended the sessions of Nebraska Yearly Meeting at Central City last week.

M. Davis Branon has accepted the pastorate at Yorktown Heights, N. Y., for the coming year. He expects to take the summer course at White's Bible School June 14 to July 25.

Theodore Foxworthy, Superintendent of Evangelistic and Church extension work of Nebraska Yearly Meeting, has about recovered from an operation performed in April.

Commencement exercises of Nebraska Central College were held on the evening of May 29 with a large attendance. Field exercises were held the following day with an alumni banquet at night.

Chloe Breed, widow of Stephen Breed, suffered a stroke of apoplexy at Bloomington, Indiana, on April 25. She has so far rallied as to be able to walk some about the house without being supported. She is at the home of a relative in Bloomington, where she is tenderly cared for.

Pacific College commencement exercises are being held this week. Levi T. Pennington, president of the college, delivered the baccalaureate sermon last Sunday, while Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Young Friends' Board, was scheduled to give the class address yesterday. The American Friend acknowledges with appreciation the receipt of an invitation to attend the exercises.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

WHY BE A QUAKER?

By Charles M. Woodman.

The Apostle Peter tells us that we should have a reason for the hope that is within us. The advice is pertinent today. We ought to know, and be able to tell, why we are Christians, and why we belong to the particular branch of the Church which is called the Society of Friends. The reason we have for our denominational affiliation should be more vital than the answer given by a man who, when asked why he was a Republican, replied, "Because my father was a Republican." Doubtless many Friends are such today because their parents were, or because the Friends Church was the only one in the community where they were brought up. These are reasons, but hardly adequate for a vital faith in the denomination, or a virile loyalty to Quaker ideals. Consider some reasons which make it worth while to be a Quaker.

1. Quakerism possesses a history which is rich in the spirit of martyrdom. Early Christianity flourished under Roman persecution. Quakerism has its page of sufferings, where brave souls faced social ostracism, imprisonment and death because they believed something and were willing to die for it. In an age which is willing to believe most anything, and live most anyway to be identified with an organization which numbers martyrs among its honored dead is a tonic for any aspiring soul.

2. Quakerism is a simple faith. The person who seeks Christian fellowship in this fold finds admission through no labyrinth of ecclesiastical forms, or stern set of rigid dogmas. His personal religious experience of the living Christ as saviour and friend is the single door or condition of membership. He enters here to grow, to go in and out and find pasture.

3. Quakerism has always emphasized the fundamentals as those conceptions of truth which find expression in character and experience rather than in intellectual statement or theory. To the Friend the ability to live in a measure the crucified life with Christ is more essential than any theory of the atonement. The incarnation is more an expression of Christ living in the soul, revealing himself through the character than a mere dogma to be intellectually assented to. This basal principle produced the Quaker character which has won such a high reputation among all people. It is more essential to guard the Quaker name by producing a rising generation of virile Quaker characters than by securing Federal legislation to forbid its improper use. The latter we wish to see; the former we must have if Quakerism is to survive. The possession of it depends upon the young Friends.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS.

The committee in charge of the Efficiency Campaign for Indiana Yearly Meeting, held a very enthusiastic meeting in West Richmond, and discussed details, and laid final plans for pushing the campaign. We bespeak for this Team the hearty support and co-operation of all pastors and Young Peoples' leaders in every Meeting of the Yearly Meeting.

Western Yearly Meeting Assembly will be held in Westfield, Ind., July 25-27. Some of the speakers will be W. O. Trueblood, Morton C. Pearson, William J. Sayers and Thomas E. Jones. Every meeting of the Yearly Meeting should have several delegates present.

If at all possible, keep the Junior Societies going during the summer months. Plan for out door meetings. Take the boys and girls on a tramp. Study plants, birds, stones, etc. Make collections. Mount leaves in a booklet, name them, and send to some Missionary. Other attractive plans can be had for the asking. Write Young Friends Board, Junior Department.

Have you organized your Cedar Lake Club? Ask your Quarterly, Monthly and Local Meeting to send a delegate. Have you seen "The First Call?" If so, post it in a conspicuous place; if not send to us for one.

NEWS.

The Social Service Committee of Muncie (Ind.) Meeting, decided last summer that its best work would be an attempt to acquaint all the members of a fast growing congregation with Friends' life and ideals from the inception of our denomination. They organized a Quaker Study Round Table to train leaders for neighborhood groups at a later period. For best results the class was limited to twelve members, and we met every two weeks in the home of a member. We begin at 7:30 and close by 8:45 or 9 o'clock. The Chairman of the Social Service Committee appoints a leader from the membership who presents the lesson for the evening. The lessons are so full of vital problems today, that they elicit many questions and some profitable discussion. The evening always includes a word of prayer, which binds upon our hearts the truth we have gained. Recently an open meeting was held at the church; there was a gratifying attendance and great interest shown in the life of Robert Barclay, presented by William J. Sayers, pastor of the Meeting, and George Fox's experiences in America, by Anna Doan Stephens.

STUDY CLASS.

5.—Meetings.

a. The meeting should be held once a week if at all possible. When it meets less often than this the interest is likely to lag.

b. It should begin on time and close as promptly. If only two or three have assembled when the time comes, the leader should open the meeting.

c. It should last from an hour to an hour and a half. The length of the meeting should be arranged at the first gathering. This first meeting should be for organization, when all details, such as mentioned above, should be arranged.

d. The courses usually cover a period of from eight to ten weeks. This is regulated by the course chosen.

e. The independent study class should meet apart from any other meeting. The best work is done around a table in a private home or a quiet Sunday School room. No other engagement should be allowed to conflict with this class.

THE IOWA PAGE

C. E. DEPARTMENT.

Des Moines—The First Friends C. E. Society spent a very enjoyable evening May 15 at the home of Miss Mary Anderson. The Endeavorers held a short, interesting business meeting, after which they engaged in music, games and light refreshments.

Ackworth—Our C. E. Society held a social with the business meeting in April. Our efficiency chart has a standing of one hundred per cent and we have received the Red Seal. Some of our absent members write that they are still interested in C. E. and they ask a share in our prayers.

Oskaloosa—Our C. E. together with other young people of the city had the privilege of hearing Daniel Poling, associate president of the United Society, in his address, "Mothers of Men," last week. Our intermediate society has just paid their missionary pledge of $31.06. Our treasurer, Cassa Conover, is hoping that other Societies will send in their money soon. The year is three-fourths gone and not half of our money is in. The interests of Cedar Lake Conference were presented in both Societies May 21. We hope we shall have some representatives there.

Are you planning to attend Yearly Meeting? Ross Hadley, Assistant Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, will conduct a mission study class that will surely be interesting. Other good things are in store.

We want enough representatives from the Societies of each Quarterly Meeting to work up a stunt for the evening of the annual picnic. Boost for Yearly Meeting.

FIELD NOTES.

Muscatine, Iowa—Alvin Hoskins, of Richland, gave his stereopticon lecture on "The European War and International Peace" before a large audience at the Bloomington Friends church. The lecture was highly appreciated. A good way to help advance the cause of peace in your community is to ask Mr. Hoskins to give his peace lecture, illustrated with 100 slides, photographs taken from the battle fields of Europe.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.

It is regretted there is a conflict of the dates of the Christian Workers' Assembly of Iowa Yearly Meeting, June 26-29, and the Iowa State Sunday School Convention, June 27-30.

When the date of the Assembly was fixed, the Sunday School Convention date was June 20-23, but a local situation arose where the convention is to be held which forced a change of dates. This occurred too late for the Assembly to change its date.

President of Assembly Board.

AT FRIENDSVILLE, TENNESSEE.

Commencement week at Friendsville Academy began on April 16, when Dr. Charles K. Hoyt, of Maryville College, preached the baccalaureate sermon on the subject, "Thinking God's Thoughts After Him." On Tuesday evening the class play, "The Merchant of Venice Up-To-Date," was given to a crowded house and was very successful. An entertainment by the primary and intermediate students and a play entitled, "The Sweet Girl Graduates," were given Wednesday evening. The regular commencement exercises were held in the new Farnum Hall on Thursday evening. Prof. Riley Haworth, of East Tennessee State Normal, Johnson City, gave a very enthusiastic address. One young woman, Ula Gaye Hackney, has completed the course and received her diploma.

The school year has been characterized as one of the most successful in the history of the institution. The attendance has been good and the loyalty of both students and community has been manifested in an unusual degree. The resignation of Miss Mabel Beck was accepted with many expressions of regret. She has accepted a position in Friends Academy, Moorestown, New Jersey. Herman G. Tener has been elected Principal of Friendsville Academy.

HAVERFORD COLLEGE DONATION

Haverford College has received a donation from the estate of the late T. Wistar Brown amounting to about $350,000.00 for the purpose of graduate instruction in the Bible, Philosophy, Sociology "and kindred subjects."

It was not the purpose of the gift to establish a professional theological school or to confine the instruction to students preparing for vocal ministry, but also to give instruction to graduates who would prepare for social work, for Y. M. C. A. and similar secretaries, and for the application of Christian principles to business and professional life. It was to give a serious education to laymen in subjects which to the donor seemed of transcendent importance.

It is too soon to determine just how the income shall be applied. Probably but little will be done before the fall of 1917, as a year of thought and planning is none too long for making the wisest disposition of a beneficent possibility. There are, however, great opportunities to work out a plan of the highest utility for Friends and others.

The College has also received a bequest of $150,000.00 for the establishment of a chair of English Constitutional History. This is a munificent provision for the purpose and should procure an unusual equipment in scholarship.

Whatever other results come from these additions to the resources of Haverford it is evident that there will be added to its teaching force two or three men of the highest character and attainments, and the way will be open for a modest beginning in graduate work in a few departments.

CONGRESSIONAL PEACE RESOLUTION.

Senatore Gore, of Oklahoma, has introduced into the Senate Concurrent Resolution 22, which is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress and the people of the United States are desirous of maintaining an honorable and lasting peace with all the nations of the world, and pending war among other nations are desirous of maintaining even-handed and undiscriminating neutrality.

Second. That the Congress and the people of the United States will support all efforts on the part of the president to preserve such a peace and to observe such neutrality.

Third. That the Congress and the people of the United States earnestly desire and would hail with profound satisfaction the return or restoration of permanent peace to the warring nations of the Old World.

Fourth. That the Congress and the people of the United States would approve and support all seasonable efforts on the part of the President to encourage or to facilitate the establishment of a permanent peace among the warring nations upon such principles as would best conserve the interest of civilization and insure, so far as may be, international peace and justice for the future.

They that bow their heads before God may hold them erect before the world.—A. S. Wilshire.

PENN COLLEGE DISASTER.

Friends throughout America will feel the deepest sympathy for Penn College, which has suffered such a great loss by fire. In the early morning of May 27, a fire started in one of the laboratory rooms of the main building and rapidly spread throughout the building.

The death of two men and the serious injury of two others added greatly to the horror of the situation. We learn that some equipment was saved, especially the costly art pictures. In common with all who know of the excellent work of Penn College, The American Friend expresses its sympathy to the management and to Iowa Yearly Meeting at this time of their trial. The loss is said to be almost a total one so far as the building and much of the equipment is concerned. We understand the insurance carried was only a moderate amount.

JOHN WOOLMAN PILGRIMAGE

Members and friends of the Friends Historical Society, of Philadelphia are invited to join a John Woolman Pilgrimage to Rancocas and Mount Holly, N. J., on Seventh-day, Sixth Month 10th. The recently restored John Woolman House at Mount Holly, which will then be open, will be the objective point of the trip.

It is planned to go by the Pennsylvania Railroad on a special train, with which the ferry-boat leaving Market Street Wharf at 1:25 will connect. This train will make stops at Moorestown and Masonville. A limited number of those who so desire will be met at Masonville by automobiles and conveyed to Mount Holly by way of Rancocas, at an extra cost of fifty cents. Brief stops will be made at Rancocas Meeting House, a fine old house "as yet unspoiled," and at the old Woolman farm on which John Woolman was born and which is now occupied by Granville Woolman Leeds. Those who do not stop off at Masonville will go direct to Mount Holly, where the Woolman House is to be found at No. 9 Branch Street.

The following program has been arranged, to begin at four o'clock:

1. Introductory remarks, Davis H. Forsythe, President.
2. The Local Associations of John Woolman, with Some Account of the Woolman Memorial, Amelia M. Gummere.
3. Whittier's Poem on John Woolman, Hannah P. Morris.
4. John Woolman's Message to the World, Max I. Reich.

The return train will leave Mount

The American Friend Book Department

The American Friend is arranging to handle books, booklets and pamphlets which will be of general interest to Friends in America. Arrangements have already been made with the John C. Winston Company of Philadelphia, Friends Book and Tract Committee of New York City and the United Society of Christian Endeavor to receive orders for their publications. We hope soon to make similar arrangements with other houses, so that in the near future orders can be sent to us for practically any book that will be of general interest to our membership.

AMONG THE INDIANS

The report for April shows that the year of the Superintendents, Clark and Elma T. Brown, closed with all the stations doing good work. Despite bad weather and some sickness the various stations report the usual amount of activity. The Indians are now doing good work on their farms, although farm work has been delayed somewhat because of the backward spring. The Indian children at Shawnee raised $17.10 toward the painting of the chapel. $7.35, as an offering from the North Denver Friends church for the mission at Shawnee, was reported.

The Church of today should beware of depending on other things than Christ. She has frequently sought to improve upon his methods and add to his message. And she has failed just in proportion to the extent of her deviation from him.—Christian Observer.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON.

June 18.

Subject—The Philippian Jailer.
Lesson—Acts 16:16-40.

Golden Text—Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house. Acts 16:31.

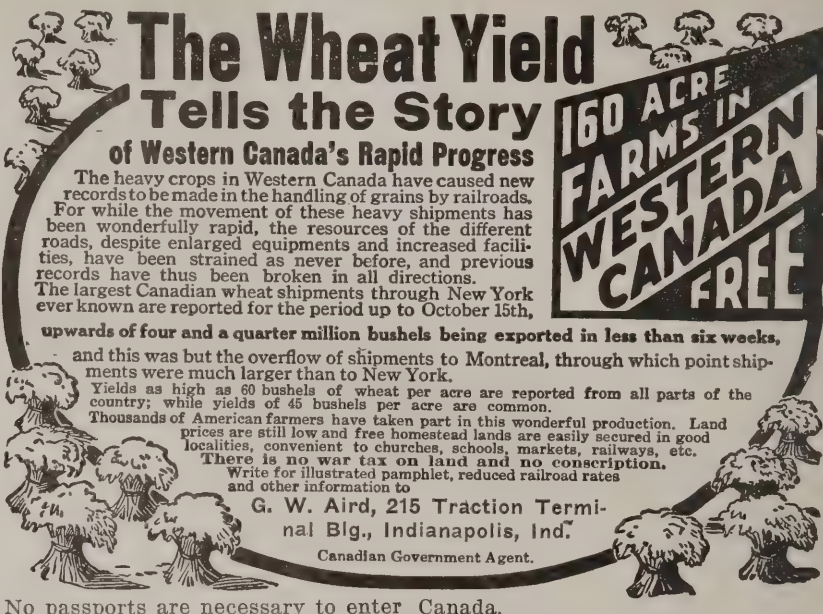

Life saving does not always win the hero's medal. Paul had saved the poor unfortunate girl from her life of enslaved commercialism and received a beating and a jail sentence for his reward. Quite a modern situation, indeed. Rescue wives and children from the drunkard's home by closing the saloons and a great hue and cry goes up for personal liberty, and the rescuer is rewarded in some up-to-date method of boycott—if his house or place of business is not dynamited.

But there is another side of the picture, a more glorious one, one before which people love to stand in later years and receive inspiration. Such stories of faithfulness encourage modern effort. Paul had a reward of far greater worth than any of his enemies knew. The "well done," spoken by God and conscience, made such persecutions seem like "light afflictions." So happy was he and his companion in the night that they sang hymns amid their prayers to the astonishment of their fellow prisoners. If Christians were to sing their way through more of their troubles, there would be more Christians to sing.

The earthquake with its consequences gave Paul another chance to help the unfortunate. The jailer must keep his prisoners or risk his own life for failing in his duty, so under the circumstances he was about to end his career rather than face the accusation of being false to his trust. Paul not only saved him from this rash deed, but as a sequel to the incident, won him to Christ. If the question, "what must I do to be saved," followed as quickly after Paul's calming assurance as the text would indicate, the jailer must have known something of the reputation of his prisoners. He probably had heard them preaching and was already favorably impressed. No doubt, too, he had heard the singing, and was further prepared for the sudden inquiry. Or what is more probable, the question came after some discussion of the event and Paul's Christian relation to it. At any rate the man was ready to follow the advice of the Apostle and become a Christian.

"Thou and thy house." We need not raise a controversial point here. But the phrase is significant. Too often only a part of the family is saved. We need to aspire for group salvation. Our efforts are too individual. Bunyan's Christian is represented as leaving his family and seeking his own individual soul safety. This assurance, "thou and thy house," ought to bring before us a loftier ideal than that of "Pilgrim's Progress."

What a happy termination of this series of events. Note the account, imagine the scene as they eat together in the private quarters of the

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions. The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are common in the West, while yields of 45 bushels per acre are reported from all parts of the country. Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc. There is no war tax on land and no conscription. jailer. The tasks of the faithful may seem unreasonably severe sometimes but in the end the rewards bring happiness and peace even though one's back is bruised and bleeding.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Topic—"The Usefulness of Good Cheer." John 16:24-33.

Since our Lord Jesus has overcome the world, why should we not "be of good cheer?" The world has enough of sorrow without your share. We cannot appreciate others' ills, then why discuss our own? Have you not seen the reflection of your smile in the faces of those you meet, especially children? The brightest day can be spoiled by our giving way to melancholy. The man who can sing at his work, is superior to those who work in a sullen attitude. We know the story of Pippa's song, "God's in His Heaven, All's Well With the World," and how it cheered the hearts of those who heard and set them singing, and others caught the sunshine of the song, and passed it on to others still.

"The inner side of every cloud is bright and shining,
I therefore turn my clouds about,
And always wear them inside out,
To show the lining."

One who is faithfully laboring for the cause of Christ has the satisfaction of knowing that there are those who are willing to sympathize in his every sorrow and every success; for he holds in confidence the good will of his brethren.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Plainfield, Indiana.
May 21, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

In my early childhood I went to this great brick Quarterly Meeting house at White Lick in the month of May. This Meeting was a great feast to Friends. It was the biggest thing in our lives. Because of the long distance people drove the opening hour was 11 o'clock. Such an array of sweet-faced, plain-bonneted women, Nobody sees men attend church today with the quiet dignity displayed by those earnest farmers. Some of them, whom I knew well, walked seven or eight miles beside a horse which carried the wife, a baby in her lap and a little tot riding behind her. As I first knew the gathering, most people came in the family carriage. We had to stir so early, eat breakfast and start that the mothers provided something for us to eat just before we got to meeting or to be eaten during the long business service.

Oh! those slices of bread and butter and sugar! The latter was a scarce article sixty years ago. And those finely phrased minutes, they were stately in expression and sometimes quite long, but at last the meeting was over and the big yard was literally full of young people. I remember wondering if there would be such fine gatherings when I was grown.

There came from those gatherings the men and women who have carried the life blood of Quakerism to the middle west and the Pacific slope. I am glad I had the privilege of seeing those days of deep-seated conviction and devotion to public worship and Godly living, when we had time to sit down for family worship with the children all at home—no phone calls to answer or so many divergent interests. Benjamin Vestal was a fine product of those days. And how we miss him.

May this tribute (enclosed) to him have a place in The American Friend? Excuse this long letter. My mind was so full of the pictures on memory's walls after I had written the tribute that I had to tell somebody, and who deserves attention more than the editor of a good paper like The American Friend.

Very truly,
NAOMI P. SHAW.

Every one has no doubt heard the expression, "Strike while the iron is hot;" but did you ever think what a good thing it is to make the iron hot by striking? Nine times out of ten a man who creates his own occasion, instead of waiting for things to turn up, makes a success.

BENJAMIN VESTAL.

In April, 82 years ago, a baby boy was welcomed into the home of Eli and Jemima Vestal. The home was on a farm, near Mooresville, Indiana. The Friends' meeting house at old White Lick was the central point for gatherings of Friends.

It was the Mecca of the young people, who at Quarterly Meeting time came in companies from adjoining Friends' communities as far as Westfield. They came on horseback and in many happy homes in after years were retold pleasing reminiscences. Here love and romance had good Quaker subjects.

Gallant young men and splendid young women there formed life time friendships. The spirit of loyalty to the church, begun in Benjamin Vestal's boyhood in his father's home, continued all his life. All who were associated with him loved that home and the father and mother, because to the end of his helpful life he so frequently mentioned those influences.

All the positions of trust in the church were one by one entrusted to him. No worthy cause in the community or effort of the church passed without a contribution from his purse. Earlier in life he was a most loyal teacher in the Bible School. Until death he was a regular attender of both midweek and Sabbath services. His words of praise and testimony and prayer were full of love and power.

He was kind, and interested in everybody. It was remarked by those who attended his funeral that such general grief had never been witnessed. Young and old alike had lost a friend. But the triumph of grace through our Lord Jesus Christ is his. His passing is a promotion. He is just beyond the setting of the sun, awaiting the coming home of those he loved.

His wife, Anna Vestal, who had been his loving companion for sixty years is still with us. The funeral services, conducted by Lewis E. Stout at Plainfield, Indiana, Friends church, were followed by interment at Maple Hill cemetery.

DIED.

Borden—Hannah C. Borden, daughter of the late Peleg G. and Mary W. Collins, and wife of Alfred H. Borden of Portsmouth, R. I., was born in South Kingston, R. I., July 1, 1852, and died June 17, 1915. Prior to her illness her life was a busy one, crowded full with loving service for her Master and those about her. She was Secretary of the Portsmouth W. C. T. U. for sixteen years, clerk of her Monthly Meeting for twelve years, an elder in meeting for eleven years and superintendent of the Sabbath School for nine years. Throughout a long illness she displayed a beautiful Christian character. She is survived by the husband, one son, two brothers and three sisters.

Carruth—Martha J. Carruth was born at Hyde Park, Ireland, February 17, 1837, and died at Milton, New York, March 13, 1916. She was an elder in Marlborough Monthly Meeting, but having been an invalid for many years was unable to take active part in the work of the church although still maintaining a great interest in all its activities.

Cook—John R. Cook, son of Robert and Dianah (Cox) Cook, was born in Hendricks county, Indiana, June 20, 1843, and died in Stevens county, Kansas, March 16, 1916. At the age of fourteen he went to Dallas county, Iowa, where in 1864 he married Louisa Barnett. In 1890 he moved to Hamilton county, Kansas, and later to this place. During this period, however, he spent some time in mission work among the Indians in Oklahoma. His life was an example of cheerfulness with an abounding faith in God. He was a loved minister of the gospel in the Friends church and died in the triumphs of living faith. He leaves the widow, six children together with grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by F. Olen Hunt of Fowler, Kansas, and Martha Carr of East Fowler.

Dixon—Enoch Dixon, son of Riley and Anna Jane Dixon, died at the home of his daughter in Carmel, Indiana, April 24, 1916, aged 70 years, 6 months and 13 days. He was a birthright Friend, was converted in his youth and lived a consistent and earnest Christian life. He was active in the work of the church up to the time affliction overtook him. He married Martha E. Carey in 1867. He is survived by one daughter, three sons, four brothers and four sisters. Interment in Carmel Cemetery.

Farr—Gilbert Lathey Farr was born at Hallowell, Maine, February 20, 1843, and died at Oskaloosa, Iowa, March 18, 1916. He was converted when a young man and was recorded a minister by Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting in 1883 and entered upon his public work at New Sharon. In 1891 he went to the Island of Jamaica as a missionary from Iowa Yearly Meeting, where he labored faithfully in gospel service for twelve years. Death came by neuritis following paralysis. His wife, six sons and one daughter survive him.

Gibson—Isaac T. Gibson, son of Montellian and Sarah Embre Gibson, died September 20, 1915, aged 86 years. He was an earnest, active Christian, ever ready to help sinners to find the Savior. He did much in the cause of temperance and was a candidate for Governor of Iowa on the Prohibition ticket at one time. He did considerable work among the Indians at one time. A good man has fallen, one who tried to make the world better.

Scott—Mary P. L. Scott, daughter of John and Camma Lindley, was born in Chatham County, N. C., January 6, 1847, and died at her home in Greentown, Indiana, August 28, 1915. She married Gideon B. Scott in 1876. She accepted Christ as her Savior while quite young and has lived a consistent Christian life. She was a devoted member of New Sharon Monthly Meeting, Howard County, Indiana.

Parker—Susan Reynolds Parker, wife of Joseph Parker, died at her home in Bloomington, Indiana, after several months of failing health, May 18, 1916, aged 78 years. She was a birthright Friend, a loyal supporter of her own denomination and was always much interested in everything pertaining to church activities. Her husband and one son survive her.

Van Winkle—Irene Van Winkle, youngest daughter of Reuben and Luella Van Winkle of Tecumseh, Michigan, set her clothing on fire with matches on the forenoon of May 22 and was so badly burned that she died at four o'clock in the afternoon. She was three years of age and was accustomed to regular attendance at church and Sunday School, together with her parents, her brother and two sisters. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, H. Lawrence Linton.

Wilson—Nathan W. Wilson, son of Samuel and Ruth Thornburg Wilson, was born in Hamilton county, Indiana, July 12, 1835, and died at his home near Marcus, Iowa, April 17, 1916. He, together with his wife, was early identified with the Friends Church, their membership being with the local church at Marshalltown, Iowa, at the time of his death. Some time before his death he gave testimony to his abiding trust in his heavenly Father. He leaves the widow, three sons, six daughters, 28 grandchildren and ten great grandchildren.

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

A Prayer

Let me be a little kinder,
Let me be a little blinder
To the faults of those about me,
Let me praise a little more;
Let me be when I am weary
Just a little bit more cheery—
Let me serve a little better
Those that I am striving for.

Let me be a little braver
When temptation bids me waver.
Let me strive a little harder
To be all that I should be;
Let me be a little meeker
With the brother who is weaker.
Let me think more of my neighbor
And a little less of me.

Let me be a little sweeter—
Make my life a bit completer,
By doing what I should do,
Every minute of the day.
Let me toil without complaining,
Not a humble task disdaining;
Let me face the summons calmly
When death beckons me away.

She's standing at the parting of the ways,
To right, to left, she turns her searching gaze;
She's standing, in her strong and clean-souled youth,
Silently waiting for the dawning truth.

For she must choose the armor of her might,
And she must choose the Captain of her fight,
And she must follow, on her chosen path,
The God of love—or the wild god of wrath.

And one would gird her with a flaming sword,
And One with His unconquerable Word.

My country, oh, my country, arm thy youth
With honor and invulnerable truth;
Yea, follow to a great and lofty goal
The God of Love—the Captain of thy soul!
—Esther Morton Smith.

For Young Friends—And Others

We trust that Young Friends generally and pastors as well, have read carefully the articles in the last two issues of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, suggesting that young Friends and others make a canvass of the various Friends' neighborhoods for new subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND at the rate of fifty cents for six months.

Young Friends generally have been pledging themselves to secure a certain number of subscriptions for our church paper. This affords a most excellent opportunity, and if young Friends do not take advantage of it, it will serve in large part to cast discredit upon the program to which they are pledged. We say this is no offensive sense, but in order to emphasize the importance of this opportunity with which young Friends are now confronted.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND will continue to be of increasing importance to the whole church, but the paper cannot fulfill its highest mission unless we can have a larger list of readers. We ought to have not fewer than a thousand new subscribers under this offer, between now and the first of July, and we have the utmost faith to believe that these can be actually secured if only our young Friends and others will go after them. The paper belongs to the Five Years Meeting and this service will be for the church and the upbuilding of the Master's kingdom.

How You Can Help The American Friend

These are a few suggestions, one or more of which ought to appeal mightily to a number of our subscribers.

1. Help the management by soliciting an advertisement or two from some reputable firm of your acquaintance. For instance, if you or your friend are going to purchase an automobile within the near future, arrange with the firm that a substantial amount of the purchase price shall be taken out in advertising, to be paid over to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for advertising space at the ordinary rates, which can be secured by addressing the manager at Richmond, Indiana. The same suggestion will apply to any other purchase where the investment amounts to something substantial.

2. Make note of the special offer of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to new subscribers for the next six months for fifty cents (announcements in another column) and endeavor to get a few new subscriptions under this offer. If you do not have time to see individuals personally, why not send in a check for two or three dollars with the names and addresses of persons to receive the paper for the six months indicated? This offer is for new subscriptions only.

3. Say a good word for the paper both publicly and privately as occasion requires and try to impress non-subscribers with the fact that they are losing much by not reading the paper weekly.

4. Send in brief news items of important events occurring in your meeting (unless your meeting is being frequently reported already) what has proved to be a great blessing to you locally will be an inspiration to others if they can only know about it.

A Greater Quakerism

II

A greater Quakerism is not a possibility without the consciousness of an impelling mission, or a consuming passion to realize the fullness of consummation in the accomplishment of that mission. It is equally certain that a greater Quakerism will not become a reality without the harmony of team work on the part of ministers, elders and members, without the development of a denominational spirit that will set the whole body to work at our common tasks, without the corporate sense of a purpose to reach out for larger things.

At the very outset we need to eliminate the selfish element in any propaganda for a larger life and service that may claim our attention. It should be taken for granted that no one desires to see Quakerism filling a larger place in the world for its own sake. These are not the days to talk about sectarian bigness. When individuals are being educated, when high ideals are set before them, when they are besought to attain to the best in character and in service, it is not for the laudation of personality for its own sake, but for the sake of the larger potentiality of service which personality can render to the world by reason of this culture and training. There is no more need of relegating denominationalism to the background of Christian activity than there is of condemning individualism in its relationship to personal service for the betterment of the social order. The break up of religious bodies is not so much in evidence yet as to warrant the conclusion that Christian growth in any large sense can be considered separate and apart from denominational activity.

In pleading for a greater Quakerism we have regard only for the great field of Christian service to which the whole church has been irrevocably committed by the positive commands of our Lord. If Quakerism has no part to play in the building of the world's civilization, if it has no assignment in the great task of establishing the kingdom of God on earth, if its only claim to existence is to uphold its ancient ecclesiastical landmarks and to minister to the spiritual tastes of those who have been trained in a particular school of faith and doctrine, then it is time, if not to yield to others entirely, at least to abandon our pretensions to general Christian work and resolve ourselves wholly into a brotherhood of religious aristocracy. If, on the other hand, Quakerism can have a vital message that is adequate in any comprehensive and practical sense to meet the cry of needy humanity, if in association with others, it can contribute something of real value to the whole plan of Christian workmanship, there is an obligation that is imperative that Quakerism not only strive to attain to the best, but that through consecration and prayer it shall plan for an enlargement of its borders, the broadening of its program and the strengthening of its working organism.

Probably Friends have much to learn in the way of more efficient organism and in the adjustment of their departmental service. We have added to our machinery without much reference to its adaptability to that which we already had. The accumulation of Committees and Boards has added to our administrative expenses in certain directions, with the result sometimes that the products have been distressingly meager.

There is, however, a power in Quakerism at its best that is quite beyond the scope of its mechanical operations. Quakerism has lost much through its methods, and it is probably true, as has been expressed by others, that if Quakerism had preserved intact the virility of its spiritual message and had adapted itself to the changing conditions which had to be met, there would have been no call for Methodism in the days of the Wesleys. But the soul of Quakerism is not in its methods. Friends are known historically by that conception of spiritual realism for which they have stood and of which they have been famed as apostles.

It is not that Friends are better than others, but in the early days at least they were freer to proclaim living, vital truth which had come to them as a fresh revelation from God. In that day they would have been hypocrites, had they failed to practice the things which they professed. Is it our weakness today that as a body we have failed in large measure to practice the things which gave Quakerism its characteristic stamp, and so failing, we have not dared to preach the fullness of the message of Christ with convincing power?

What are the things about which Friends are thinking and talking these days? While giving full credit of sincerity to all, have most of us not been over zealous in emphasizing our differences rather than in finding the bonds of fellowship that would establish our workmanship for the cause of Zion? It must be said in truth that the Society of Friends has not escaped its measure of that disquieting element known as church politics. But the Holy Spirit cannot operate where individualism is ambitious for preferment or is over anxious for the success of its program. Friends need again a baptism of that friendly spirit that gave them their name in the beginning, as an example in Christian procedure that appeals for faithful discipleship in others.

What greater need is there in the world today than that there shall be a body of believers who dare to practice literally the teaching of Jesus as the only practical program for daily life? In this field Quakerism must excel if it excel anywhere. It is folly to preach idealism if it be not incarnated in visible, satisfactory form in the lives of men and women whom we daily meet and who are subjected to like temptations with ourselves. Fundamentally, it is not so much what we do as what we are that will determine the greatness of our mission in the world today, but it is a principle of life that what we are determines in large degree that which we do. A greater Quakerism must be sound at the heart, must exemplify its ideals, and must not be afraid to conform its methods of operation to the needs of this day and generation.

The Yearly Meeting of Other Days

By DAVID BUFFUM

As the time approaches for New England Yearly Meeting, I find my memory running back to the old-time Yearly Meeting that I knew in my boyhood—the time when Yearly Meeting was always held at Newport and began on the first First Day after the second Sixth Day in the Sixth Month.”

This old-time Yearly Meeting was the time of the whole year to which all looked forward and was the center around which the social life of every Quaker family revolved. When new broadcloth suits, new silk gowns, new harness or new carriages were purchased it was always just before Yearly Meeting. Such things might be needed at other times; but the real crying need, the need that could brook no denial, was always just before Yearly Meeting.

And then the dinners! For it was the custom then for all resident Friends to take home every day a lot of the Friends from a distance to dinner. These dinners were no stinted or make-believe affairs and I am certain that those who recall them can testify that they have never eaten better. Every day, while meeting lasted, the long table in our dining room was filled and frequently a second table for the younger Friends for whom there was not room at the first. We youngsters rather preferred this second table, for you may be sure the supply of good things still held out and we felt less constraint than at the first.

In still older days, long before my recollection, and when there was no railroad to Newport, nearly all the Friends came to Yearly Meeting in their own carriages. The Meeting then owned a considerable tract of land, part of which was mowed and the hay used to feed the horses of those who cared to keep them in the shed. Few, however, cared to do this. The rest of the land was used for pasture, and into it the majority of the horses were turned for the week. As these horses were all strangers to each other, a tremendous kicking and squealing ensued, which continued, in gradually lessening degree, through the week. In my boyhood a large part of this land had been sold, but several acres had been retained for pasture and in it some twenty or thirty horses, the driving stock of Friends who still preferred to come by carriage ran during the week. So we still had the equine music of earlier days, which was borne to our ears through the open windows, and a long business session would hardly have seemed complete without it. It is always associated in my mind with recollections of Yearly Meeting.

We had our distinguished Friends, whose names are still often recalled and some few of whom are still living. There were the Hoags, a family of preachers and, if my memory serves me rightly, Lindley Hoag sat at the head of the meeting—though of this I am not quite sure. Then there were Eli and Sibyl Jones, whose stories of Palestine and the Far East interested even the restless boys and girls; and among visiting Friends, the Douglasses, John Henry and Robert, Elizabeth Comstock, Caroline Talbot and others equally well known. I should not fail to mention also my grandfather, David Buffum, who, though not a minister, was always a prominent figure in the meeting.

Most of these Friends wore either a Quaker or semi-Quaker costume. Some, of course, wore it as a “testimony,” but I believe that most of those who wore it did so chiefly because they preferred it and not from a sense of duty. I cannot remember ever hearing my grandfather say anything about it one way or the other, though he always wore it.

Of course, our most distinguished member was the poet Whittier, though he took little part in the meetings and, in deed, did not attend them very closely. He preferred drives in the country or walks on the cliffs or along the beach. One of my aunts,

Ann B. Earle, once asked him why he did not attend meeting more. He replied that the long sessions wearied him; and he added, "Friends have a capacity for sitting that any hen might envy." I had sat with my father through some of the interminable sessions (we boys were not required to attend them all) and I remember that my opinion of the Quaker poet at once went up several degrees when I heard of his expressing such sound sentiments.

I afterwards saw Whittier occasionally at the Friends School in Providence, which, during my stay there, he sometimes visited, though not very often. I have always heard him referred to as a very genial and sociable man and I have not the slightest doubt that he was so when among his chosen friends or those whom he met under the right circumstances. But from what little I saw of him he certainly seemed a rather reserved man, who did not invite much familiarity, though always a polished and courteous gentleman. But this reserve was not the cultivated aloofness that has so often marred men who have won a high place, but the nature of the man—like that of Cowper who, though the gentlest and most kindly of souls, wrote:

"The friend who hails you Tom or Jack,
And proves by thumping on your back
His sense of your great merit;
Is such a friend that you must need
Be very much his friend indeed
To pardon or to bear it."

I do not think that Whittier was often subjected to this experience, but I am sorry to say that I have seen men and women—members of our Society, too, force their society upon him and fawn upon him and flatter him in a way that was neither self-respecting nor in good taste.

Of course, the men and women met in separate session and when a measure was passed by the men's meeting it was sent by messenger to the women's meeting for its concurrence. Women Friends, then as now, were supposed to have an equal voice with the men; but if there was ever an occasion in which they did not concur, I have never heard of it.

A conspicuous feature of the meeting of those days was the reading of the Queries. These, with their answers, were always read in monthly, quarterly and yearly meetings. The answers were exceedingly similar in both substance and phraseology—so much so, indeed, that one could give the answer to any given query from any meeting without any knowledge whatever of that meeting's condition and take very little chance of having it wrong. Take, for instance, the query which dealt with the attendance at meeting and the conduct of Friends therein. The answer, almost invariably, was exactly as follows: "All our meetings for worship and discipline have been regularly held and at the hour appointed. Those in the middle of the week and on the afternoon of First Day much neglected by some. A few instances of sleeping noticed." Any deviation from this answer, in this exact form, would have caused great surprise; and yet it, as well as all of the others, was always listened to attentively—we boys sometimes speculating on how nice it would be and what would happen if we might have a report of conduct a little less exemplary, or at least a little more out of the ordinary. But such enlivenment never came.

Neither the queries nor their answers are now read in our meetings—though I am by no means sure that the former might not still be with profit. But the answers, with their eternal sameness, were well discontinued.

I have referred briefly to the Quaker costume—and perhaps brief mention is enough. But this dress has gone so thoroughly out of use—not one wearer of it left in all New England Yearly Meeting as far as I know—that a few words may be of interest to younger readers.

Time was when consistent Friends wore complete suits of drab broadcloth, the coat of the "shad-belly" pattern. In my boyhood old Joseph Tillinghast was the only one who still clung to the drab. Of the others, many had abandoned the plain coat altogether, while those who wore it had changed to black, brown, or even blue shad-bellies. If well-fitting, no handsomer coat was ever made. The hat—and here we come to the acme of Quaker elegance—was of pure beaver, beautifully brushed, and buff in color, not black, like the modern silk horror that sometimes masquerades under the name of "beaver." This silk hat was first made as a substitute for the beaver when beaver fur had become too scarce and costly for ordinary use. I remember hearing my grandfather denounce it as a "vile imitation" and for that reason not to be worn, at least by him. Many of the older Friends apparently held the same view and beaver after beaver adorned the heads of those who sat on the rising seats. Meanwhile, beaver fur continued to rise in price till, at the last of their being worn, beaver hats cost from twenty to twenty-five dollars.

The older women Friends wore the regulation Quaker bonnet and these, too, though simple, were rather costly. Women who did not care to be so plain but still wanted to show a strong leading to Quaker simplicity, wore an affair called a "drawn" bonnet. I am unable to describe this garment in intelligible terms, but many of my readers will doubtless recall it. Thus a woman's exact degree of Quakerliness could be at once determined by the fact that she wore a Quaker, a "drawn" or a "world's" bonnet; and in this her costume beat that of the men by several points.

But if, as I have said, the shad-belly coat was, if well-fitting, the handsomest coat ever made, what shall we say of those that did not fit—for these we also saw. Any ill-fitting coat is uncomely, but the shad-belly had possibilities in this line unequalled by any other. In fact, it was, with its graceful lines and curvers, a work of sartorial art and not to be entrusted to any ordinary tailor. To bring it forth in its true splendor required a true artist, a poet of cloth, as it were, inspired with an Idea (spell it with a capital I, please.)

With the passing of a by-gone age all these things have passed away. It was inevitable that Friends should change, inevitable that they should abandon a distinctive costume, inevitable that they should affiliate more and more with what our ancestors called "the world's people." And if I have written in lighter vein of Friends as I knew them in my boyhood, let me add just a few words that I would not wish to be taken lightly. Wherein our departures from the old order concern only unessential things we have suffered no loss—for these things, after all, were but the fashions of our ancestors, and "the fashion of this world passeth away." But abstract truth, unlike fashion, cannot change. And the great truths which lay back of the Quakerism of our ancestors—the truths which moved them to the rigid denial of all priestly power and the testimony to an absolutely free and untrammelled gospel ministry; to the advocacy of simplicity and "true moderation in all things," and the insistence upon clean and honorable living as the visible fruit of their faith; these are our heritage, to be still observed without change—for no new fashion can take their place.

Guilford College

PRESIDENT THOMAS NEWLIN

(From The Westonian, February, 1916)

To give the history of Guilford College would be to recount the history of Quakerism in North Carolina. George Fox, although not well educated in the schools, yet was a great advocate of education. As early as 1737, London Yearly Meeting became concerned in regard to the education of its children, and recorded a minute advising its members to provide school-masters who were faithful Friends. George Fox came into North Carolina in the autumn of 1671, crossing the Dismal Swamp with great difficulty; but he was received with great kindness, and it is reasonable to believe that he set up some meetings, though North Carolina Yearly Meeting dates from the year 1698. Friends made their way westward rather slowly, and not until 1830, one hundred and thirty-two years after the founding of the Yearly Meeting, were the meetings directed to report on the condition of the schools attended by the children of Friends, the number of children of school age and the number not attending any school. These reports revealed, the next year, that there was not a single school of Friends, and very few members were teaching. At the yearly meeting in 1831, a committee was appointed to prepare an address to the subordinate meetings on the subject of education. This report speaks of the "Christian and literary education of our children in a manner consistent with the simplicity of our profession." At this time a subscription was started to raise a fund to found a boarding school. The sum of $370.55 was subscribed and the subject was left to a large committee to formulate plans, to purchase land and put the school in operation. The next year the plan was produced, about $1,200.00 subscribed and the subject left in the care of the committee for another year. The next year (1833) the school was located by purchasing a tract of land, and the next year seventy acres adjoining this were given to the school by one of the trustees, Elihu Coffin. It is somewhat remarkable that in the first charter there was no mention made of the Society of Friends or Quakers, but the institution was incorporated by the legislature as New Garden Boarding School. The anti-slavery attitude of the Friends was well known and it was feared that any mention of Quaker would defeat the charter.

Funds, mostly small in amount, were collected from various sources. At that time and since, English Friends have been liberal contributors. In these ways the sum of $5,000 was collected. The original building was finally completed and on the first day of Eighth Month, 1837, the school was opened with 50 students, 25 boys and 25 girls. From the first day New Garden Boarding School, and likewise Guilford College, has been thoroughly co-educational, perhaps more truly so than any other school south of Mason and Dixon's Line.

The story of the financial struggles of New Garden Boarding School is too long to relate. In 1860 deputations from Baltimore, Philadelphia and Indiana Yearly Meetings came to advise with the trustees, and their united opinion was that the trustees of the school should as soon as possible dispose of the property and close the school, of which the Yearly Meeting approved.

Instead of doing this the trustees assumed the responsibility of the $26,000 debt, engaging a superintendent to take charge under agreement not to increase the debt. This agreement lasted for five years, and in this way New Garden School never missed a day through the war, which cannot be said of any other school of like grade in the South. The privations and sacrifices of those years may never be fully told. Such great care was used that at the end of these years the superintendent was able to report that all the debts against the school prior to 1864 had been paid. In much the same way the school went on until, in 1881, the Baltimore Association came to the rescue under the able and revered leadership of such men as Francis T. King and Dr. James Carey Thomas.

In these early days the discipline was very strict. The teachers were expected to look after every detail of student life day and night. The dress was to be of a prescribed pattern and the plain language spoken. The boys and girls were carefully kept apart, both in classes and at meal time. No whiskers could be worn nor the hair roached (curled over the forehead or made to stand upright). Cousins could have a brief conversation once in a week. The hours were exactly fixed for retiring and rising. In the summer time there were lessons before breakfast and in the winter after supper. At first only members of the Society of Friends were admitted.

Later, others on certain conditions of conforming to the customs of dress and language were admitted. Some of the early teachers in one day would give lessons in three or four classes in Mathematics, two or three in English, two or three in Science, Logic, Latin, Greek and Scripture.

A new era was dawning for the school. From the start thoroughness was the aim. The courses had been increasing in number and quality, so that the school had to be merged into a college in 1888, after having been conducted as a Boarding School for more than a half century. At first the equipment in the material sense was meager for a college, but it has always been recognized that teachers are the life and vitality of a school. Guilford College was the name of the chartered institution. Guilford College has always had some great teachers—men and women who were giving their lives and their substance for the good of the young men and young women.

Lewis Lyndon Hobbs, who had been educated at the school and later graduated at Haverford College, was chosen as the first president, which position he held until the present year (1915), retiring at his own request. For twelve years before the opening of the college, in 1888, he had been connected with the school, making an unbroken record of thirty-nine years. He is still active and vigorous and connected with the college as President Emeritus. To him more than to any other one man does Guilford College owe its high and pure standards. He, with many others, has labored hard and unceasingly to bring together better equipment, to beautify the campus and make Guilford a safe and beautiful place—a place where sound learning, pure morals and true religion were united, where strong characters could be cultivated.

In spite of the poverty of the early days of the school Guilford College now has ten principal buildings on the campus, besides the heating and electric plant and many smaller buildings. These buildings are conveniently located on a campus than which there are few more beautiful in the whole country. The grand old native oaks and black gum trees and tulip trees, to which have been added maple and other varieties of deciduous trees, never failed to elicit the admiration of the resident and the wonder of the visitor.

Guilford College is justly proud of its record. A long line of worthy men and women point with loving recognition to the worth of the service the college performed for them. The men and women who are advancing the cause of North Carolina Yearly Meeting have nearly all gotten their inspiration from New Garden School and Guilford College. Guilford College has been not only an institution, but also an influence, and that influence has been for sound learning and positive, constructive Christian character.

good Library building well supplied with general books and reference books and facilities for research. Our requirements for admission to the freshman class are the same as for admission to the University of North Carolina and all other high-grade colleges in the South. The work is carried on under fifteen different departments, at the head of each is a trained teacher in charge. In the selection of his work the student has a large range of choice in the various departments. We wish to limit this only so as to secure for each student a breadth of view and concentration along some chosen line of work that will develop mental power, skill, and a fund of actual knowledge in his particular field. Certain courses, because of their mental training and universal value to all, are required of all applicants for a degree.

Guilford College gives two degrees for the fulfillment of the requirements, Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science. The attempt is made to make these two degrees equivalent. Both Haverford College and Bryn Mawr College offer scholarships to the best prepared graduates of Guilford College. The record of the Christian work done by the students and graduates of New Garden School and Guilford College is an honor to the college and the church. The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have for many years been strong factors in the lives of the students. Christian culture has always been foremost in the thought of the managers. The future of Guilford College is bright, for we have the plant, the young people and the spirit of comity in the South that aid in building up a strong institution of learning where the moral and religious lives of the students are guarded.

There is great need of larger endowment and better equipment, especially for dormitory rooms for boys, and for a dining room and kitchen, with rooms for the matron, as a help to her in work in the boys' club. This work is now carried on where more than forty boys take their meals, in a small wooden building of inferior grade. These boys need better accommodations.

Because so many of our patrons do not have good public schools within their reach, we have to maintain two years of sub-freshman work, but as the high schools are rapidly improving in our territory this preparatory work can be omitted at some future date.

Sudden Prayer

I have a thousand times tested the efficiency of sudden prayer in moments of difficulty, when confronted with a little temptation, when overwhelmed with irritation, before an anxious interview, before writing a difficult passage. How often has the temptation floated away, the irritation mastered itself, the right word been said, the right sentence written! To do all we are capable of, and then to commit the matter to the hand of the Father, that is the best that we can do.—Arthur C. Benson.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY

The Gospel Ministry In The Five Years Meeting

III. Educational Qualifications

A true minister of the Gospel is all that every true Christian must be, plus the special gifts and obligations of his holy calling in the ministry. Whatever contributes to his strength as an individual contributes to his efficiency in the ministry. If, as George Fox maintained in his establishment of schools among the early Friends, instruction in everything civil and useful in creation is profitable in preparation for general life work, then education in history, literature and science as taught in Christian colleges must be regarded as an important part of the "general qualifications" for the Gospel ministry prescribed by the Uniform Discipline.

But here it must be reiterated that the college performs its highest function, not in conferring scholarship, but in developing the student, in organizing him for personal efficiency, in raising his God-given abilities to their highest power. In no instance is this more essentially true than in the case of a student who is under the Divine call and preparation for the ministry.

George Fox was right; not Oxford nor Cambridge nor any other institution of human learning can make a minister. Nevertheless, a good college training can render indispensable assistance in promoting the development of his spiritual gifts, which, according to the Richmond Declaration of Faith, it is the duty of the Church to do "by all means in its power." The college can instill into the student who is gifted for the ministry the habit of sustained, intelligent attention to the subject or task before him. It can beget in him that aptitude for all-round Christian service which comes from a disciplined and versatile mind. It can foster in him the ability for clear and accurate thinking so essential as a qualification for presenting spiritual truth to the understanding of men. It can drill him in the art of concise and forcible statement and thus enhance his power of convincing men and fitting spiritual truth to the needs of the human heart. It can train him in the right use of the imagination by which to so picture spiritual truth in concrete form as to cause it to arrest the attention and stamp itself upon the memory and heart of the hearer. The atmosphere of student life in a present-day Christian college can broaden his outlook, deepen his moral earnestness, expand his social calibre and give him a forceful personality. Among all the human agencies for the developing of these particular qualifications for the ministry, experience and training in a Christian college take first rank.

David's anointment for kingship was of God, but his skill of eye and hand in the use of the shepherd's sling which, under God, turned an alien army to flight, was a human acquirement. John Wesley's ministry was "in demonstration of the Spirit," but the logical force of his preaching, which was so large a factor in his success, he ascribed in his later years to his early training as a debater in Lincoln College. Paul was put into the ministry, not by reason of his having sat at the feet of Gamaliel, but because he had been counted faithful by Jesus Christ. But at the same time it is to be remembered that the greatest of the Apostles was a product, on the human side, of the best learning of his age.

Time was when not a few Friends distrusted college education for ministers on the alleged ground of its tendency to water down a Christian student's orthodoxy and reduce his spiritual voltage in religious service. But who have been the outstanding men in the history of modern evangelism? Martin Luther, the German Reformer, a university-bred man and professor of philosophy; Wyckliff, "the Morning Star of the English Reformation," Tyndale and Coverdale among its chief spirits; Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, the Oxford Martyrs—all of them university scholars; Barclay, Penn and others of the foremost colleagues of George Fox in the great Quaker awakening—men of university culture and training; the Wesleys and Whitefield, of the Methodist revival, all members of the "Holy Club" at Oxford; Edwards and Finney, the two greatest names on the roll of American evangelists, both of them distinguished college presidents. What did Dwight L. Moody think of the importance of advanced educational training for Christian workers? Northfield and Mount Hermon are the sufficient answer.

About two years ago a careful survey was made of the educational preparation of the pastors then serving in certain of the constituent Yearly Meetings of the Five Years Meeting. Its only purpose was to obtain such light as it might throw upon the estimate which Friends, as a denomination, place upon the education of the ministry and the extent to which it is made a matter of practical encouragement and assistance by the church.

The Yearly Meetings canvass included nearly one-half of the total membership of the Five Years Meeting. Their members were gathered into 341 local congregations. Of these congregations, nearly two-thirds were at that time served by pastors—190 pastors in all. Eighty-six per cent of the pastors kindly aided in the investigation by responding to requests for particulars concerning their educational preparation. Out of 165 pastors reporting, 58, or a little over one-third of the whole number in the Yearly Meetings under the survey, had attended college for longer or shorter periods—25 for (approximately) four years, four for three years, nineteen for two years and ten for one year. That is to say, thirty per cent of the pastors then laboring in the Yearly Meetings here referred to had received some measure of college training. Twelve per cent had attended Friends' academies or seminaries, of which there are sixteen in the Five Years Meeting, but had not gone on to college. Including those who had attended both academy or seminary and college, Friends secondary schools had had a share in the preparation of about twenty-five per cent of all the pastors of the Yearly Meetings in which the survey was made. At least forty per cent of the whole number of pastors serving at that time in the Yearly Meetings here referred to had enjoyed no school-educational advantages beyond the common school branches.

It is believed that the foregoing showing may be accepted as approximately representing the educational status of pastors throughout the Five Years Meeting at the present time.

General Secretary.

"As The Days Go By"

Quarterly Letter by Gurney Binford

One day, about a year and a half ago, as Mr. Suzaki was walking in the streets of Ishioka, a very nicely dressed country lady spoke most politely and thanked him for kindness in the train. He was much puzzled, but said nothing, for he evidently ought to have remembered something. So, after some days thinking it over, he remembered a time about a year and a half before, that, when coming home from Tokyo there were some nice ladies and children got into the same compartment of the train where he was. Soon after the train left the women were much troubled about some baggage which they had forgotten in the Tokyo station. What should they do about it? Mr. Suzaki could not help but hear their trouble, and begging their pardon, suggested a way of recovering the forgotten baggage. The plan worked, and it so happened that they, too, were going to Ishioka, and they got off together. He left them at the station to wait an hour till the next train would bring the lost articles. He did not hear their names, nor whether they lived in Ishioka or some other place, and so forgot the incident till called to his mind by the thanks, more than a year afterwards.

This little act of kindness on Suzaki's part, although forgotten by him, was bearing fruit that he knew not of. It was the night of the 26th of February, six miles from Ishioka in Kakioka, when he and I were entertained in the home of an old lady of eighty-five. Her daughter-in-law, about sixty, and a great daughter-in-law about thirty-five were the managers and servants in each other's way, to do the work of a very large house which had been a general merchandise store before the family retired with sufficient wealth to require the time of the head of the house to manage it. These were the women to whom Suzaki San had been kind three years ago, and this is the first time he had heard their names or knew where they lived.

They had opened their home for a public Christian Magic Lantern Meeting. We had intended to go back to Ishioka after the meeting, but on account of a snow storm which came up, they invited us to stay over night, and it was around the fire-box, after the three or four inquirers who had remained after the lantern meeting had gone, that the women again repeated their thanks to Suzaki for his kindness, and so he at last knew whom he had helped and regarded from his standpoint as so little that it was not worth remembering.

And for more than two years this same family have been giving to Mr. Suzaki free rent on the use of a room next to their home, where he and Kameyama San go twice a month to hold meetings. This is a town where we took Asa S. Wing for an evening meeting when he was in Japan. At that time there were three or four Christians there, but one of them became a "Socialist" and was arrested. The group was scattered, and Christianity was put in bad repute, and so the way was closed for work there for a few years. But Mr. Suzaki has kept his eye on conditions, and it may be that this one little act of kindness at a place far from Kakioka was the thing in God's providence as the days go by, to re-open the place for work.

The two older women are widows. The husband of the youngest is away from home most of the time and a younger brother was the only man of the family at home when we were there. A sister is married to the head man of the village, or mayor, and her oldest son is almost grown, and was there to help out. We had a nice meeting with these two young men, and in the morning, while the snow was going off, we got them interested in Bible study. The one of the house had visited a Bible class of mine in Tsuchijura about ten years ago, but did not at that time get interested.—From The Canadian Friend.

In Business for the Lord.

When a man had become a Christian and joined the church, a steward came to him and told him that the board of stewards had assessed him $12.50.

"For how long a time?" he asked.

"For the whole year."

"Why, I often spent more than that in a single night when I was serving the devil."

He talked the matter over with his wife. They began to read the Bible, their new guide, to try to learn how much they ought to pay. They marked all the passages bearing on the question.

"But this is what settled it," he said to his friend—"Malachi, third chapter, verses eight to ten. That is so plain there is no mistaking its meaning."

So they began paying a tenth of what they made. "During the first six months of last year," said the man to whom he had told his experience, "this man gave $328"—more than twenty-five times as much as the stewards asked for the whole twelve months.

The Lord's estimate of what the man ought to do to help him win the world was more than fifty times the estimate of the steward. God wanted him to have a man's share in the glorious work.—Presbyterian Banner.

WITH THE CHILDREN

The Frown's Companion

Said the Frown to the Smile, "Come walk with me today."
"Very well," said the Smile, "since you're going my way."

They journeyed on slowly for perhaps half a mile
And each person they met said, 'Good morning, dear Smile.'

Till at last cried the Frown, "Now, this never will do;
There's no greeting for me, though I'm bigger than you."

"That's true," was the answer; "but remember the while Even you, as companion, selected the Smile."—Selected.

The Whispering Footprints

"Eddy, oh, Eddy, where are you?"

"Here, mother," came a shrill little voice from the back yard.

"Come here, Eddy; I want you to do something for me."

Then the back door opened and Mrs. Taylor heard the soft thud of bare feet along the passage. But when Eddy entered the sitting-room and stood by his mother's sewing-table, she only said, "Why, Eddy, what's the matter?"

Now, there were no cuts or bumps or bruises about the little boy. Why should the mother think anything was the matter? Because his brown eyes, which generally looked right up at you, like two little birds flying out of a cage, now had an uneasy look; neither here nor there, but away.

"Nothing's the matter," said Eddy, looking out of the window; "what did you call me for, mother?"

She had wanted him to run down to the village postoffice to mail a letter, but the letter was forgotten now. Mother was silent for a few minutes; then, seeing something between her table and the door, she spoke.

"I am sorry my little boy has disobeyed me about going to the apple-bin without leave." Eddy gave a little start. "The reason God put me here as your mother, Eddy, is because he thinks I know better what you ought to do and ought not to do, than you do yourself."

Eddy did not answer. He was asking himself how mother knew everything a fellow did.

"I am especially sorry that you should disobey me by sneaking through the coal room window," said Mrs. Taylor. "I would much rather have you say, 'I won't mind you,' and go in before my eyes, than go in by telling a lie."

"Why, mother, I didn't say—" began Eddy, glad of a chance to defend himself.

"Do you think you only talk with your lips?" interrupted his mother. "What do you suppose has whispered to me that you have been in the apple-cellar, and that you went through the coal-room?"

"I can't imagine," said Eddy, honestly.

"Look behind you."

The little boy turned, and there, between him and the door, were five coal-dusty footprints on the white matting! Mother could not help smiling at the look of surprise and dismay on the little face, but it was a rather mournful smile.

"Do you think we can ever do wrong, Eddy, and not leave marks of it somewhere?" she asked. "And, oh, my little boy, the marks that sin leaves are on your heart, which ought to be clean and white for God's eyes, instead of being all tracked over by wrong-doing."

"Won't they come out?" asked Eddy. He meant the footprints on the matting, but his mother was thinking about those other marks when she said: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. You must ask him to forgive you, Eddy, and to take away your guilt, and make you hate sin, which leaves such ugly footprints on your life."

And then, for a punishment, and for a reminder, mother kept the footprints on the sitting-room floor that whole day, so that Eddy might see them and remember how every wrong deed left dark stains in his little heart.

Aunt Isabelle's Recipe

Oh, it's just pouring," said Edith dismally, "and I wanted to go over to Mary Vinton's house to play."

"And I can't go out, either, because I've such a cold, mamma said," groaned Jack.

There were frowns on both little faces as the children gazed out of the window at the splashing rain-drops.

"But why don't you make it a sunshine day?" asked Aunt Isabelle. "I have a recipe that I've seen tried many times, and I never knew it to fail."

"Oh, what is it? Please tell us," cried both children at once.

"The recipe is: One hundred pleasant smiles, one hundred laughs, and one hundred pleasant remarks to and about some one," replied auntie.

At first the children thought it would be night before all the three hundred could be found, but they started out bravely.

If Jack smiled so pleasantly that the cook smiled right back, that, of course, counted two smiles right away. And the success of the experiment generally made them both laugh, which added two more. How hard they worked to make everybody in the house laugh and smile!

"I've made twenty-five pleasant remarks; auntie kept count," said Jack.

"I've smiled so much I can hardly look sober," said Edith, with another laugh.

And do you know that by dinner-time they were having such a merry time that they thought the rainy day was brighter and jollier than any other kind. The whole house seemed full of sunshine.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HITT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

NEW BURLINGTON, OHIO.

A very interesting missionary conference was held at this place May 31. The morning session was addressed by Homer Biddlecum, of Xenia, and Henry Cox, missionary at Puerto Padre, Cuba. Wilmington Yearly Meeting is greatly interested in this station since it really set up the station, and one of its own members, Eva Terrell Woody, was there for some time. After a very substantial lunch, served by ladies of the local congregation, the program was continued. Maria Stout gave an address—"How to Interest Children and Young People in Missions." Laura Dunham, a member of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, read a well-prepared paper. A discussion of the day's program was taken up and was lively and spirited. Henry Cox conducted a questionnaire. Ellison Purdy encouraged the use of the every-member canvass method for money raising. Tithing was discussed by several speakers. These addresses and remarks were interspersed with good music. The attendance was large, more than two hundred being present at both sessions. Representatives were present from Lebanon, Waynesville, Harveysburg, Wilmington, Xenia, Spring Valley and Dayton, besides a good percent of the home meetings of New Burlington and Caesar's Creek.

There is a live W. F. M. S. auxiliary at this place, which forms a nucleus for much missionary activity.

BERNICE E. HAWKINS.

CHRISTIANS AT A HINDU BURIAL.

Two years ago, Mary White, working in Port Antonio, Jamaica, found a strong prejudice against Christianity. Her work is mainly among East Indians. Gradually these two years have witnessed a change in these people. As they become better acquainted with the workers and learn more about what the religion of Christ really means, their opposition is disappearing.

In one of the Indian homes, a young woman early this spring was taken sick. Shortly after the first of April, she passed away. In their grief, the family, which has not yet renounced the Hindu religion—the religion of more than two hundred million of their fellow-countrymen in India—called Miss White and asked her to help at the funeral service. The Hindu priests were there with their books and sacrificial vessels. Most of the funeral rites take place at the burning ground, for the Hindus, instead of burying, cremate the bodies of their dead. It was a very attentive and respectful company. Before the funeral procession left the house, Mary White read parts of the 14th chapter of St. John's Gospel and of the 1st chapter of the first Epistle of John. It was a very quiet, respectful and attentive company—relatives and friends of the young woman, Hindu priests and other East Indians—who listened to these words of comfort and hope in Christ in their own native tongue, the Hindu language.

A STUDY CLASS IN DES MOINES.

The Mission Study Class of the First Friends Church of Des Moines was organized by the chairman of the missionary committee of the Y. P. S. C. E. Notwithstanding, it was rather late in the season to take up a course of lessons in mission study, when the opportunity was given in a Christian Endeavor meeting a number expressed a desire for the work.

The book selected for study was "Rising Churches in Non-Christian Lands," by Arthur Judson Brown, and when the work was fully planned others came into membership who were not of the Christian Endeavor. The members were capable, enthusiastic and regular. The majority of them came quite a distance, but none were absent except when necessary. The class proved to be unusually interesting and the interest grew from week to week. It was felt eight lessons were insufficient for the eight chapters as the chapters were long and some reference work was done outside, so part of the chapters were divided, making eleven lessons.

The references to Korea had been of special interest all through the course and, as there was a desire to know more about it, one member gave a very interesting talk on the country, people and mission work done there. The meeting was helpful, and the general expression was a regret that the course was ended.

The class would heartily recommend "Rising Churches in Non-Christian Lands" to other study groups. The matter of the book is of such recent information and advanced thought as will certainly lead to a new era in missionary intelligence and work.

ROSALIA, THE SHUT-IN.

Just around the corner from the Mission Home at Gibara, Cuba, lived a fisherman with his family of eight children. At best a fisherman's life is hard, hard for himself and hard for his family. His income is meager and uncertain, this together with the irregular hours is not conducive to a well-ordered household. But if this condition is trying to those in health, how much more was it to the one member of this household who was a helpless paralytic, the grandmother, Rosalia.

When we first found Rosalia she occupied a room, six by eight feet, in a back shed of the house. The only outside opening was a foot square sawed out of the weather-boarding, and as it was on the side of the prevailing winds it was usually kept shut. The floor was mother earth, carpeted with such trash and refuse as during the passing days fell upon it. The only furniture in the room was a square-bottomed chair, covered with untanned goat skin. This was a general receptacle for medicine, food, candle, etc. The bed was a piece of canvas stretched between two scantling and held taut by the cross-legged support. The only bedding was a sheet made of calice. Upon this bed Rosalia sat during the day and lay during the night. Pitifully she tried to find comfort in the dreary, gloomy days by chewing tobacco, but the filthy spittle marks on bed, chair and wall added to the disgusting squalor of it all.

Into this place the missionaries went with comfort and cheer. Later they took with them the young people from the Christian Endeavor and the children from the Sunday School, who, with their exuberance of life and joy of song, brought gladness and courage to the lonely life. Flowers were sent, Bibles and papers found their way. Soon her heart, already tendered by suffering, found peace in the Saviour who had suffered for her. After that, I think I never visited her without hearing her give some expression of thankfulness to her Heavenly Father.

Rosalia's surroundings changed; her health did not come back, for that was not to be; but filth and gloom could not thrive with visits of joyful Sunday School children with flowers and songs of gladness. Her son put a floor in her room, whitewashed the wall and things were cleaned up. When death released Rosalia, she departed in peace.

But this story cannot all be written now. In fact, it is not all made yet. But I will close this short chapter by saying that Rosalia had two little granddaughters that listened and helped and learned. Now they are young women and faithful members of the Christian Endeavor Society and leaders among the young people. The older of the two is in the Mission School preparing herself to be a teacher. SYLVESTER JONES.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

At the close of a week of struggle between Democrats and Republicans to get the upper hand, the national House of Representatives has passed the naval appropriation bill. As in the case of the army bill nearly every member present gave his approval when the final vote was taken. This act carries appropriations of close to three hundred millions of dollars, about twice as much as the naval appropriations last year and by far the largest naval program ever undertaken by the United States government.

The Administration forces, including the Naval Affairs Committee, did not have such plain sailing in getting their program accepted as had been expected. The bill as introduced provided for expenditures of nearly two hundred and fifty millions of dollars, an increase of nearly one hundred millions over last year's appropriations. Chairman Padgett of the Naval Affairs Committee stated that his committee considered that they were recommending a program quite as large as needed and much larger than some members of the committee believed it ought to be. But the "big navy" advocates made a contest for increase on every important section of the bill and in addition tried to get two battleships included where none at all were provided in the committee program.

Just before voting on passage of the bill another roll call was taken on an amendment offered by Congressman Browning, of New Jersey. This amendment embodied items of increase that would have added another one hundred millions of dollars to the measure as it passed. It was defeated by only six votes, a very narrow escape for those who stood by the more moderate program. Knowing the reputation of the Friends with relation to military preparations it seemed rather an anomaly to see Congressman Butler, of Pennsylvania, and Browning, men with hundreds of Friends in their districts, standing out as two of the leading and most strenuous advocates of big increase in the navy.

The bill still falls short by more than two hundred million dollars of the program originally recommended by Secretary Daniels and urged by such organizations as the Navy League. It makes provision for fifty submarines, five battle cruisers, a type of vessel not now in our navy and costing over $20,000,000 each, numerous auxiliary vessels, an increase of about 15,000 in number of enlisted men and the addition of many aircraft.

The naval bill has now gone to the Senate. It will not come up there until after the national conventions. A member of the Senate said today that there was sure to be an effort made in the upper branch of Congress to still further enlarge the program, especially to the extent of adding battleships.

It is urged that Friends now write to their two Senators asking them to stand against the inordinate increase in the navy and appealing to them to support the provision in the bill for the President calling an international conference on disarmament at the close of the European war. No matter how many letters have been written heretofore it will be decidedly worth while to write again especially on the naval bill.

THOMAS ARMSTRONG.

Thomas Armstrong, son of Samuel and Elizabeth Armstrong, was born February 2nd, 1832, near East Fairfield, Columbiana County, Ohio, and died at Whittier, California, April 27, 1916, aged 84 years.

His parents were birthright members of the Friends church and were useful and influential members. Their home for many years was the home of traveling ministers and these had a wholesome influence upon all the children of the family. Opportunities for education were very limited, yet these limited opportunities were so made use of that every member of the family became a school teacher, with the exception of one, who did not care to engage in that work. Early in life

Thomas Armstrong was impressed with the importance of becoming a Christian, and he much enjoyed reading the biographies of ministers and other Christians.

On October 8, 1857, he was married to Sarah Josephine Lipsey, of New Waterford, Ohio, and immediately settled in Jennings County, Indiana. In the year 1861 they moved to Washington County, Indiana, in the limits of Blue River Monthly Meeting.

They remained in Washington County for five years during which time Thomas Armstrong was principal of Blue River Academy. Following this they moved to Hopewell, Jennings County, where for twelve years he had charge of the Hopewell Friends school. In 1876 he became teacher at Bloomingdale Academy, where he remained five years. Later he taught at Ackworth, Iowa, and at New Providence, Iowa. At this latter place, which was his last school work, he served also as pastor of the meeting.

In the summer of 1890 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Whittier Meeting and served in that relation for eight years. He has also served as pastor at Alamitos, Long Beach, Newberg (Oregon), San Francisco Mission, and at El Modena. He served at two different periods as a Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent and has served for many years as a member of the Evangelistic Board.

The life has been an active one and in every way constructive. As a teacher he possessed the ability to inspire and to lead and he ever compelled the respect and devotion of his pupils. As a minister and pastor he was thoughtful, wise, sympathetic, patient and kind.

A loving companion with whom Thomas Armstrong has walked life's pathway for more than fifty-eight years, two daughters and three sons and a large company of grand-children remain. The community and the local church and the entire Yearly Meeting have suffered a conscious loss, and a sense of loss will be felt throughout the entire circle of Friends in America.

Funeral services were conducted by H. Edwin McGrew, assisted by Andrew F. Mitchell. Most of the pastors of Friends' churches in Southern California were on the platform and most of them, as did some others, spoke briefly. Rev. Tinning, President of the Ministerial Union, spoke words of appreciation on behalf of the Union.—Pacific Friend.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Meeting of Executive Committee On Peace.

The Executive Committee of the Peace Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting met in Richmond, Indiana, on June 1, 1916, to hear reports concerning work already planned for, and to consider what may be done for the remainder of the year.

From reports received it appears that the following literature has been distributed pro rata to the various Quarterly Meetings, the expense being borne by the Peace Committee, viz:

One thousand copies of "Military Training in Our Schools."

One thousand five hundred copies of a leaflet with cartoon on the danger of military "preparedness."

There has also been furnished 1000 copies of Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin's "A Quaker View of the War," as a part of the allotment made to the Peace Committee by the Book and Tract Committee of the Yearly Meeting.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee in last December, a plan of co-operating with the Young People's Societies or other groups of Friends in the Yearly Meeting desiring to form classes for the study of the peace question was adopted, by which the Peace Committee of the Yearly Meeting agreed to supply to any such study group desiring it, a copy either of Wilson's "Christ and War," or of "Selected Quotations on Peace and War." Reports received at the meeting on June 1, show that classes at the following points in the Yearly Meeting have up to date availed themselves of this arrangement and have been furnished one of these books, viz:

The plans for the future include the distribution of additional literature, co-operation with local meetings in supplying speakers, and co-operation with other organizations wherever possible, especially in the relief work for victims of the war, and in assisting in stemming the rising tide of militarism, which in the name of "preparedness" is becoming so serious a menace to the development of the higher life of the nation at this time.

On behalf of the committee,

ALLEN D. HOLE,

Chairman.

PHARIBA W. STEPHENS,

Secretary.

AT MUNCIE, INDIANA.

On Sunday evening, May 21, Phariba W. Stephens, Secretary of the Peace Committee of the Yearly Meeting, addressed the Christian Endeavorers of Muncie on "World Peace and the Price Which Must Be Paid To Secure It." She had the earnest attention of these young people and the meeting closed with urgent inquiries about how Friends may promote peace, also as to what is being done not only in Indiana Yearly Meeting on the subject, but among all Friends and especially the noble activity of English Friends in relieving suffering in Europe.

SPICELAND QUARTERLY MEETING.

The Newcastle (Indiana) Times recently published a paper read by Dr. T. R. Woodard, of Knightstown, before the W. C. T. U. County Institute held in Newcastle a few days before. The paper is entitled, "The New Patriotism," and is a clear and forcible presentation of the contrast between the meaning which is attached to the term "patriotism" now and the meaning which it surely will have when the Kingdoms of the world become the Kingdom of Christ the Lord. Dr. Woodard is the Superintendent of the peace work in his Quarterly Meeting and a member of the Executive Committee of the Peace Committee of the Yearly Meeting, and is active in promoting the cause of peace by giving addresses as in the instance just referred to, by using the columns of local newspapers from time to time, and in arranging for conferences once each year as a rule.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Military Training for High School Pupils at Wichita.

In the Wichita (Kansas) Beacon for April 29, Professor William L. Pearson, Chairman of the Peace Committee of Kansas Yearly Meeting, has a letter entitled "Why Out-Herod Herod?" being a discussion of the question of military instruction in schools.

The occasion of the letter is an agitation which is being undertaken by certain citizens of Wichita to introduce military training into the High School at that place. Professor Pearson reviews the principal arguments advanced, and shows especially how leading educators of the United States are arrayed against the plan. Two sentences from a resolution adopted last summer by the National Education Association are well worth being repeated again and again whenever the agitation for military training in schools appears, viz:

"The Association deploras any attempt to militarize this country. It again declares against the establishment of compulsory military training on the grounds that this is reactionary and inconsistent with American ideals and standards."

A SOLDIER'S VIEW OF CHRISTIANS AND WAR; FROM "THE LAST WEAPON."

"And how about the Christians—in all nations, who call us 'the scourge in the hand of God to chastise their enemies!'" suggested the Northerner.

"The queerest part of the whole business!" laughed the Corner man. "I'll never say that war, as war, is wrong. It's been my trade ever since I ran away from my mother; but it only needs a blind man to see—no offence, mate—that if these Christians had jumped clean out of their skins with horror when this war started, they could have stopped the whole bang business, and stood a better chance of getting things set straight than ever we soldiers could do! For I ask you—what have we set straight?"

"Oh—why didn't they?" groaned the woman.

"Because—well, I'm not inside a parson, and don't fancy the situation, but you see, we army men, we believe in our job, and when the chance comes, we're there! But the parsons, they don't down at the bottom, really believe in their job, and when their chance comes, they're not there! As I said to an old Sunday School teacher of mine, who was boasting of the number of youngsters he'd got to join: 'Look here, you're a grand old man, and have done many a good turn to me when I was a young scamp, but don't you go Sunday-School teaching no more. It doesn't somehow go down to hear a man sing at the top of his voice:

'Sufficient is Thine arm alone and know that all the time he is saying in his inside, 'But we should be dished if we hadn't our army and our navy!' If I set up for believing in an Almighty God, I wouldn't insult Him like that!"

And our defence is sure.'

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

New York Yearly Meeting met in its 221st Annual Session at Poughkeepsie, New York, on Fifth Month, 31st. The meeting of Ministry and Oversight had held its sessions on the previous day, and an unusually large and attentive gathering met for the opening minute at ten o'clock on the last day of the Fifth Month.

The Poughkeepsie Meeting-house is beautiful, though not exactly after the ancient usage of Friends. It is possible that it was more appreciated on this account.

The reading of the London General Epistle for 1915 and the receipt of a cablegram from London Yearly Meeting, which is now in session, brought the Meeting very close to English Friends. The Epistle Committee presented the summary of the Epistles from American Yearly Meetings in an attempt to bring to the Yearly Meeting a touch of the interests of American Quakerism. A brief mention of the particular interests of each Yearly Meeting and the circumstances under which the Yearly Meetings met, added color to the picture. The Meeting was much moved by the loss of Penn College.

James Wood was chosen Clerk, and Eleanor W. Taber and L. Hollingsworth Wood were chosen Assistant Clerks.

In the midst of the afternoon session on Fourth Day, a delegation of five Friends was announced from the Yearly Meeting of the other branch of Friends, which holds its sessions at 15th Street in New York. They presented their concern for a better co-operation in our work in peace and philanthropy, and the Meeting unanimously accepted their proposition for the appointment of a Joint Committee to investigate in what ways we could more effectively cooperate. The Committee is to report next year.

In the evening, the reports of the Yearly Meetings Peace Committees and the Joint Committee on Peace, with the report of the Peace Association of Friends in America, were presented. Felix M. Morley, one of the Haverford graduates who has been serving with the Friends' Ambulance Unit in Northern France and Belgium, gave an interesting account of the civilian work of the Ambulance Unit for the Belgians in that part of Belgium which is still under the Belgium Flag. His lecture was illustrated with lantern slides. Mr. Morley is devoting himself to the task of spreading information about this work among American Friends and others. Mr. Morley was followed by Mr. Malcolm Davis, who is associated with the New York Evening Post, and who spoke on the point of view and opportunity of the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

The report of the Joint Committee on Peace spoke of the work done in connection with the Constitutional Convention, which met last summer to frame a new Constitution for the State of New York, in which they had endeavored to have written a clause exempting from military service the conscientious objectors such as those of the members of the Society of Friends. The report presented a copy of the brief which they had submitted on the subject.

On Fifth day morning, Lettice Jowett and Septimus Marten from London Yearly Meeting, gave the illustrations to accompany the reading of the London Special Epistle. They spoke of the work for the "alien enemies" interned in camps in England, and the reconstruction work in Northern France which Friends are so heroically doing. The Meeting appointed a Committee to present this work of English Friends in subordinate meetings of the Yearly Meeting, the Committee to continue its service until not only the war is over, but until normal conditions of living are resumed.

The consideration of the state of Society with a summary of the proceedings of the Meetings of Ministry and Oversight was taken up. The report showed a good degree of optimism and considerable courage in facing difficulties throughout our Meetings, of which there are forty-two. Seventy-two members of the congregations had been added as concerned Friends to help the Pastoral Committees. Twenty-seven of the congregations report special continuous pastoral care. Twenty-one of our ministers are settled in active pastorates, three are missionaries in active service in the field, and six are in educational service. D. Hodson Lewis and Martha H. Harris, of Indiana, and William J. Reagan, of Kansas, have come into the Yearly Meeting as pastors, while John R. and Pearl W. Walters have been transferred to Indiana.

A concern was expressed for the better shepherding of the congregations through visits by the pastor and the Visiting and Pastoral Committees, and particular emphasis was placed on the fact that this visiting should not be left to the pastor alone.

No Epistle was received from Dublin Yearly Meeting, as the clerk informed the body that eight Friends had met in the midst of the Dublin riots and adjourned their Yearly Meeting to meet at some less difficult season. The rest of the morning session was taken up with consideration of the Committees having to do with distribution of literature, for which there has been a continuous demand not only from within the borders of New York Yearly Meeting, but from the outside.

The afternoon session was devoted to the missionary interests of the Society with stirring addresses by Edgar T. Hole on work in Africa, and by Prof. Alfred J. Griffen, the colored principal of the Yearly Meeting School at High Point, North Carolina. The Epistle from North Carolina informed us that Alfred J. Griffen had also acceptably presented the work of the School to North Carolina Yearly Meeting, which seemed a good augury of cooperation between our Yearly Meetings.

On Fifth Day evening, the Temperance Committee made its report with the reading of the prize essays from an essay contest on temperance topics held at the Yearly Meeting School, Oakwood Seminary, and the progress of temperance work in the state was ably described by a representative of the Anti-Saloon League.

On Sixth Day morning, the business meeting of the corporation met and presented the report of the trustees who have charge of $193,110 of invested funds, in addition to some real property, and also presented the report of the trustees of the Murray Fund, who have charge of invested funds in the amount of $77,067.10. Most of these funds have been left to the Yearly Meeting by will, the income to be used for specific purposes directed by the donors, James Wood was elected a Yearly Meeting trustee for five years to succeed himself.

The report of the Joint Committee on Records of the two Yearly Meetings in the State of New York was read and showed that there had been collected, tabulated and deposited in fireproof safes, 1356 volumes of Records together with a quantity of old manuscripts which have not yet been assorted.

In the afternoon, the work of the Evangelistic Committee of the Yearly Meeting was presented, and a most stirring address on the interpretation of the spiritual life as power was delivered by Alexander C. Purdy, who had just received his doctor's degree at Hartford Seminary. The work of the Bible School Board occupied the evening session with an address by H. McKenney, of the New York City Mission on "The Teacher's Personality."

The quartette from the Cleveland Training School, which is accompanying Eli Rece of North Carolina, who was present at the sessions of the Yearly Meeting, was very helpfully present at the devotional meetings, and also at some of the sessions of the Yearly Meeting.

On Seventh Day morning, the report of the Finance Committee with its recommendations as to a quota and as to a beneficence budget was read, together with the report of the treasurer. The Finance Committee recommended that $1500 be raised by quota, and that $3000 be raised by voluntary contributions for a beneficence budget, and that the opportunity to contribute to this budget be given to every member in the Yearly Meeting. It was afterwards directed that the salary and expenses for the Yearly Meeting secretary amounting to about $1800 should also be placed in the quota, so that the New York quota for this year will be $3300.

The statistics of the Yearly Meeting were also presented, showing a total number of members of 3724, of whom 2055 are female and 1669 are male, a gain of fifty over the totals given last year. The number of members in colleges were 29, in school 497, and 7 members are at work as missionaries in foreign lands.

The afternoon was devoted to the interests of education and the report of the committee in charge of the Yearly Meeting School at Oakwood Seminary was presented. An address on education was given by the new principal of the School, William J. Reagan. This was followed by the supper of the old Scholars' Association and was to have been preceded by a picnic luncheon for young Friends on College Hill, had not a thunder shower prevented this pleasant enterprise.

In the evening, the report of the Christian Endeavor Union was presented and upon their request, the Yearly Meeting approved of the change of name to the Board of Young Friends' Activities of New York Yearly Meeting, and accepted the organization as a regular committee of the Yearly Meeting.

On First Day, in addition to the regular services, the Meeting attended at Clinton Corners, a village near Poughkeepsie, exercises in connection with the opening of a new meeting-house which had been built there. Addresses were delivered by James Wood, Errol D. Peckam and Lindley M. Stevens.

The closing minute was read after the First Day evening service with the joint expression that this had been one of the most favored Yearly Meetings in the long history of New York. Friends had seemed able and willing to differ in sweeter spirit.

The passage of laws by the Legislature of the State of New York providing for military training in schools and for the registration of all males between the ages of nineteen and forty-five in the militia reserve had brought home to Friends the possibility of that bond which comes from suffering for conscience sake, and the Meeting felt very close to the sufferings of English Friends as they contemplated the possible approach of similar service in our own State.

The hospitality of Poughkeepsie Friends had been greatly enjoyed and Friends departed from the sessions of the Meeting greatly helped and comforted by their so-journ together. The devotional exercises had been times of real spiritual refreshing and the religious note had been present in the consideration of all the business which had come before the meeting.

CORRESPONDENCE

Fort Collins, Colo.,

June 1, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

Many Friend communities have their pioneers who tell thrilling stories of hardships endured when our country was new in days long gone by. It is a rare privilege to arrive on the scene of action in time to see the hardships, feel the joys and witness the heroism of a Quaker community on the American frontier.

Last week I was sent by the Colorado Agricultural College down into Baca County, Colorado, which is in the extreme southeast corner, in what is known as the "short grass" country and is only now being homesteaded and settled up. I was scheduled to give a number of addresses, mostly on agricultural topics to homesteaders. One was a commencement address at an unheard of "Richland Friends Academy," located out in a desert country seventy-five miles from a railroad. At the stage station I was met by Brother I. N. Rich, the leader of the Richland Colony. He took me twenty-three miles over a barren prairie to his home.

Two years ago the nearest school was eight miles. There being little patented land, the county was unable to contribute towards the support of a school, so the neighbors joined together and erected a dug-out school house and church, which is the present home of Richland Academy and Richland monthly meeting. They had about twenty students this last year, with one paid teacher and one volunteer. The modest little building would not hold the interested crowds who came to attend the exercises from nearby homesteads, some coming from ten, twenty and thirty miles. The little dug-out church in which the school meets is the only house of worship in the great county of 25,000 square miles. The people are an inspiration to meet, made of true pioneer stuff, used to hardships and overcoming difficulties. They have had two good crops but are having a great drought at the present time, and unless rain comes very soon they are fearing it will be impossible to employ a teacher for the school next year. But the Good Father will certainly send the showers to his children who need them and deserve them so much.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK IN NEBRASKA YEARLY MEETING.

Because of the widely separated condition of the Meetings and because of lack of funds to employ a Field Secretary, the Christian Endeavor Union of Nebraska Yearly Meeting has been thrown into a weakened condition. There are fewer than eight Societies in the twenty-three meetings of the Yearly Meeting. There does not seem to be much interest in Young Peoples work as such.

But there is a marked enthusiasm in the Meetings as a whole. Working on the plan of "One thing each time and that done well," the Yearly Meeting seems to be turning every attention to raising one hundred thousand dollars endowment for Church extension and Central College. Young People and all are expected to work towards this end. Until we can work out a better system of inter-meeting visitation it seems that the Young Peoples work of Nebraska must remain a problem. The National Secretary, Thomas E. Jones, expects to spend a few weeks in this Yearly Meeting during the month of July.

OUR "FIRST CALL."

Have you received our "First Call" to the Conference at Cedar Lake? If so, will you not post it in a conspicuous place where all may read? If not, a card will bring you one.

THE STUDY CLASS.

6.—Method of Holding Session.

1.—Gather around the table shortly before 8 o'clock, with maps, charts and blackboard on the wall, and books for study and reference on the table.

2.—As the hour strikes, open with prayer. A few informal, introductory questions which have been carefully prepared to draw out special interests, aroused by the previous week's study, should be presented.

3.—The leader should ask a member of the class to state clearly the first question to be discussed. He should get opinions of the others, should not criticize, should try to stimulate discussion by raising two-sided issues; keep people on the subject, and check long talks. No member should be allowed to remain long in silence. When the class breaks out into discussion, spontaneously, the leader should hold his peace. If the interest lags, he should question the position of some, until the fire of discussion blazes up again. After fifteen or twenty minutes of this kind of activity, a paper bearing on the question should be read.

4.—Some member of the class should lead the discussion on one of the topics that several people may be trained in the art of questioning. Three or four topics may be discussed in one evening. This will be regulated by the course of study, the interest of the class, and the length of time for each meeting.

IMPORTANT.

If you know of a new Christian Endeavor Society, Study Class, or any young peoples organizations, report the same to us, so that we may get in touch with them.

Send to us for Christian Endeavor supplies, study class books, Efficiency Charts, etc.

Write the Conference Secretary for announcements and programs containing enrollment blanks for the Conference at Cedar Lake. Ask your Quarterly Meeting, your Monthly Meeting for delegates.

FROM KANSAS CITY.

Our men have several times arranged entertainments. In each instance these entertainments have consisted of musical and literary numbers, most of which had been secured from outside the church.

The most successful things of the sort we have had, have been dinners cooked and served by men, at which the women were invited guests. After dinner there were speakers arranged for, whose subjects were of interest to both men and women—two or three speakers each evening. One evening we had the Representative in Congress from this district and the Postmaster of Kansas City. The postmaster gave an account of the workings of Civil Service, and told many interesting facts in connection with the mail service. The Congressman outlined some needed changes in our political system, and indicated some of the causes which obstruct their enactment.

CENTRAL COLLEGE AND NEBRASKA YEARLY MEETING.

By Thomas E. Jones.

One of the first things that impresses one in Nebraska Yearly Meeting is the tremendous seriousness with which church movements are undertaken. Nothing seems too difficult. Filled with a spirit of enthusiasm and consecration they launch a scheme to raise a hundred thousand dollar endowment for Church extension and college work as easily as most Yearly Meetings would undertake the erection of a new Meeting House.

As pleas for new churches came from the frontier in Montana and Wyoming the Yearly Meeting arose to the demand. It is little wonder that the Spirit of God moved us to the depths of our beings when we saw that there are a hundred districts within the limits of the Yearly Meeting that are unchurched, and that will probably not be touched unless Friends meet the challenge. No Yearly Meeting has a greater opportunity than Nebraska in church extension. And probably nobody among Friends feels this responsibility more keenly than that Yearly Meeting. But the immediate challenge for church extension does not obscure the longer look of providing leaders for the future. In fact the latter is accentuated by the former.

The problem of Nebraska Yearly Meeting and of Quakerism in this great central west rests in a large measure with Nebraska Central College. One's scepticism vanishes when he sees the seriousness with which the Yearly Meeting meets her problem. I say meets it, because I believe she is actually meeting the situation. The influence of the school was witnessed to by eight of her leading students. As they told the story of how the institution had found them with little hope and low ideals, and how it had cared for them as a mother who advises here and strengthens there, we were moved to see that God had placed His seal upon the institution and that it is bound to succeed. Missionaries, ministers, teachers and business men have already gone out of this comparatively new school and are filling positions that would give glory to any college. With the country church problem staring Nebraska Friends in the face she must have trained leaders and that soon. This school is in a position to find and equip these. Let us thank God that these courageous Friends are facing their problem not only with credit to themselves, but to Quakerism at large.

The second thing that impresses one with the Yearly Meeting is the extent of its territory and the financial standing of its constituents. It is hard for Eastern Friends to realize the size, territorially of the western Yearly Meetings. Perhaps it will help to consider that it is as far from Nebraska's extreme eastern Meeting to its farthest western one as the distance from Chicago to Pittsburg or Boston to Raleigh, North Carolina. North and south the distance of its extremes is equal to that of Philadelphia and Cincinnati. In all this territory there are but twenty-two hundred Friends. Ninety-five per cent of these are farmers, many of whom are trying to pay for their homes, build local churches and pay heavy road and school taxes. When we add to these things the expense of running the Yearly Meeting, which is but nine years old, and the support of local pastors, it is a matter for encouragement to see people tackle the problem of raising a $100,000 endowment for college and church extension.

The third thing for encouragement is to see the business-like way in which the problem is being met. A thoroughly modern, efficient business system has been established in the school. The trustees know where every penny of support goes. The school lives within its means. Not one cent of indebtedness was incurred last year. The school will progress as rapidly as funds come in. A slogan of 300 students at Nebraska Central College during the winter of 1916-17 has been adopted, and committees appointed to go before the Yearly Meeting and all interested Friends with this plan and to thoroughly organize the $100,000 campaign. Plans for church extension are also thoroughly business-like. The Evangelistic Superintendent has thoroughly surveyed the field and arranged a definite program of aggression. In spite of the great distance he has touched every local meeting and established them on a modern working basis. The spirit of Nebraska Yearly Meeting is adventure, consecration and evangelization.

Still it is not to be presumed that this body of Friends is the embodiment of all goodness for they are not. One can't help feeling that the deep sincerity, business integrity and church loyalty that characterized the old-time Friend has partially been lost in the eager grasp for more land. Religion and business life have been divorced in a measure. It seems rather easy to express one's love for God fluently in Meeting and to bitterly criticize one's neighbors in private life. One is impressed with the greater amount of attention given to expressing religion by word than by the ordering of the whole life. While these things appear to be true to a visitor in Nebraska they are no less true of several other Yearly Meetings.

As a denomination, facing the most tremendous issues ever presented a church, does it not behoove us to so order our lives that men shall see as well as hear of the power of Christ in human affairs. "He called for my life, and I gave it at His footstool" is a line from a quotation in the London Epistle two years ago. Its challenge has not ceased to move us to give up our wills to work out the plan of God in our local communities. With the splendid forces Nebraska does have, we have little doubt that she will soon emphasize this last point quite as fully as any other Yearly Meeting.

CHURCH AT WORK

Washington, D. C.—Friends held their annual Sabbath School picnic on May 30, using the occasion as at other times of this kind for a presentation of some form of a peace message. The speaker at this time was James A. Edgerton, of Friends' stock and conviction, though not a member. He emphasized the need of a spiritual foundation for internationalism as the only safeguard against such outbreaks as Europe is now experiencing. A pleasant incident was the observance of the twenty-first anniversary of the marriage of two of our leading Friends, H. Virgil and Anna M. Easterling, in the form of remarks, a gift of silverware and the recital of the marriage ceremony.

Gate, Oklahoma—Gate Quarterly Meeting was held here May 26-28. M. F. Swafford, our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present and also James Fiske, of Rose Valley, Kansas. They were wonderfully favored in bringing the message that just fit our needs. Brother Swafford delivered the dedication sermon on Sabbath morning for the new church, which has recently been built by the Friends of Gate. Funds were received in sufficient amount to cancel the indebtedness which still remained on the building. Constance Gidley is pastor.

Sand Arroyo, Colorado—On April 12, Kirby V. Bowen, Superintendent of Denver Quarterly Meeting, to which Sand Arroyo Monthly Meeting belongs, made our meeting a visit, holding evangelistic services one week. His plain gospel teaching has given strength and encouragement to our meeting. On May 21, P. D. Guyer, who just closed his pastoral work at Paonia, conducted the revival services. The Lord gave great power and victory in preaching the Word which resulted in a general awakening of the church. Some persons were definitely blessed at nearly every service, and thirty-two received the blessing of conversion, renewal or sanctification. There have been nine accessions to the church, with good prospects of others yet to come. There was a good attendance throughout the meetings.

The church here was organized two years ago and has a membership of seventy-three. This being the only organized church within twelve miles, the field is large and affords great opportunity for the Master's service. We are very grateful for the coming of these servants of the Lord.

Central Village, Mass.—The Friends' church at Central Village treated the community to a free concert given by the New Bedford Y. W. C. A. orchestra at the Grange Hall on Sunday evening, June 4. The day was pleasant and nearly 150 people filled the hall. In the near future we are expecting State Senator Knowles to come and speak here. These rather popular meetings reach and touch the community more than any other service.

Marshall, Indiana—Our meetings and Sabbath School are maintaining a good degree of interest, and the attendance is very good. We were favored on the night of June 3 with the presence of E. Howard Brown, of Westfield, Indiana, who gave his lecture on the history of the Friends church. Then on Sabbath morning he preached a strong sermon and on Sabbath evening delivered his illustrated lecture on peace. The attendance and interest were good at all the services, especially the last session. His argument for peace and against preparedness was logical and forceful. Brother Brown was pastor here twenty-two years ago and Friends were glad to have him here again. The memory of his visit and labors will live long in the hearts of our people.

NEWS NOTES

Medals were given to various winners in athletics at the chapel exercises of Earlham College on the morning of June 5, President Kelly making the distribution.

President Robert L. Kelly gave the formal address at the closing session of the Indiana Centennial Anniversary of Madison County at Anderson, Indiana, on May 27.

On Commencement Day, June 7, Friends University, of Wichita, Kansas, conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon S. E. Nicholson, editor of The American Friend.

Ruth Kelsey, daughter of Mead A. and Anna Kelsey, of Richmond, Indiana, has accepted the assistant principalship at Southland College, Arkansas, for the next school year.

Philip W. Furnas, who receives his M. A. degree from Harvard this year, will be instructor in Freshman Rhetoric at Earlham College next year, succeeding Professor Lawrance.

President Isaac Sharpless, of Haverford College, spent the week-end of May 27, 28 at Washington, D. C., attending the National Conference of the League to Enforce Peace, of which he is a vice-president.

A letter from Charles L. Jessup, of San Benito, Texas, brings the information that he is enjoying better health than he has for years. He recently gave the commencement address at the San Benito high school.

Charles and Lenna Lescault have resigned their pastorate of the First Friends Church of Los Angeles, California, to enter the evangelistic field, to take effect the first of July. They are expecting to return to the middle west.

We are in receipt of the May number of "The Harvester," published in the interests of the missionary work of Friends in Guatemala. It is an interesting number and indicates progress at the various mission stations in that country.

The Japanese work conducted by Friends at Pasadena, California, is increasing in interest. There are afternoon classes for women in English and in sewing, eleven being enrolled in the latter class. Five are enrolled in the English class.

Prof. and Mrs. Roderick Scott (the latter the daughter of President and Mrs. R. L. Kelly, of Earlham College), will sail for China on September 7, under appointment of the American Board of Foreign Missions to take an important educational position in Foochow Union University.

Hannah L. Jessup, of San Benito, Texas, is not in good health, but she is a very busy woman. She is President of the local Humane organization and is also President of the humane work of the Federated Women's Clubs of the Rio Grande Valley. She also does considerable church work.

At its recent session Nebraska Yearly Meeting took a most important step when it launched a campaign for an endowment fund of $100,000. Half of this is to be invested for purposes of church extension and the remaining half is to be added to the permanent endowment of Nebraska Central College.

"Isaac Sharpless Hall" is a building to be erected at Haverford College by the alumni association in the near future at a cost of $100,000. It will house the laboratory for physics and biology. A committee of over forty men is working on subscriptions with their different classes with excellent results.

Fairmount College at Wichita, Kansas, at its recent commencement exercises conferred the degree of LL. D. on President Edmund Stanley, of Friends University, in recognition of his years of service in the educational field in that state. For many years he has stood at the front in that commonwealth in behalf of higher education.

The pastoral committee of the meeting at Wabash, Indiana, has extended to A. J. Furstenberger and his helpful wife a call to remain in the pastorate there another year, and the meeting in general has endorsed the action of the committee. There appears to be renewed interest in the Sabbath School and in the work of the church.

The American Friend acknowledges with appreciation the receipt of an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of Friends University, which were held June 4-7. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by J. Arthur Wollam, pastor of University Church, while Dr. Frank G. Smith, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Kansas City, Mo., gave the class address.

The American Friend acknowledges with appreciation the receipt of an invitation to attend the commencement exercises at Wilmington College June 11-15. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Daniel McGurk, an M. E. pastor from Cincinnati. A Shakespearian festival was to be given on Tuesday afternoon and evening and on Thursday Hon. D. D. Woodmansee of Cincinnati gave the class address.

The Haverford summer school, a biennial conference, held under the care of Haverford College will, this year, transfer its scene of operations from Haverford to Swampscott, Mass. The management will be largely in charge of Henry J. Cadbury and the program will include the following speakers: George A. Barton, Alfred C. Garrett, Rufus M. Jones, Elihu Grant, Elbert Russell and William E. Sperry. The time will be September 5-12.

A number of Earlham College men were to leave this week for the annual Y. M. C. A. Student Conference at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, which begins June 16. The girls expect to have at least a dozen in attendance from Earlham at their Lake Geneva Conference the latter part of August.

F. W. and Phariba Stephens, of Richmond, Indiana, started for California last week, where they are expecting to stay the coming year. They will make the trip by automobile and will stop at various places en route. Interested Friends will note the advertisement of Phariba Stephens in another column. She is the general agent of the Sunday School Times and subscriptions for that journal should be sent through her. Their future address is to be 363 West Forty-Fifth Street, Los Angeles, California.

A week-end peace conference was held at Wanstead, England, on April 29 and 30. The London Friend says: "Both the Men's and Women's Adult Schools entered heartily into the spirit of the conference, and the National Council subject for the day (The Kinship of the Peoples,) was especially appropriate, and was introduced at a joint meeting on Sunday afternoon by Dr. Henrietta M. Thomas. After tea on the terrace, Dr. Thomas gave to a group in the garden a delightful account of her experiences in Germany."

The London Friend gives an account of a Yorkshire conference of young men at Bradford, England, at which John Percy Fletcher gave an address. Concerning him The Friend says:

"Brought up in a radical home, in which the name of Gladstone was spoken with awe, having Cromwell as a hero, he early learned of the practical religion of the Quakers through reading 'John Halifax Gentleman,' an extract from a Quaker diary and the teaching of George Fox, leading him to a definite position, and from that time he had never had a doubt in his mind as to the unlawfulness of a Christian to bear arms."

Septimus Marten, M. Catherine Albright and Lettice Jowett, the three English Friends who are in this country in the interest of increased support for the relief work which is being done by English Friends, attended Whitewater Quarterly Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, on June 3. On the following day they attended the different Friends' meetings in Richmond, all joining in an evening service at East Main Street. They attended the annual conference of the ministers and workers of Indiana Yearly Meeting, at Lynn, Indiana, on the 5 and 6, following which they have been visiting various other points in Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings.

The Friends Historical Journal of England, of which Norman Penny is editor, is out with its second quarterly edition for 1916. It contains an account of Jacob Lindley, who lived 1744-1814, as given in an address by Truman Cooper at the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of New Garden Meeting, Pa. It also has an interesting account of "William the Quaker" or the Friend in fiction, who is dubbed "a Quaker pirate." There is much other interesting material of an historical nature, including notices relating to Friends in "The Gentleman's Magazine" 1762-1779. Four pages are devoted to "Friends and Current Literature." Price per copy, 50 cents; per year (four numbers), $1.25.

FAIRMOUNT ACADEMY

Fairmount Academy closed a very successful year's work on May 26. The enrollment the past year was 178 regular students. Charles E. Hiatt, pastor of the First Friends Church at Marion, Indiana, preached the baccalaureate sermon to a congregation which completely packed the church auditorium, estimated at 1000. The commencement address was given by Dr. G. F. Crawford, of Beloit College.

The graduating class numbered 45, the largest class ever sent out from this institution. The faculty, as announced for the coming year is as follows:

Principal, Albert R. Hall; Science, Benjamin Purviance; English, William M. Cochran; History and Domestic Science, Addie E. Wright; Languages, Gladys Neal; Manual Training, John R. Little; Agriculture and Director of State Vocational Training Department, Fred L. Kem; Vocal and Instrumental Music, Elsie Macgregor.

BIBLE SCHOOL

Review—The Phillippian Christians.

Reading Lesson—Phil. 1:1-11; 4:1-9.

Golden Text—Finally brethren, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.—Phil. 4:8.

The lessons of the Quarter began with the conversion of Saul and closed with the entrance of Paul and his party into Europe as heralds of the new gospel. The interim marks the passing of Judaism as a favored nation, and the opening of the gospel doors to the Gentile world. Jerusalem has to yield its prestige as the leading Christian center to Antioch, which stood at the gateway to Asia Minor and the West, while Peter disappears as a leader, and Paul, the survival of the fittest as a preacher "to the whole creation," becomes the greatest apostle of the new faith.

Christianity was learning that it could not be kept in a straight jacket, nor be expressed alone by definitions. Theoretically Peter and the other leaders believed in Christianity as the heritage of the Jews, but in the face of visions and the visible visitation of the Spirit upon non-Jewish peoples, they accepted the inevitable and turned the decisions of Councils in favor of liberal and progressive policies. Circumcision and other rites wholly Jewish had to yield to a religion that appealed for correct moral living and a holy relationship with God.

The march of the new truth toward Rome, the very heart of the Roman Empire, which now ruled the world, was irresistible. God's hand was leading the new church to larger destinies than even Paul probably realized. With Western Asia, Southern Europe and Northern Africa permeated with the new faith, its ultimate success was assured.

The modern missionary propaganda is only second in importance to the program of those early missionaries, whose zeal carried them into every land to preach, to witness, to suffer and to die for the Christ who had died for them. Both then and now the gospel has proved itself the power of God unto salvation to all who believe.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

JUNE 25.

Topic—"What is the Purpose of our life on Earth?"—Eph. 2: 1-10.

Emerson tells that when on a trip to New Hampshire he found a large building going up in a country town. Struck by its ungainly and rambling appearance, he asked a man who was working at it, who the architect was. And the reply was, "Oh, there isn't any architect settled on yet. I'm just building it, you see, and there's a man coming from Boston next month to put the architecture into it."

The Creator did not make us and then leave us to ourselves. It is His wish that the plan He had for our lives from the beginning be carried to its perfection. A two-talented man is as responsible for four talents as a five-talented man is for ten.

The man without a purpose is like a ship without a rudder; a waif, a nothing, no man. "Have a purpose in life," says Carlyle, "if it is only to divide and sell oxen well, but have a purpose; and having it, throw such strength of mind and muscle into your work as God has given you."

A stonemason may be a mere machine for breaking rock, or he may become an artist. It all depends upon his point of view. If he is absolutely ignorant of the stone which he hammers he will be the machine. But if he has the idea that his block of stone is going to be set somewhere between the base line and the spire of a cathedral his work takes on the artistic. The knowledge that the beautiful building waits for his bit of stone, makes that stone mean more than stone to him.

"For we know that all things work together for good,—to them that are called, according to His purpose."

MARRIED.

Harris-Royer—At the home of the bride's parents, May 3, 1916, Silas Harris, of Americus, Kansas, to Hattie Royer, a member of Homestead Monthly Meeting, Kansas, C. C. Haines officiating.

The American Friend acknowledges receipt of the announcement of the marriage of S. Adelbert Wood and Ida M. Wood on June 1, 1916, at Portsmouth, Va. After June 15 they will be at home at Belvidere, N. C.

DIED.

Newlin—Amy Newlin, daughter of Jesse and Lydia Hobson, was born at Marshall, Indiana, August 16, 1832, and died at New London, Indiana, May 8, 1916. She was a birthright Friend and although deprived of the privilege of attending church the last few years she always maintained a great interest in its work. On account of her cheerful, Christian spirit, she was much loved by all who knew her. She leaves a son and two daughters.

Rayle—Alfred V. Rayle died at his home in Carmel, Indiana, May 27, 1916, aged 61 years. He was a member of Carmel Monthly Meeting. He leaves a wife and one son. Funeral services were conducted at the church by Thomas C. Brown of Plainfield, Indiana. Interment in Carmel cemetery.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

Friends

What are friends for but to divine
Fairest and finest that we are,
And think in all our glances shine
The morning and the evening star?

Wealth may dissolve, a fading cloud,
Home prove a castle in the air,
Fame pass with the forgetful crowd,
Love, when one ceases to be fair.

But closer than our brothers they
Who are our friends fall not nor fail,
Forgive our faults, and help us slay
The dragons at whose breath we quail.

There is a Friend, there is a Friend Whose love exceeds all other, who Lives, in our thought, where great skies bend,
Beyond the height, beyond the blue.

Who knows our inmost sin, but still Gives us great love; and in the end
Each earthly friend with sweet good will Patterns for us that mightier Friend.

A Word To All Friends.

We want a word first of all with the present subscribers of The American Friend. Occasionally, and especially at a time when delinquent notices are sent, we have some subscribers who ask for a discontinuance of the paper.

Frequently the excuse is given that the subscriber has other good reading matter and that he does not have time to read more. Sometimes the statement is made that the subscriber cannot afford to take the paper another year. Within the three years and a half that the paper has been under the present management, we have not had a half dozen requests for discontinuance upon the grounds that the subscriber was dissatisfied with the paper.

The time has come when not only our present subscribers, but all Friends must face without flinching their obligations to The American Friend. It may be that interested individuals and the various Yearly Meetings will be willing to go on indefinitely contributing extra amounts to meet the deficiency caused each year by the publication of the paper, but the important question is, is it fair that they shall do this?

When anyone of our subscribers asks for a discontinuance of the paper, it means that someone else, and generally someone else who is already paying for his own subscription, must go down into his pocket to pay an extra amount in order that the paper may continue publication. There is no more reason, except the reason of greater interest in the welfare of the church, why any Friend should pay $50.00 additional, or $10.00 or $5.00 or $1.00, than that every one of our subscribers should continue paying a year's subscription for the paper if it is within his power to do so. Furthermore, there is no more obligation upon any Friend to pay an extra amount to insure the continued publication, than rests upon every family of Friends in the Five Years Meeting to patronize the paper, especially when those who patronize it are getting value received week after week in return.

Of course it is evident to everyone who thinks about the proposition, that the only alternative of the non-support of The American Friend is that it should cease publication. This latter alternative of course is unthinkable, and probably there are few Friends in America who would feel that the church can now afford to do without a weekly periodical.

As has been said in these columns before, The American Friend is the greatest asset which the Five Years Meeting has. There is no other department or instrumentality that has such a large and continuous hearing as The American Friend, and in that sense it has the greater potentiality for the upbuilding of the church and the development of the resources of the church.

The ease with which some Friends decide that they have enough good reading already and conclude, therefore, to do without The American Friend the coming year is most disheartening, and the ease with which a host of other Friends sidestep any question of responsibility toward this organ of the church is equally discouraging. If the same spirit existed in many of our local meetings toward the support of the pastor or the current and beneficent budgets, we would of course soon be without any local meetings or any denomination.

We have no hesitancy in saying that the meetings which most generously patronize The American Friend are not only our liveliest and most up to date meetings, but they are doing more to meet the demands of community service and to strengthen and extend the work of the denomination than other meetings which are indifferent to the claims of the paper. This is necessarily true, for The American Friend is more and more not only an agency that is helping to build up the denomination as a whole, but by virtue of this fact is contributing to the larger interest and success of the local meeting.

Our appeal is first to our present readers that they dismiss all thought of discontinuing The American Friend, and second to all Friends generally in the Five Years Meeting to accept the responsibility that is upon them by subscribing for The American Friend, and thus making it more possible to serve the entire church in the largest possible way. Our appeal is for loyalty to the denominational paper, although with equal propriety we might appeal for

III

Whether or not we shall have a greater Quakerism will be our answer to the question as to what is the meaning of the church. If the establishment and perpetuity of the church are the chief purposes of religious endeavor, if the church is an end in itself, then a small and unprogressive body may be just as satisfactory as any other and even more so. Probably no Friend would consent to any such characterization of the mission of the church. Yet, in effect, has not Quakerism often been idealized as an end to be attained, and have not too many of us been content if there were a faithful few left to maintain the ideal and bear testimony to its undeniable worth?

On the other hand, if the church is meant to be a means to an end, if it is to become an instrument of righteousness, if it shall be potent as a living organism to go into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation until the last man and the last woman and the last child shall have heard the glad message of redeeming grace, then the size and capability of the body is quite as essential as its intrinsic value. Without denying the power of Quakerism to give character and standing to its adherents, we are now brought face to face with the fact that unless Quakerism is potent to reproduce the essential characteristics of its faith in others, unless it can induce a hungering after righteousness on the part of the multitudes, unless it can become the herald of a new day of hope for a suffering and sinful world, its mission is vain and it can have little further place in the Christianization of humanity. The dominating spirit of the early church was missionary, and within a generation the devotees of the new faith had carried the good news throughout the then civilized world. Had early Christianity assumed the spirit of exclusiveness, Christianity would have remained a sectional religion, with Jerusalem as the Mecca where the Shekinah of God was believed to be vouchsafed to all the believers.

We should say that two forces, unrelated to each other, have been operating to keep Quakerism confined to all too narrow limitations. First of all, it has oftentimes been exclusive to its own hurt. In the second place, when it has yielded to the call of pro-gressivism and has sought to enlarge its fields of service, it has found itself handicapped distressingly by a lack of means with which to carry on the contemplated work. In either case the remedy is with us and does not depend greatly upon outside circumstances. There is an exclusiveness of experience that belongs only to those who have been born again that constitutes a fellowship of believers and that embodies the real church of God on earth. But the exclusiveness of fellowship in service creates an aristocracy of religion that is sure to produce decay and ultimate death. Quakerism is not something to be maintained for its own sake. As an instrumentality for the propagation of gospel truth, as a voice to proclaim the message of Jehovah under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, it possesses a potentiality of power that is worthy of the most vigorous usage everywhere.

A greater liberality in giving, together with a more systematic scheme of operations, and a constantly enlarging membership will remove the handicaps of unsupported service. As the years have come and gone, our sources of support have not kept pace with our purposes to serve. While no doubt the members we have can do much more than they are now doing, if they were taught to practice tithing, if they could get a larger vision of the importance of the tasks that are before us, and if the every-member canvass were to be universally observed, yet the limitations of our membership are bound to remain constant sources of discouragement, whenever the church is ready to undertake any service that is really aggressive.

Friends are constantly losing out because so many of our members are moving to localities where there are no Friends' meetings. Methodists and Baptists and Presbyterians suffer no such handicaps, for no matter where their members go, they generally find a congregation of their own faith with which to affiliate. There are those among us who feel that it makes no difference if our meetings are few and widely scattered, that our members can worship and serve with other communions just as well. This is true, in part at least, so far as individuals are concerned, the logic of which is that Friends as a body might cease to exist, allowing our membership and machinery to be merged with others, and thus save the expense of operating a separate organism. But if Quakerism is to have a continued existence—and few Friends or others will claim that its mission is ended—and if it is to be an active force in the interpretation of gospel truth to a needy world, it must be able to do more than hold its own, in numbers as well as in service; it must, in fact, lay the groundwork for a constantly increasing enrollment of communicants, adequate to support our enlarging lines of service, and it must extend our centers of activity, both for the sake of the communities where these centers exist and as a means of retaining a larger percent of our moving membership.

We do not minimize what Friends are now doing. On the contrary there are many evidences of a life that is edifying both to ourselves and others, and the stirrings upon every hand betoken a progressive spirit that is encouraging. But it is pitiable to see a body of believers with spiritual ideals such as the whole world needs, striving to enlarge its endeavors, with a membership that is at a standstill and inadequate to support what we really want to do. Our advocacy of a greater Quakerism is not for its own sake, but for the sake of the larger service which it should be rendering humanity. The door is open for such an achievement.

The Appeal and the Method of Foreign Missions

By WM. W. CADBURY, of Canton Christian College.

In Ex-President Taft's lecture, delivered at Swarthmore College in 1915, he refers to Foreign missionary work as follows: "It may be bringing coals to Newcastle for me to speak on this subject in the presence of the Society of Friends, for the missionary spirit manifested itself in George Fox and William Penn and all the early leaders of that Society. * * * The Christian missions have performed a great office with the Pagan peoples. By their good works in establishing hospitals and furnishing medical aid, in founding schools and in the sacrifices that the missionaries and their families made to help the people with whom they live, they have offered to those peoples an incontestable evidence of the spirit of the Christian religion, whose ministers they are. * * *

"The outpouring of the Chinese to attend meetings in behalf of Christianity and its spread, are startling evidences of the religious movement among the ancient people, and are a proof of the continued success and the absolute necessity for the foreign missionary movement in the spreading of light among a people who, until recently, were smug and atrophied in what seemed almost a stupor of religious contentment."

The appeal to Friends for service on the foreign field is the same as the appeal for work at home, and the same kind of philanthropic endeavor in which Friends have always been pioneers, is the kind of missionary work which will regenerate China, India and Japan. There are five lines of service which should engage the attention of all who desire to help in the uplift of the peoples of the East. These are Education, Economic Reform, Social Reform, International Peace and a new Spiritual Conception of God.

1. Education. In Quaker communities like the New England States and Pennsylvania, Friends have taken a leading part in the establishment of schools and colleges. In a country like China this is one of the greatest needs of the present day. The young people are eager for western learning to a degree almost never seen in our American institutions. The government is unable to supply this demand because of inadequate means and the lack of teachers. To one who believes in education, there is no more inspiring task than to impart to these eager students the learning that only the missionary institution makes available. The Friends' school is the ideal type for this work.

2. Economic Reform. The weakness of the government of China rests in the corruption and inexperience of its officials. They have yet to learn that justice and uprightness are the basis of all sound government. In addition to political reform there is great need for improvement in agricultural methods, which have varied little from those in vogue two thousand years ago. The Chinese are indeed skillful farmers, but by the introduction of scientific methods their labor would go much further. Millions of dollars and human lives are lost yearly through flood and famine, which the reforestation of the hills and mountains can alone remedy. Again, the laws of sanitation, so essential to the well-being of the State, are almost unknown. The great mass of the people in Oriental lands are below par physically because of their unsanitary surroundings. Can we blame them if they fall behind morally? Thousands of babies die yearly before they are two weeks old, from one easily preventable disease tetanus neonatorum.

3. Social Reform. In many of their customs Orientals set us an example, as in their industry and their exaltation of the obligations of the family. But woman is often regarded as a slave, blind girls are sold by their parents into lives of shame, orphans and the poor are neglected, the prisons are still foul dungeons, such as existed in England in the eighteenth century, the insane are bound in chains or allowed to wander at large, and the sick die before their time for lack of scientific care. Here are opportunities for Friends along special lines of philanthropic work for which they have always been noted. They have accomplished much in England and America, they should now turn their attention to those lands where the work is yet in its infancy.

4. International Peace. Much hostility to western nations has been aroused by merchants and syndicates who have endeavored to exploit the peoples of Asia. Three of the greatest curses that could befall any land have been introduced, and even forced upon the Chinese by western traders. I refer to opium, spirituous liquors and the cigarette. Governments have abrogated treaties to attain selfish ends. To counteract this malign influence there is no agent more potent than the missionary college or hospital. A few years ago it was found that of fourteen institutions of college grade in China, twelve were American. This fact alone accounts largely for the friendly feeling that China holds towards the United States. One missionary in China or Japan is worth more than ten soldiers at home for defense, and a missionary college with an endowment of $1,000,000 is worth far more in preserving peace than a dreadnought for which the nation is taxed $15,000,000.

5. Spiritual Uplift. This is the crowning aim of the missionary, and may I not say of Friends, too, in all their philanthropic endeavor, to tell the people that God is not a malevolent spirit, always seeking to injure men; that the malarial chill or the infantile convulsions are not the evidences of a malicious demon, always lurking about in order that he may play some foul trick or injure in some way the children of man. Can we conceive of what it means to these people when they realize that God is a loving Father who careth for the sparrow and much more for his human children? When fear is thus removed, life assumes a new aspect and the transformation in the soul can often be read in the enlightened countenance of him who has found the Way, the Truth and the Life.

The appeal is urgent to all who believe in the brotherhood of mankind, and every Friend must feel it. What, then, is the method of meeting this need? How shall the Friend who is called to this service conduct himself? St. Francis Xavier walked up and down the lands of heathendom ringing a bell and as the people flocked around him he sprinkled water on their heads that he might save them from eternal perdition. Equally futile will be our endeavor if we denounce the religions of the heathen as solely of the devil, and the worshippers of Buddha and Confucius as without the light of God. Certainly the Friend cannot take this point of view. In the first place the missionary must respect the people among whom he works. He must believe in their possibilities, mental and spiritual. Secondly, he must teach them to respect their own religious leaders and sages. As of old, these holy men lived and taught, so the present generation should endeavor to copy them.

Thirdly, in presenting Christianity, the attitude should not be a dogmatic one. The Orientals know something of God. The light has already illumined their dark hearts. But as every man seeks the highest truth, so we who have received from Jesus Christ what we believe to be the supreme revelation of the Father should tell them of the gospel that they might share with us the joy of believing and be saved through it from the darkness and death of superstition. How different this attitude of mind from that which sets out by telling the proud Oriental that all the learning which he has been taught to revere is based on falsehood and must be trampled under foot.

But if this religion is the supreme revelation of God, if Christ is the Master and Saviour of men, then it behooves his followers to prove this by the nature of the service they render. I believe it is on such principle that is based the efficiency for which Friends have always been noted in education, business and all their affairs. It is essential to successful missionary work. The school or college must be the best. The doctor must be thoroughly equipped. The Christian must be a "Kwan-tsz"—the Superior man of Confucius.

The Christian ideal implies the spirit of service—and the Oriental who accepts Christ must realize his obligations to his fellow men. The actual teaching of the Bible is an important part of the work. Intimate friendship makes the imparting of religious truths much easier, and public worship offers the opportunity for explaining the truths of religion. But above all the missionary will prove the superiority of his Christian faith by his daily life. He will be closely scrutinized in his attitude toward the sick and poor, toward his household servants and the common laborer, toward his students, his own family and his fellow workers.

Spiritual growth is like the physical. Expansion is essential to life. The self-centered and selfish individual or society is like the prison cell, which, at first a large room, could be gradually narrowed down smaller and smaller till it became the coffin in which the criminal died. The inventor of this cell was its first victim. The same fate awaits the individual soul or the religious society which centers upon itself and fails to see the great need of the world.

It was the missionary spirit of the founders of the Society of Friends that spread the "Seed" broadcast in England and America. We read of George Fox's deep travail of soul day and night that he might bear testimony to that inward light which had swallowed up the ocean of darkness and death. In his General Epistle to Friends at the Yearly Meeting in London in 1676, he writes:

"The Lord God Almighty keep you, and preserve you all in his power, light and life, over death and darkness; that therein you may spread his truth abroad, and be valiant for it upon the earth, answering that of God in all; that with it the minds of the people may be turned to him, so that with it they may come to know the Lord Jesus Christ in the new covenant in which the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea."

Moorestown, N. J.

The Other Side of a Man's Religion

By GERVAS A. CAREY

In much of the popular religious discussion of the day but one side of the subject is recognized. We hear a great deal said about man's religious nature and desires, his religious alignment, his religious activity development and attainment, until a Friend at least is justified in asking for a hearing on the other side of a man's religion.

The following definition of religion in its most general meaning is one that may be understood easily by the practical mind, and it will serve as a starting point for our consideration. "Religion may be defined as a man's consciousness of relation to a realm of being beyond the reach of human senses, and the expression of this consciousness in worship, customs, rites, institutions and personal conduct."

It occurs to me that the other side of a man's religion, where that religion is Christianity, is the side of God, the side of Divine manifestation. Revelation unveils to our consciousness the realm beyond the reach of human senses, and in this otherwise unknowable realm we are brought into the presence of a personal God made manifest in Jesus Christ and today aggressively active in the person of the Holy Spirit. Man does not align himself with an abstract principle, nor does he rise by the development of any native goodness; through faith in Jesus Christ he is adopted into the family of God, a personal and loving Father. Man's attitude toward God finds its response in a definite interposition of Divine activity.

Thus vital religion cannot be a matter involving man and his attitude alone. It involves God, and an attitude of God, the disregard of which makes futile any activity of man toward the realization of righteousness. This is elementary Christian philosophy, yet there are all too many to whom the personal Divine manifestation is unknown, unheard of by some, while considered merely a neurotic illusion by others. In spite of the confessed ignorance of these masses still the fact of God's visitation remains as there are many who can knowingly testify that He has appeared unto them.

Man's primary consciousness of his relation to a realm beyond the reach of human senses was termed the "Inward Light" by the early Friends. This is no other than the universal manifestation of God as declared by the Apostle John, "There was the true light, even the light which lighteth every man, coming into the world." God has bestowed upon man this religious consciousness as a universal gift of Divine favor, yet man, in his self-will, frequently prides himself upon the belief that he has discovered God by the brilliancy and penetration of his own intellect. William Penn states, "By this principle they understand something that is Divine, and though in man, not of man, but of God; it came from him, and leads to him all those that will be led by it." The position of our church upon the subject is set forth in the Declaration of Faith, "We own no principle of spiritual light, life, or holiness, inherent by nature in the mind or heart of man. We believe in no principle of spiritual light or holiness, but the influence of the Holy Spirit of God, bestowed on mankind, in various measures and degrees, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

It will be noticed that while the latter quotation undoubtedly refers to the universal impartation of light, it includes also the operation of the Holy Spirit in his more specific visitation to the individual. Christ stated of the Comforter, the Holy Spirit: "And he, when he is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." To those who have experienced deep conviction it is very clear that the Spirit of God strives with the sinner. Social pressure may produce remorse, and the psychologist is no doubt correct in attributing some "so-called" conviction to the suggestive influence of the crowd, yet neither of these causes is to be confused with that visitation of the Spirit of God which produces the godly sorrow referred to by Paul: "For godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation, a repentance which bringeth no regret."

In the next place, should anyone suppose that God would be thus active in the quest of men and then leave them to their own devices? The writer once heard a minister state in the pulpit that the leadership of the Holy Spirit is no more than the exercise of common sense and good judgment. Certainly such a declaration can have no weight beyond that of a negative testimony concerning a fact of which the speaker admitted his own ignorance. To offset this there may be produced the positive experience of many a Spirit-led life that has been directed mysteriously, yet most certainly, in ways that neither common sense nor good judgment would have suggested. This is in accord with the specific promise of Christ to his disciples.

The ideal human relationship of father and child is that of companionship. So it is with our heavenly Father and his children in Christian experience. The expediency of Christ's going away was based upon the coming of God in the person of the Holy Spirit to convict, guide into all truth, and to glorify Christ by declaring unto men the things of the Son. This fellowship with the Holy Spirit is a closer one than was possible with Jesus in his physical limitations.

The Christian religion is vital because of the life-giving grace of God, while the truly victorious Christian life can be known only through the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit. From this viewpoint it appears that the other side of a man's religion is the all-important side, the one worthy of first consideration since we are wholly dependent upon the unmerited favor of God. "And they that heard it said, Then who can be saved? But he said, the things which are impossible with men are possible with God." Paul said, "—it is no longer I that live, but Christ liveth in me: and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself up for me."

Let us give due recognition to the human responsibility of yielding to God and of co-operating with the Holy Spirit, but at the same time we need to pray for a greater manifestation of Divine activity in our midst. As for our religion, may it savor less of self and reflect more of God.

Clothes

By L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD.

The clothing of the Society of Friends has been of great help to the cartoonist and story-teller but has probably not been of much financial assistance to any one else. An established reputation for reliability and simplicity, though not lived up to by every member has still preserved Friends generally from the oppressive attention to apparel. The story of the horse trader to whom the Friend had sold a horse, who finding the animal unsatisfactory returned, saying, "I don't want you to take him back. I want you to lend me your coat so that I can sell him," is an example of the story teller's license with the Quaker garb.

We of the younger generation may smile as we look at the pictures of the old Quaker gatherings, but if we as children ever sat in meeting with the tranquil face of a loved aunt or grandmother framed in a plain bonnet looking down on us from the facing seat there will be associated with the odd garb a sort of odor of sanctity which even a raid upon the garret for play purposes will hardly be able to dispel. As we think of the lives which were lived more carefully than the clothes were cut, we come nearer to the reason for this feeling, a sense of the lining—silver lining, of the cloud, perhaps, comes to us out of the past.

Is there any theory or principle about clothes, or do they just represent the fancy or fad of the individual or the burden imposed by surrounding society? Why have Friends dressed in grey and refused to wear mourning or bow to the dictates of fashion in its myriad forms of expression?

George Fox is said to have worn a suit of leather. So did the Indians, and buckskin breeches and boots are still common in horse-loving England. At one time Fox mentions the respect which was paid to his fine linen, and at another buying red cloth for a cloak for his wife. Nice, intimate human touches in the life of this extraordinary man. His answer to William Penn when asked about wearing a sword, that dress sign of a gentleman, "wear it as long as thou canst," was full of both gentleness and strength, and when we think of the struggle between "round head," i. e., close shorn locks and "cavalier," with long curls or wigs and the austerity and license for which these things stood, the reply shows a most remarkable broadness of mind in George Fox's attitude toward dress.

The triumphant belief in the spiritual life and its victory over death and the grave, the regarding of death as but the portal to a fuller realization of spiritual life, and the divine purposes, made mourning-weeds seem to Friends an hypocrisy and in their frank and intimate relations no display of a signal of bereavement was needed to prevent awkward inquiries.

When a testimony against the use of slave labor made Friends avoid blue clothes because the blue dyes were derived from indigo grown under hideous conditions of slave treatment, and when delightful extremists in cleanliness and Godliness like John Woolman would not wear clothes which were dyed at all because they covered up dirt and dust, we see some reasons for the so-called peculiarities of Friends' clothes.

Certainly today we all yearn for more such devotion to principle as the earlier Friends exemplified. Have we a reason for the faith that is in us, and can we give it in word and in life? is the question of the young Friend. Certainly we revolt at the attitude toward dress which would reduce the individual to a form or clothes rack on which to hang our signs of individual expression when we put on the garments in which we choose to dress. Everyone recognizes that a certain elegance and spirituality of bearing seems to lend an elegance to the clothes which are worn and it is quite possible for beauty of spirit to triumph over ugly features and ill-fitting and tasteless clothes till all becomes beautiful.

That grace and easiness which inconspicuousness in dress which is often appropriateness gives is desirable we will all grant, and I, at least, believe that the attainment of neatness and charm and tastefulness in dress is worthy of thought and effort. How, then, is this to be attained??

Has it fled with the composure of the plain bonneted face, or can an unruffled spirit still protect us from an over-ruffled gown or shirt, or the sword of William Penn's day? Will the woman Friend who expressed herself of a visiting Friend that "she evidently does not think much of us or our meeting, as she only brought her old clothes," be convinced that man's looking at the outward appearance is not the spiritual life in abundance?

But how attack the problem of dress? For it is a problem. The same amount of time and money or thought expended by one person produces not only simplicity and suitableness, but also charm and restfulness while in another all seems to be wasted. In the family, if one person has taste and judgment it should be at the disposal of the other members. In the human family, as we approach the relations of a happy family, we begin to arrive in civilization.

Does a meeting's committee on clothes make us smile? Yes, But think of the perfectly useless committees we do have. And there is a serious side to all this in our present-day congested life. We can get our clothes too cheap in dollars and too dear in lives, as witness this poem, published in the Survey for July 17, 1915. Are we sure we are not abetting the sweat shops? How about the old Friends' testimony against slave labor? Can we not watch it today?

"The Garment"

By LYMAN BRYSON.

(Reprinted from the Poetry Journal.)

'Tis I who ask forgiveness, I, who bought
The garment when I did not know
That its maker hungered as he wrought,
And patterned it with sweat marks in a row,
And fought
The little mists of red, that come and go.

Little mists of red in blistered eyes
That never close for rest or sleep
Save when despair its heavy menace lies,
And palsies of exhaustion onward creep
And dies
The haggard will, that this last watch would keep.

No better word of mine no burning deed,
Had ever helped him face this woe,
I had been all oblivious to his need
I had not seen his weary hands move slow,
And bleed
With needle stabs, as they sagged to and fro.

And still I wore as decent, Sunday best,
My brother's handiwork of pain;
While his wan soul a stranger was to rest,
And his heart's blood a futile sop for gain.
Confessed—
My late repentance shall not be in vain.

Message From The Federal Council

A Second Message to the Churches:

The response to the War Relief message of the Federal Council has been immediate and promising. The movement has received the warm approval of the constituent denominations of the Council recently assembled.

Please bear in mind that this is a continuous campaign until all of our people have been reached, and so long as the suffering in Europe continues its appeal to us.

We earnestly offer the following suggestions:

1. Appoint a committee of your church to develop a continuous interest in the movement.
2. Consult with other pastors and laymen and secure the appointment of a community committee for continuous service.
3. Make special appeals in behalf of the suffering children of Europe to the Sunday School children, the young people, and the day school children.
4. Organize interest through other groups and organizations in the church and in the community.
5. Give one immediate special Sunday to a presentation of this great cause, unless you have already done so, and in this connection we would suggest Citizenship Sunday, July 2, as a suitable opportunity.
6. Interview people of means for substantial contributions.

Correspondence directly from Europe and through the war relief organizations indicates that the needs of our brothers and sisters are constantly increasing and we shall soon issue another statement both of these needs and of the response to the Federal Council message.

The original message, which has been found very effective in distribution, may be obtained at the cost of printing ($5.00 per hundred), and we earnestly advise pastors and committees to distribute it in their various communities.

No united movement of the churches has met with more immediate sympathy and no movement would be more far-reaching in moral and spiritual influence than this united effort of our Christian churches to extend a hand of Christian love and sympathy to the people across the sea.

For the Federal Council,

(Signed) SHAILER MATHEWS,
President.
(Signed) FRANK MASON NORTH,
Chairman of the Executive Committee.
(Signed) CHARLES S. McFARLAND,
General Secretary.

An Appeal To Friends

(The following signed statement is self explanatory. In connection therewith, it should be said that a concern arose for the preparation of a program of operations that would be adequate for the needs of the whole church, and which would set certain standards or goals as a means of inspiration to the whole body. This matter is in process of consideration and will be referred to later.—The Editor.)

We, whose names are given below, having attended the Laymen's Missionary Congress held in Washington, D. C., the last week in April, are impressed with the tremendous challenge facing the church in America, which is now the only great power able to help to the full in meeting the world's needs, because of the following considerations, so forcibly presented at the Congress.

1. The havoc wrought by the great war:

(a) In the destruction of millions of Europe's best men;

(b) In the devastation of cities, towns and open country;

(c) In the wasting of the resources of these foremost nations of the world;

(d) In the burdens that will have to be carried by those peoples in the debt and consequent taxes because of the war, and the added burden of caring for millions of crippled and deformed men;

(e) In the crushing problems of reconstruction that must follow the end of the war, in which all the world will be involved.

2. The call of the awakened peoples of the non-Christian world, as manifested:

(a) In the great mass movements of Asiatic countries;

(b) In the turning of the educated classes in the far East to open-hearted investigation of Christianity as their only hope, because of the acknowledged failure of the old religions, and the moral crisis involved in the rapid transition from old ideas to new;

(c) In the recent breaking up of the material power of the Moslem world, and the consequent opening of their millions to gospel teaching;

(d) In the six thousand students of these lands of the East, now in our colleges and universities, who will soon be the leaders in those great nations, and who are now receiving their impressions of Christianity from their contact with us.

3. The crisis in the so-called Christian world:

(a) In the breakdown of civilization in the nations at war in Europe;

(b) In the relapse of the twenty-one nations of Latin-America into agnosticism and infidelity;

(c) The danger that our own country may lose her place of leadership of the world to the noblest standards of righteousness, if we lose our faith in the power of moral and spiritual forces, and give way to a dependence on purely physical power, which has proved its impotence in the struggle in Europe.

We are further impressed with the importance of Friends throughout America being aroused to take their rightful place alongside the other denominations, in bringing the constructive power of Christian faith, and the manifestation of Christian sympathy to the uplift of the suffering peoples crushed under the shock of war, and the races awakening out of the darkness of paganism to the light of the gospel of Christ. We greatly fear the loss of the blessings we now enjoy if we fail to obey the evident call of God to go forth in His power to the help of these suffering and awakening peoples.

We, therefore, urge Friends—

1. To an earnest study of the issues involved in the present world situation, and our own duty in the face of the world's needs;

2. To a deeper and more intelligent prayer life, in the private closet, at the family altar, and in our public meetings;

3. To a clear recognition of God's ownership of all that we possess, and our own place as stewards responsible to Him for its use;

4. To an enlistment of each one in the service of our King as whole-hearted and without reserve as that of the men of today to earthly powers;

5. To higher standards of Christian living and service for humanity, both in our own communities and to the peoples far away;

6. To separation from everything that makes our power of service less than it ought to be, and a complete surrender to the leadership of the Spirit of God, in this time of opportunity and peril.

Something to Remember.

I have been seated in parlors when secretly my heart ached. I looked into a face that was fair and untouched by the trace of care. Her soft hands would never lose their snowy whiteness because of toil, and I knew it. And then I heard the foot-fall of the mother performing the drudgery of the back room. It set my thoughts a-going. Our girls are losing the art of "remembering mother." This old world is full of mothers who are laboring and loving unto death. It's a shame and bodes no good. I just can't respect the girl who consents to let her mother wash the dishes while she entertains some hair-brained fop who would do well to draw a salary of $30 per month. Society of that sort is never made up right. Every day in this old world some household martyr folds her nerveless hands for the last, long rest. No more will the mother heart be responsive to the needs of one so dear to her. Every day pilgrim shoes are loosened from tired feet all too early given out. Every day the shadows gather in homes that might have otherwise been glad and cheery if only somebody had thought—and thought soon enough.—Nicholas.

a universal patronage for the sake of the personal benefit and profit which will be gained from reading its pages week after week.

Instead of having something fewer than 6,000 subscribers we ought to have from 10,000 to 12,000 subscribers, and these can be secured, if in every meeting pastors and others interested, together with young Friends, will enter upon a serious educational propaganda to bring all Friends' families face to face with their responsibility toward their church periodical.

Please remember that the special offer is still open under which new trial subscriptions can be taken at fifty cents for six months, and in order to make it possible to secure results under this offer we extend the time to August 1st, during which period this offer is open.

STUDY CLASS.

VI.—Method of Holding Session.

5.—Interest is often stimulated by the leader playing the part of a disinterested church member who is open to conviction. The class should win him.

6.—Sometimes the evening is spent in debating the question with teams of three each. The remainder of the class are either equally divided for the discussion that follows or act as judges in the contest.

7.—The leader should summarize the discussions with the class.

8.—The lesson for the next week should be assigned so as to awaken interest in the coming discussion.

9.—Close the meeting in a devotional spirit. This may be done to suit the meeting. Bible reading and silence, or Bible reading and prayer have been used most effectually.

IN OUR MAIL BOX.

From Philadelphia.

"The Round Table was the most successful thing of the kind ever started here, and they want it all next winter. We only had ten meetings this year, with an average attendance of eighteen. There were forty-six on the roll. Next Third day we have a camp supper for it, to leave a lasting impression. We are planning to walk about three miles to "Pink Hill," a bank covered with mountain pink, and have a bacon bat supper. The older Friends have been so pleased with our Young Friends Movement that they have made three of the more settled young people overseers. The Tramp last First day was just splendid. There were eight trampers and we were rather glad to have a few to start on. This week we hope to have quite a crowd and if necessary go to several places. We are very anxious not to go in a large group to any place. We all went to Merion on the 30th, and there were three sermons all on breaking down barriers and that all men were equal, and as we were Orthodox visiting a Hicksite Meeting it was most impressive."

Toronto, Canada.

"Our Adult School men entertain the women and their friends once every year by giving them a tea followed by a concert, which the men themselves give. This event occurred only a few weeks ago and was very successful. The men served tea to over a hundred guests."

MY VIEW OF QUAKERISM.

By Thomas R. Kelly.

"As far as Quakerism goes, I am more enthusiastic than last year, for I have more ground for conviction along that line. I am convinced that it is possible that the spirit of the times of the apostles, and of the early Friends be re-enacted, not in imitation of those times, but in a spontaneous manner and along 20th century lines. Now I am not quite sure that this generation will see the time, but I am going to work on that hypothesis and am going to set about to do my share in bringing it about.

The thing can start in one Yearly Meeting as well as in an other, and the secret is found in a group of people whose lives are filled, clear to the top, with the Spirit of Jesus, and whose possibilities have been awakened and developed by education. My, why have we slept so long! Has faith in the power of a live God become so commonplace an idea that no one tries it? Our young people must develop among themselves some men and women of spiritual genius, some who are willing to go the whole way, who will make a real resolve to know God as intimately as any human being has ever known Him.

There are depths of spiritual life which we have never reached, but which are intended for all men who make Jesus Christ the passion of their lives. This, it seems to me, must be the holy enthusiasm which prompts our actions, not any superficial zeal for Quakerism, as such. We must live in the spirit of the prophets, when we cry out involuntarily, 'My heart yearns for the living God.' There are many Friends I know, whose lives appear that way to me, and they are the ones who stimulate me most.

So, to my mind, the business of the whole church is to develop such men, or to furnish the atmosphere in which they can develop. All our Christian Endeavor Societies, Quaker Study Circles, Peace Study, Gospel Teams, and prayer meetings should be means to this end, of awakening in ourselves our own possibilities, and so developing lives which preach Jesus every time they are seen or thought of. We must all bow in the dust, and become as nothing, in order that this supreme gift be ours, that Christ live in us."

FRIENDS IN IDAHO.

By Thomas E. Jones.

In the northwestern corner of the United States beyond the sand-swept plains of southern Wyoming, lies a frontier district that is largely occupied by Friends. Although a few towns and one fair sized city have existed in this section for nearly fifty years, the rural districts have not been settled until during the last decade. Since the Government of the United States has assisted the farmers in building large irrigation canals from the Snake and Boise rivers, wide tracts of sage-covered sand have been converted into the most fertile farms.

It is remarkable how quickly the transformation takes place. Fields that two years ago were absolutely worthless are now covered with crops of alfalfa, oats, and wheat that surpass the best yield for farms in the middle west. The country everywhere testifies to optimism, vision and hope. The spirit of adventure has not left the settlers. They are looking for new methods as well as new lands. They want the best farming appliances, best highway projects, most modern school system and the most up-to-date church plans.

Seven miles from Caldwell, a station on the Union Pacific railway, is the largest Friends Meeting of this section. It is called Greenleaf because of a group of green bushes which, at the time of the first settlers, stood alone in the midst of a sandy waste.

It is located on what is called the "bench," a low plateau that slopes off on one side to the Snake river valley and on the other to the alkalai flats, which in turn slope to the Boise valley. In the center of the whole community stands the Friends Meeting House and Academy. Both are plain frame structures. The School House has a belfry but true to Friends custom, the Meeting House is a simple rectangular building with little to attract attention to the external. The school will accommodate 74 pupils and it is usually filled to its capacity. The meeting house will seat 250, and every seat is taken on Sunday mornings and usually on Sunday evenings. Even on Thursday nights, farmers, though tired with their strenuous labor on the frontier, drive three and four miles to prayer meeting. I was told that it was not unusual to have two hundred people at these services.

What is the cause of this remarkable attendance, you ask. No one at the Meeting seems able to answer. They simply say, "Each man does his part, and it is our meeting, you know, so we are all expected to keep it up and we rather like to do it." Yet as in all Meetings, when one goes behind the scenes he finds two or three who are quietly working out new plans and leading the congregation into fresh fields of experience. The plan of this group is to make the Meeting rest in equal responsibility upon every attendant, to make it the center of the entire community. It must look after the financial, intellectual, social and religious life of the place.

There are no "movies" and no one wants any, because the intellectual life is looked after; there are no dances, or card parties, because the social life is cared for; there is no need for a grange because the community is banded together in the interests of good farming as closely as any grange, and there is no need for a strongly pastoral preaching service because every one expects to take part as the Spirit directs. They sit down in full expectation that God will use them as His instrument that day. So there are no long dead silences although there are times when the quiet is too sacred to break.

I would not bear the impression that this meeting does not have a regular preacher, because it does. But this preacher does not always preach. He waits for a message. Furthermore, the pastor is a farmer with the rest of the homesteaders. He took a claim as they, and has cleared it. If anyone puts up the excuse that they are too tired to attend prayer meeting he gently reminds them that he too is tired. This is sufficient to stimulate attendance.

During the last year or two a slight falling off of interest in the above matter, has given several Friends considerable concern. This seems due to the fact that as the country grows older, the population larger, and the home duties more taxing, church interest lags. The Christian Endeavor Society, which is composed of sixty-seven wide awake young people, is now planning to undertake some more social activities for its constituents. This phase of the work has been practically neglected heretofore. The one interest has been a powerful evangelistic concern for all. While this will not be minimized in the future the side that has been ignored will be given more consideration. I have great hopes for a strong church at Greenleaf.

tion situated in the northwestern section of the city. Its members are made up for the most part from the common class of people, who are devout followers of Christ, but do not have large bank accounts. Consequently the meeting house is small and needs new window lights and fresh paint. The one assembly room has been divided into Sunday School rooms by curtains, which answer the purpose of their desire very well. The Christian Endeavor is composed of about sixteen members, all of whom are consecrated reliable young people. Many of these do not know why they are Friends, but they are interested and are beginning to study the question.

The President for next year is a wide awake young Friend who is co-operating with the Young Friends Board in bringing new life to the Meeting. I am told that the Christian Endeavor Society at Star Meeting which is some 35 miles west of Boise, is in good condition and that the Meeting has a bright future. As I did not visit this body I cannot tell any more in detail. Another Friends congregation at Woodland seventy miles north of Boise presents a promising work for our Society. There are plans on foot to establish one or two other Meetings in this valley. These promise well, because homesteaders are continually coming and settlers are bringing their parents and families west.

If the young people of this valley can be challenged and inspired with the message of Friends, this whole country can be impressed mightily for God. If our ideals are to be scattered, now is the time to act. We need college men and women willing to tackle a hard task, who will come into this country and spend their lives working up this field. This must be supplemented by men willing to give funds to this work. The former can be gotten if any assurance can be given that the latter will be forthcoming. We must have funds to develop this country.

Real believers are always thinking they believe not, therefore, they are fighting, wrestling, striving and toiling without ceasing, to preserve and increase their faith; just as good and skillful masters of any art are always seeing and observing that something is lacking in their work, whilst bunglers and pretenders persuade themselves that all they make and do is quite perfect.—Sayle.

THE IOWA PAGE

A CRISIS AT PENN.

The burning of the main building of Penn College is not an item of news to anyone at this time, and it is not the purpose of this article to merely give the details of this great calamity which befell the institution on the morning of May 27th.

take that much money to erect buildings which will care for the work as efficiently as did the old building.

On account of these things it has become necessary for us to extend our appeal to Friends everywhere. Application has been made to the Education Board of the Five Years Meeting for permission to solicit funds from Friends in every part of the country. While permission has not tant between Earlham College on the east and Friends University and Nebraska Central College on the west. She affords higher educational facilities for a large and important field. The indispensibility of Penn College to Iowa Yearly Meeting is a fact so generally and well known that it only needs to be mentioned.

The situation in which Penn College finds herself is one that challenges the attention and tests the loyalty and devotion of every Friend. It is absolutely necessary to succeed in the financial undertaking in which the management of the college is now engaged. If, upon the first of August, we fail to secure the $400,000, the closing of the doors of Penn College will doubtless result, for no one can suggest how the college can continue without this undertaking being successful. Also it will be necessary to proceed at once after the 1st of August with the erection of two buildings—a recitation building and a science building.

The purpose of this statement, therefore, is to appeal to every Friend of Penn College to give this matter most serious consideration and be ready to contribute in as large and generous manner as he possibly can when the opportunity is afforded. This is not a time to argue, to talk or to enter into investigations, but it is a

MAIN BUILDING, PENN COLLEGE, BEFORE THE FIRE

It is well known to all by this time that the main building was entirely destroyed by fire and that in the attempt to rescue property two lives, that of Robert H. Williams, Business Manager of the institution, and Harry B. Oakley, a freshman, were lost.

Some two weeks before the fire, a financial campaign for the purpose of raising $400,000 had been launched, August 1st being set as the date upon which the entire amount would be secured—all pledges being taken with the understanding that they should be null and void unless the entire sum was pledged on or before August 1st, 1916. The $400,000 was to be used as follows:

Two hundred and twenty thousand was to be added to the permanent endowment fund, which would increase this fund to a half million dollars; $65,000 was to be used to liquidate an indebtedness and to create a sustaining fund, and the remainder, $115,000, was to be used in the erection of buildings and the improvement of the campus.

The destruction of the building has made it necessary to increase the amount asked for by $100,000, as it will officially been granted, yet expressions from various members of the Board of Education make it evident that this will be forthcoming in the near future.

Penn College occupies a strategic position in the educational system of American Friends, situated equi-dis-time to act. The Friends of Penn College can well afford to pledge all they ever expect to pledge now, for if the entire sum of $400,000 is not secured by the 1st day of August no one will be held to his pledge. If, on the other hand, the campaign is successful, the amount of money secured will place the college in excellent condition.

The value of Penn College to the church is illustrated by one item as follows:

R. H. WILLIAMS,
Business Manager of Penn.

Since the college was opened in the fall of 1873, 51 men out of a total of 281 male graduates, have entered the ministry. Nine women graduates have also entered the ministry. Fourteen out of 82 male college students now in Penn are ministers or are definitely looking forward to the ministry as their life work. Several besides these are preaching regularly and many have not decided on their life work. Five out of nine men in the senior class are ministers, and another is preaching regularly.

H. B. OAKLEY,

This makes two-thirds of the present graduating class engaged in this kind of work. Since 1894 when the first graduate entered the foreign field, nineteen graduates of Penn have become foreign ministers and many others would have gone had the way been opened. Several are now preparing for this work. Many students who have attended Penn, but who have not graduated, have entered the ministry or gone to the foreign field. There are at present eight members of the Volunteer Band.

Thus it can readily be seen that Penn College has rendered and is rendering a remarkable service in educating young men and young women for service in the church. This is but one item among many which might be suggested.

Ninety-eight per cent of the students who come to Penn College and continue for one or more years, leave the institution as active Christians. These enter into various lines of work, introduce into the affairs of life a large and active Christian contingency, which is a power in the world for good.

Let all Friends of the institution read carefully this statement and be ready to act as though their action were to be the salvation of the institution.

LYDIA M. CHASE.

Lydia M. Chase was born at Charlotte, Vermont, August 16, 1823, and died May 25, 1916, at the residence of her son, H. V. Chase, 3004 Askew Ave., Kansas City, Mo., aged 92 years, 9 months, and nine days. She was married to Amasa Chase October 15, 1846, at Dover New Hampshire, where they lived until 1853, when they removed to Oskaloosa, Iowa, remaining there until 1863, when they came to Kansas.

She was a minister in the Friends Church for a little more than fifty years. Most of her work as a minister was among the negroes of the south as a missionary, and later in the temperance work in connection with the W. C. T. U. She served as President of that organization for the state of Arkansas for six years.

As a girl and young woman she lived in the rough mountainous country of New England, and so slow was inter-communication between different parts of the country that when her father died away from home in the State of Pennsylvania, it was three weeks before his family received the notice of his death by mail, and the postage on the letter was eighteen cents. When she and her family moved to Iowa in 1853, the railroad did not come to the Mississippi River by fifty miles. Again, in 1863, when they came to Kansas, there was not a railroad in the state. It was during her active life that the burning question of anti-slavery nearly rent our country assunder, and she knew and felt the bitterness that contest brought on, and when the Civil War came on she lived where homes and towns were burned, men called to their doors and shot down, and the booming of cannon could be plainly heard.

It was also during part of her active life that the church so dear to her—the church of her childhood—was torn to pieces by the two separations that occurred, and she knew and even saw the scenes of violence that occurred even in public meetings, and brought estrangement to families and friends, and hard feelings that were never out-lived. She was present at New England Yearly Meeting when rival clerks contended for their position.

An active interest in all things remained with her and often she would inquire after the condition of her friends, the progress of the war in Europe or the happenings in that unhappy country, Mexico. It was this interest in life that kept her young in spirit and this confidence and trust in an over-ruling Father kept her free from care and anxiety. "She being dead yet speaketh."

"I cannot feel that thou art far,
And when the sunset gates unbar
Shall I not see thee waiting stand,
And white against the evening star
The welcome of thy beckoning hand?"

SUMMER SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The Summer School of Missions will hold its twelfth session at Winona Lake, Indiana, June 23 to June 30, 1916, under the auspices of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West of Missions. Each year this school is increasingly helpful and inspiring, and the committee is using every effort to make the Summer School for 1916 the best that has ever been held.

The fact that the attendance at the Summer School is increasing each year, and that many return year after year, is the strongest proof that the School of Missions fills a need among the host of missionary women in the Central West.

Friends will hold their "Rally" Monday, June 26th. Rosa E. Lee will tell of Friends' work in Ram Allah. Come and meet with us.

CUBAN BOY LIBRARIANS.

A new circulating library has been installed in the Sunday School at Jaruco. Fifty-nine books were borrowed during the first quarter of 1916. Two small boys under the training and supervision of Martha Woody have become very efficient as librarians. They are especially careful to see that books are returned at the proper time. Most of the books are childrens' stories, though Scripture portions are frequently loaned also.

ANTI-ALCOHOLIC LEAGUE AT GIBARA, CUBA.

Recently there has been organized in the town of Gibara a temperance society. This is a new and radical departure for the liquor drinking Latin people. Only those who abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors under all circumstances are admitted as members.

Much attention has been called to the work of the League because it maintains what the people, because of long standing custom, believe to be a revolutionary attitude toward liquor drinking. The local papers are friendly to the League, and much has been accomplished through articles in the press.

One very significant fact connected with the League is that, although it was organized and is being carried on entirely outside the Evangelical Church, yet its leaders are in large part from the church, and men who have in the church received the training that, in a measure, has fitted them for leadership in a moral reform. This is one of the ways in which the Protestant Church is rooting itself in the soil of Cuba.

SYLVESTER JONES.

A CASE OF PERSECUTION IN JAMAICA.

One of the Fellowship School pupils, an East Indian boy of about 13 years of age, the son of heathen parents, has taken a firm, decided stand for Christ.

One Sunday, after Sunday School, he came over to the school room to spend the afternoon. While we were spending a little time reading and talking with him he showed us a burn on his arm. When we asked how he received it, he told us that some men had pushed him against the fire when he refused to bow down to their stone god. As we questioned him further, he told us that his mother had said that if he were going to live with them he must eat food which had been offered to the idol, but he had told her he could not do it. The next morning, the lonely little fellow had come the three miles to Sunday School and then to us. As he finished telling us of it, we bowed together and prayed that he might have courage to follow the light. We then asked him to pray. In a voice that trembled with emotion, he repeated the Lord's prayer. We asked him if he did not want to tell Jesus just how he felt, not try to remember any prayer he had learned. He then prayed earnestly, "I beg you, Jesus, make me a Christian." That night in the Christian Endeavor meeting, he was the first to arise in the testimony meeting, saying in a tone of assurance, "Jesus died for us." He stayed all night, attended school Monday, returning home Monday night.

The next Sunday, he again came to Sunday School, staying for Christian Endeavor and for school Monday. We expected he would then return home as he had on the previous week. Later in the evening we saw him outside. Calling him, we asked if he were not going to return home. He then told us that on the previous week as he went home he had met his father coming after him. He then told his father that he was going to be a Christian. When he reached home, his mother had told him that if he wanted to be a Christian he could go and live with Christian people. When Sunday came and he again started to Sunday School, his father ran after him, but he escaped, running through the banana walk. He told us this only after much questioning and with tears in his eyes. "Miss Sahib," he said, "I don't want to go home. I know if I go home they will make me bow down to that stone god and will make me eat the food they have used in their idol worship." What could we do? We could not send him home when it might mean that he would become discouraged and give up the Christian way. So we told him he could stay with us and perhaps he would soon feel like returning home.

Wednesday evening, the catechist went over to see his parents. They talked freely with him, saying they did not want Pooran to be a Christian for it would make trouble when they returned to India. Finally they said they would not trouble Pooran if he returned home. Pooran did not feel assured when we told him this. He said, "I know they just say that. Plenty times they say that. I know they will make me bow down to that god and they will not let me come to Sunday School." But when an Indian woman called at the school house the next day and told him he must go home for his mother had been crying for him all day, tears filled his eyes and he said, "I'll go home tonight." Our hearts ached as we saw him go and prayer continually arose from our hearts that he might be true. The next morning we learned that his parents had not kept their promise to the catechist. But more severe persecution awaited this young disciple of Christ. On the following day his father and mother came after him and drove him back home, whipping and threatening him all the way. His mother especially seemed very angry, telling Pooran if he came to Sunday School again she would cut his throat. At home he was tied in the house. How early was this young life learning "He that would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me!" We prayed that the cross might not be too heavy.

Two days passed and we saw nothing of him, but early the next morning we heard a joyous voice saying, "Salaam, Miss Sahib." Looking up we saw Pooran with victory and joy written over his face. He told us that his parents had finally given him permission to attend Sunday School and church services. We could not but exclaim, "God answers prayer." Since that time, Pooran has attended school and Sunday School regularly. While he still receives some persecution from the Indians of his barrack, we have every reason to believe he is standing true. Pray that his father and mother may turn from their idols to our Heavenly Father and theirs.

LORA ARMS.

What the Church needs today is a sense of the immanence of God. This secular age has so far secularized the Church that in some places it has almost lost the fear of God.—Midland Methodist.

DAVID WORTH DENNIS.

By Edwin Morrison.

David Worth Dennis, son of Nathan and Evelina Worth Dennis, was born on a farm in Dalton Township, Wayne County, Indiana, April 8, 1849. He was educated in the common schools, and in 1866, at the age of seventeen, he taught his first school, two miles south of the Poplar Run meeting house, near Farmland, Indiana. He occupied himself in teaching in the common schools of Randolph and Wayne Counties from 1866 to 1868. In the spring of 1868 he attended Spiceland Academy for three months. In the fall he became principal of the school at Greensboro. After the Christmas vacation in 1870 he entered Earlham College and alternated between attendance there and teaching at Greensboro until his graduation from the college in 1873.

In the autumn of 1873 he returned to Earlham as governor and instructor in chemistry, remaining in this capacity until 1875. During that summer he taught in a normal school at Bloomington, Indiana, together with Martha Ann Curl, who became his wife in June 1876. Their son, William Cullen Dennis, was born in December 1878. Martha Curl Dennis died in 1897. In June 1900 Professor Dennis was united in marriage with Emma Zeller, of Richmond, who survives him.

In the fall of 1875 he was elected to the position of teacher in natural science in the Richmond High School, where he remained until 1879, when he became president of Wilmington College. He guided the affairs of this institution for two years. At the close of this time he felt that he must take a year's rest from teaching and he spent the year in the law office of Mr. Charles H. Burchenal at Richmond, Indiana. He never had serious intentions of abandoning teaching for the practice of law, but he knew how to make the year's experience yield a rich tribute to his own chosen work. In September 1882 he took charge of Bloomington Academy, where he remained until he was offered a professorship in Earlham College in 1884, which position he held until the close of his life, May 13, 1916.

"He never changed his place of work except at his own motion, and every position he ever held sought his services."

During the years he spent at Earlham College he traveled widely for study and recreation. The school year, 1889-90, he was on leave of absence in Europe, studying in two German Universities, and the University of Edinburg. Other trips took him to the Rocky Mountains, the Pacific Coast, the Grand Canyon, Florida and the Panama Canal.

Prof. Dennis was a birthright member of the Friends church. He was also a Fellow in the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a Fellow of the Indiana Academy of Science, and president of the same in 1901, a member of the Indiana Association of Science, and president of the same in 1898. He was a member of the Richmond Tuesday Club as long as that organization had an existence, and was also a member of the Tourist Club of Richmond. He was the author of the following publications: "A Key to the Fossils of Richmond, Ind."; "A Qualitative Chemical Analysis"; "Nature Study or One Hundred Lessons About Plants" and numerous scientific articles and abstracts which were published in the proceedings of the Indiana Academy of Science and scientific and botanical journals.

I have been asked to say a word regarding Prof. Dennis' choice of incineration. I cannot express this in more fitting words than to quote from his own words when he was asked to perform a similar task at the memorial service held in this room some years ago for President Joseph Moore. The words then uttered expressed his own conviction regarding the matter as well as that of President Moore. And the years since have only strengthened Prof. Dennis in his conviction. On that occasion he said: "It does not need to be justified, I am sure. He knew from the plainest scientific evidence that if all the bodies of the dead were cremated in Indiana for the next 50 years, vast suffering would be saved to the living. This was enough. It became his duty and he was not the man to flinch. It was his last service to the world." In the words of Francis E. Willard, Prof. Dennis said: "The fact that the popular mind has not come to this decision renders it all the more my duty, who have seen the light, to stand for it in death." To quote again: "The grave has been hallowed by 2000 years of poetry." We have all heard of the "Beauty of decay

As clouds assume a brighter tint around the dying day."

and

"The low green tent

Whose curtain never outward swings,"

of "The clods of the valley," and "The mouldering earth." "Earth to earth and dust to dust" was in our school books, and "Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return" is in our Book of books. Prof. Dennis' "poetical turn of mind enabled him to really surround cremation with all the sentiment that the future is sure to weave about it. The fires are to become purifying and refining fires. The urn will come to stand for all for which the grave now stands."

As a scientist Professor Dennis is regarded as one of the greatest of the Indiana group, and he has exerted a wide and powerful influence upon the scientific spirit and methods of the country, both by his teaching and by his intercourse with scientific men. As proof of this I need only cite the fact that he was one of the first in America to introduce the so-called modern laboratory methods in both chemistry and biology. The first biological laboratory in the state of Indiana and one of the first in the country where the microscope was placed in the hands of the student was equipped by Prof. Dennis in the basement of the west wing of Earlham Hall, and those of us who were members of his first class will ever honor and hold in precious memory the one who as a pioneer in a new continent guided us into this new and heretofore unseen world.

In conclusion I wish to say that I have known Prof. Dennis for thirty-four years. During these years I have known him as teacher, comrade, friend, colleague and neighbor. And in all of these relations I have nothing but the most pleasant and helpful memories. I am glad to attribute to his life, outside that which was done for me by my parents, the greatest human source of inspiration and ambition that came to me in young manhood. Prof. Dennis touched my life as well as that of hundreds of other young lives at a time when they needed a quickening and stimulating power, and true to those characteristics which we all knew so well, his spirit and enthusiasm caught fire in our own lives.

As a scientist Prof. Dennis revealed his true greatness as a teacher and interpreter of nature. To him nature was a great mechanism, a poem, a picture, to be studied, dissected and built together again, until harmony, beauty and useful laws became a concrete part of his own being.

CHURCH AT WORK

Sedley, Va.—Virginia Quarterly Meeting was held here May 20-22. Visiting ministers were Elbert Russell and L. Oscar Moon of Baltimore, Annie D. Stabler of Washington, D. C., and S. Adelbert Wood of Piney Woods, N. C. Other visitors in attendance were Louisa T. Brooke from Ashton, Maryland, Mabel Trueblood from Salem, Indiana, and Albert and W. J. Brown from Cedar Grove, N. C. The helpful ministry of Prof. Russell is deserving of special mention, because of its clearness, simplicity, beauty and convincing power. On Sabbath morning he spoke on "Going the Second Mile," which was a strong call to live out the deep truths taught by Jesus Christ. His message in the afternoon given in the open air in the grove to a great crowd was a warning against committing sin, showing how repentance and forgiveness do not alter physical infirmities caused by sinful indulgence. It was a strong protest against sowing wild oats, and was good seed sown, we trust, upon soil prepared.

S. Adelbert Wood also created in his hearers, in more than one address, the desire to do better work for the extension of Christ's Kingdom. In one of his talks he warned his hearers against following customs and forms, and said: "The worship of custom is idolatry." The attendance was good at all sessions and the crowd on the Sabbath was great, but splendid order was observed and the religious feature was made prominent, all having the opportunity to hear the gospel.

Hargrave, Kansas—Sterling Quarterly Meeting was held here May 27 and 28. No visiting ministers being present the gospel was preached with power by our own ministers. Brother Starkey, pastor at Sterling Meeting, has recently come into the Quarterly Meeting and preached both Saturday night and on Sabbath morning. His services were very helpful and edifying.

Haviland, Kansas—Educational matters at this place under the supervision of Friends are in a wholesome condition. The academy board decided a few days ago to erect a new brick structure of modern style and equip it with modern furnishings, including a gymnasium and large audience room. It is the intention of the board to make this institution superior in its usefulness and its scope of instruction. It has already earned an excellent reputation for efficiency. Persons wishing to obtain a good education where the moral atmosphere is pure can do no better than to patronize Haviland Friends Academy. It is the intention to raise a large endowment fund. The board appointed Nereus H. Mendenhall field soliciting agent and he will work on the lecture platform for a while in the interests of the academy. He has already received some contributions from points in Indiana, from Washington, D. C., Springfield, N. C., and Baltimore. Our church activities here are in a wholesome condition.

Clinton Corners, N. Y.—The new church building at Clinton Corners was dedicated on Sunday afternoon, June 4. James Wood, clerk of the Yearly Meeting, made the principal address, while Errol D. Peckham and Lindley Stevens spoke on the subjects, "Our Church, Past and Present" and "The Future Church or Our Young People." Albert Shepard of Glens Falls then made the appeal for money to which there was a liberal response. Music was furnished by the choir, while Mrs. Scantleberry of Brooklyn rendered a beautiful solo and Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Tulleur, choir directors, sang a duet. At the close of the service Herbert L. Huffman, pastor of the meeting, who has been very ill for a number of months, and was able to remain only for the day, made a brief address.

The new building has been erected in front of the old one and is very beautiful in its combination of shingles and cobble stones. The old building will now be thoroughly equipped as a gymnasium and will also be used for all social purposes. We are glad to say that the pastor is slowly improving and we are hoping that he may be able to take up his work with us again.

South Glens Falls, N. Y.—This meeting was favored with the presence of Edgar T. Hole on the evening of June 9. His message was in the form of a review of Friends' activities in the mission stations which he visited on his return to this country. They were India, China and Japan, and in telling about them he emphasized the thought of love as predominate above all else to accomplish the will and purpose of God. He then gave us the picture of his own work in Africa which stirred the hearts, and made us wonder why so many cannot believe in foreign missions, when there are such opportunities of telling the gospel story.

Belvidere, N. C.—Eastern Quarterly Meeting was held near Belvidere May 26-28. Dr. Sylvester Newlin, pastor of High Point meeting, was present and gave helpful and inspiring messages at all the sessions. The weather throughout was ideal and on Sabbath the house could not accommodate those in attendance. Dr. Newlin spoke from the text "What is that in thy hand? And he said, a rod." God can use the weakest instrument to accomplish his mightiest ends. Two evening meetings were held in the auditorium of the school building in Belvidere and there was a meeting on Sabbath afternoon at the Up River church.

Bloomington, Ind.—Howard Brown, pastor at Westfield, Ind., recently gave here a most instructive lecture on "War Against War," using the stereopticon to illustrate his theme. His arguments were convincing, and we feel his address did much real good in strengthening opposition to the present policy of military preparedness. Our meeting has observed Parents' Day, and Temperance Day, with appropriate exercises, and inspiring messages from the pulpit, by our pastors, George H. and Jane D. H. Moore. Both days were made impressive by special floral decorations and music.

NEWS NOTES.

Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin visited Sunderland, England, on May 18 and gave an account of his visit to the United States last fall in the interests of peace.

Dublin Yearly Meeting, which postponed its sessions on account of the riots in Ireland, was announced to begin its sessions on June 1, the meeting on ministry and oversight being held on the preceding day.

We note with regret the voluntary retirement of F. T. Tagg from the editorial management of the "Methodist Protestant" after twenty-five years of continuous service. Dr. Tagg is one of the leading men of his denomination.

The famous Swarthmore lecture of England was given this year by Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, well known to American Friends. His subject was "The Missionary Spirit and the Present Opportunity." The lecture has been put in pamphlet form and is sold by Headley Brothers at one shilling net.

Septimus Marten of England, who in company with M. Catharine Albright and Lettice Jowett, also of England, has been visiting a number of American Friends meetings in the behalf of the relief work which English Friends are doing for those who are suffering on account of the war, has gone to join his wife at Pasadena, California, where they are to make their future home.

From the London Friend we note that Anna B. Thomas was one of twenty-five Friends who met recently in a Retreat at Ingleton, England, arranged by the Northern Friends Peace Board under a concern from Westmorland Quarterly Meeting. The purpose of the gathering was a concern that the Society of Friends might be led to a sense of clearer vision as to the meaning and purpose of God.

Whittier College at its recent commencement conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Charles E. Tebbetts, a former president of the college and in later years Secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions. At the same time the degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Professor William P. Trueblood of Friends University, Wichita, Kansas.

NEW GENERAL SECRETARY.

Richmond, Indiana,
June 12, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

The Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting takes this opportunity of giving information to Friends generally, that one of the important tasks assigned to it by the Five Years Meeting in 1912, namely, the choice of a permanent General Secretary, has just been accomplished.

As is well known the Committee has given much thought and attention to this important matter and soon after it took up the work assigned to it in 1912, it became apparent that the choice of a satisfactory General Secretary would likely consume much time if due care were exercised in the matter. In view of this fact and in view of the additional fact that much work should be done promptly by the Central Office, the Committee secured the services of Dr. Joseph John Mills temporarily, in order that the important interests of the Five Years Meeting might not suffer while the matter of the choice of a permanent Secretary was being considered. Dr. Mills, therefore, assumed the duties of the office with the distinct understanding that he would be ready to do all that he could in the service of the Five Years Meeting, provided he might retain his residence in California; and with the further distinct understanding that he was to be relieved of the work just as soon as the Executive Committee could satisfy itself in regard to a permanent choice for the place.

Within the last few months it has seemed to be clear that Dr. Walter C. Woodward might be a suitable man to call to the place of General Secretary, and the matter has, therefore, been given careful consideration. As a result of correspondence, personal interviews, and finally on the authority of the Executive Committee as a whole, consultation by the Central Committee at a meeting held in Richmond, Indiana, on May 30th, a decision was reached that it would be right to ask Dr. Woodward to undertake the duties of the office. On his part, he has given the matter careful consideration, has accepted the call, and a definite agreement has been concluded between him and the Executive Committee, by the terms of which he will assume the duties of the office January 1, 1917.

For the information of Friends who may not know Dr. Woodward personally, it should perhaps be stated that he is the son of Ezra Woodward, of Newberg, Oregon, and has all his life been a member of the Friends Church. He was graduated at Pacific College and Earlham College, and later entered the graduate school of the University of California, where he specialized in History and Political and Social Science, receiving the degree of Ph. D. in 1910. Since that time he has been a member of the faculty of Earlham College, where he has held a professorship in History and Political Science. He has had a more or less intimate knowledge of the problems confronting Quakerism in five of our Yearly Meetings and possesses a rather wide acquaintance among Friends in America.

As to other important qualifications particularly those of heart and life, it is difficult to speak clearly in a few sentences; but it should at least be said that in these respects he is believed also to possess the qualifications needed for the important post to which he has been called.

The Executive Committee, therefore, feels satisfied that Dr. Woodward is well fitted for the duties he is about to assume; but it seems also appropriate that this additional suggestion should be made, namely, that if the Friends Church in America is to develop under his leadership the greater efficiency which Friends generally believe to be possible, such a result will be brought about only by means of the fullest co-operation from Friends everywhere with the new Secretary in his work.

In thus arranging for the work of the General Secretary to pass to Dr. Woodward, the Executive Committee wishes to express the profound gratitude which its members feel that the Friends Church has, in the very beginning of the work of the Central Office, had the advantage of the rare judgment and distinguished ability of the temporary Secretary, Joseph John Mills. We feel sure that the foundations of the work which the General Secretary is to do have been well laid.

The Committee also wishes to record its sense of gratitude that Earlham College has been willing to allow a strong member of its faculty to leave the institution in order to take up work in the wider field of service for the church as a whole.

On behalf of the Executive Committee,

ALLEN D. HOLE,
Chairman.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

July 2.

Topic—"How to Make Ours an Ideal Nation."—Peter 2:1-10.

The ideal nation is the nation that comes closest to the teachings of Jesus. Ours will be an ideal nation when it is indeed a Christian Nation; not before. When our public schools teach not only morality, but true religion also, not sectarianism, but true religion, when God has the right of way in the hearts and lives of all our leaders and people.

The slogan at the Atlantic City Convention was "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." Slavery is gone. Child-labor is going, and with the passing of the saloon in 1920, our nation will be near its ideal.

What are you doing to bring these things about? Has the Christian any responsibility as a citizen? Christianity has been a great purifying and uplifting force in the social and political life of the world. The high-water mark of national progress is to be found in those lands where the Christian ideal has been most largely realized.

The purpose of Christ includes the realization in this world of the perfect social order of the kingdom of God. The Christian is called to co-operate with Christ in all his work. The social conditions which the Christian seeks to establish must be those of the Kingdom of God. Then there will be an absence of jealousy, and all kindred evils which tend to strife, and consequently there will be the social enrichment which must issue from the abolition of the waste which is inevitable in war.

FRIENDS UNIVERSITY.

At the close of an eventful year, the sixteenth annual commencement has been one of great interest. The baccalaureate address, Sabbath morning, June 4, was by J. Arthur Wollam, pastor of University church, on "The Reformed Life," Jeremiah 18:1-4. Most so-called baccalaureate "sermons" are mere educational addresses; a fact which has led Friends University to announce them as such. But this "address" was a very impressive sermon. On the evening of the same day Prof. Conrad Vandervelde, of Emporia College, ably and thoroughly discussed "What the Church Owes the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations" in the annual address before the two Associations in Friends University.

A great all-day rainstorm entirely excluded the two exercises announced for Monday. In the graduating exercises of the Preparatory School Tuesday forenoon, C. H. Woodward, pastor of Trinity Methodist church, addressed the class of twelve, with many of their friends, on "The Spirit That Conquers." That evening the annual address before the Alumni Association was given by T. Elmer Jones, Class of 1903, pastor the Baptist church of Eldorado, while the Men's Glee Club gave an excellent concert, led by Director Lucius Ades of the School of Music.

On Wednesday June 7, Dr. Frank G. Smith, pastor of the First Congregational church, Kansas City, gave the commencement address on "The Fundamental Factor of a Successful Life; or the Larger Meaning of an Old Word." That old word is faith, and "Faith is the victory that overcomes the world."

In conferring degrees, President Stanley, reversing the order of the published program, presented to seven students the certificate of the Biblical School, on having completed the English-Biblical Course of two years, which is an excellent training school course. Friends University does not graduate anyone in theology. But the Classical-Biblical Course, including an undergraduate and a graduate year, is accepted by leading theological seminaries as the equivalent of two full years of their ordinary three years in theology.

Twenty young men and women were welcomed to the degree of Bachelor of Arts with the appropriate diploma. Of these Ruth D. Payne was awarded the Fellowship in the University of Kansas and Calvin H. Knight the Scholarship in Haverford College.

For the first time Friends University confers an honorary degree. The Doctorate in Laws was conferred upon Absalom Rosenberger, president of Whittier College and twenty years president of Penn College, and upon S. Edgar Nicholson, Editor of The American Friend, Secretary of the National Anti-Saloon League and author of the "Nicholson Law," both men of eminence and wide influence in the Society of Friends and in education generally. There were general surprise and great satisfaction, most of all on the part of him who was thus honored, when a telegram from the President of the Board of Trustees of Whittier College announced to the audience that Whittier was then about to confer the degree of Master of Arts upon Professor William P. Trueblood, vice-President of Friends University. An even greater surprise had come to the faculty and friends of Friends University at the commencement of Fairmount College just one week before, when the Doctorate in Laws was conferred upon Edmund Stanley. It is very significant and foretokens good things to come, that the trustees of the in some ways rival college, who have known his career from the founding of Friends University, and some of them earlier when he was State Superintendent of Public Instruction, should thus, absolutely on their own motion, unanimously vote to honor President Stanley.

Gervas A. Carey of the Biblical Faculty has been granted leave of absence for further study. Having pursued his undergraduate and graduate biblical and theological studies in Friends University Biblical School, he will be welcomed to the senior class of Princeton Theological Seminary with less than a year's work for graduation. Calvin H. Knight has been elected to fill his place during his absence as Instructor in Hebrew and Prophecy.

The Bible Teachers Training School of New York City, which is an excellent theological seminary and training school combined, grants a Fellowship in their School of Theology, to be awarded each year upon recommendation of the faculty of the Biblical School of Friends University. This will admit the incumbent to the senior class in that institution with unusual advantages in the Department of Christian Work.

A movement was started a few weeks ago by the students and prominent citizens of Wichita and indorsed by the directors to raise money and build an adequate modern gymnasium for Friends University. Above $4,000 was subscribed by the students and professors themselves, and the campaign was conducted two weeks, when place was given to a similar, previously appointed effort for the new building for the Y. W. C. A. Now, after commencement, the effort for the gymnasium will be renewed and pushed for the full amount of $40,000, which is necessary for the purpose.

COMMENCEMENT AT EARLHAM.

Commencement week of 1916 brought together perhaps the largest assemblage which has ever met upon the grounds of Earlham College. This was accounted for, in large part, by the Quaker pageant exercises on Tuesday afternoon and evening. Students attending Earlham, however, within the first fifty years of its existence were honor guests this year, and this added materially to the attendance of old students.

The exercises began on the evenings of June 9 and 10 with musical recitals in Lindley Hall. On Sunday morning, June 11, the baccalaureate sermon was preached by Dr. Gerald B. Smith of the Chicago University Divinity School. The discourse was a profound one with a truly spiritual message, in which the speaker emphasized the difference between speaking merely with tongues and genuine prophecy. In the evening, Willard O. Trueblood, pastor of the First Friends church, Indianapolis, gave the annual address before the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations. It was a strong message and was much appreciated by a good audience.

Monday was given over to the renewal of acquaintances, the annual commencement drive, and to the preparations for the pageant on the following day. In the evening a Shakespearian play was rendered on the Chase stage, under the direction of the public speaking department of the college. At noon on Tuesday a bounteous luncheon was served on the college campus to members of the alumni association, following which there was a rush for seats where the pageant exercises were to be carried out.

The words and plan of the pageant were the production of Prof. W. C. Woodward of the college faculty, who has recently been elected General Secretary of the Five Years Meeting. The plan of the pageant represented a quest for freedom and began with scenes in the South during slavery times. Other scenes outlined the growing discontent of Friends with slavery, the determination to seek a land of liberty in Indiana as a part of the Northwest Territory, the journey to Indiana, and the development of Quakerism during its various stages since that time. Special attention was given to the founding of Earlham College and the representation of the spirit which has characterized that institution until the present time. The exercises closed with an interesting and beautiful May day celebration. The performance was repeated at night.

A large number of the Earlham students participated in the exercises, practically all of them in costume. It was an interesting sight to see literally scores of men and women scattered throughout the grounds wearing the old time Quaker garb and later participating in the pageant ceremonies. The attendance during the afternoon was estimated as high as 3,000.

The weather was ideal throughout commencement week. Degrees were conferred upon 47 men and women on commencement day, June 14, and the honorary degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon Mrs. Cowles, who was recently elected the National President of the Federation of Women's Clubs in this country at the New York meeting, she having been a student at Earlham College during the '70s. A most interesting class address, particularly suited to this centennial year in the history of Indiana, was given by Prof. F. L. Paxson, professor of American History in the Wisconsin University, on the subject "A Hoosier Dome's Day."

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON.

July 2.

Subject—Paul at Thessalonica and Berea.

Lesson—Acts 17:1-15.

Golden Text—Him did God exalt with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior. Acts 5:31.

Paul's custom was to offer his fellow countrymen an opportunity to accept the gospel. This was perfectly proper. Of all the people whom he met they should have been the first to accept this new development in the religious world. It was a phase of their own religion, a logical development. A direct outgrowth of that which the prophets had preached. Paul and his friends had a right to expect them to see it in that light. But students of religious history know that religious people, people thoroughly devoted to their faith, are usually the last to accept a logical development of their own religion. They are so obsessed with that which is that they cannot see how new life or new forms can be possible. For that reason Christ was rejected, and for that reason Paul was destined to be persecuted by the "faithful" among his former fellow religionists.

We are further interested in the methods of the so-called Orthodox Jews. Perhaps we too harshly condemn them—we cannot, of course, justify their methods, but Christians should read their own church history before saying too much. Viewed from a seat in the synagogue, Paul was verily a teacher of a new doctrine, he was a disturber of the religious peace, and the Jewish officers had a perfect right to reject his teachings and to refuse him the privilege of preaching in the synagogue, since they did not agree with him. They also had a right to oppose his teachings by all fair means, except to employ mob violence—but such has been the methods of religious fanatics for ages past.

To accept Christ in those days was no easy matter. A man must in the first place be thoroughly convinced, he must believe that Jesus was the Christ, that he could and would save men from their sins. In the second place he must expect to suffer not only the loss of personal property, but he must be prepared to suffer physical violence. Nor was that all, he must expect that violence to reach the members of his own family; that might mean that his wife would become a widow and his children orphans, or that they, too, must suffer the vengeance of the mob. Christians in those days were possessed with a deadly earnest, because none but the brave joined the group.

"These (Bereans) were more noble than those of Thessalonica—they searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so." This is the true student attitude. It is only by this method that men grow intellectually and spiritually. The man who has come to a conclusion and refuses to listen to a new proposition is almost hopelessly lost. God himself would have difficulty in revealing anything to such a man. Paul was once of that type and it required the Damascus road experience to get him in a position where he was willing to be convinced. No new doctrine should be received carelessly, but blessed were the Bereans for they were open to conviction.

SOUTHLAND AIDS SUFFERERS.

In a letter dated June 12, 1916, to Edward Bellis, Corresponding Secretary, President H. C. Wolford, of Southland College, writes: "Yesterday was observed as children's day. It was desired by those present that the collection taken at the morning services should be used to aid European war sufferers. The enclosed check for five dollars is for this purpose."

This offering from the Sabbath School and meeting at Southland, during vacation time, is a fine testimony to the valuable teaching of past years in that institution. The lesson of helpfulness to others in need has not been forgotten by those who have been helped by us. Such a result pays for a generous support on our part.

Songs In the Heart

There are songs in the heart that are never sung
To the finest chords of the spirit strung,
Like the deeper currents of the ocean stirred
Whose low, deep symphonies sweep unheard.
There are songs of gladness which fill the earth
With beauty of flowers and the joy of mirth,
There are songs of gladness and the voice of birds,
There are songs of sadness too deep for words.

There are songs of sorrow through all the years,
Whose only language is silent tears,
Where the wrong has triumphed, or hope is riven,
Like the dove o'er the shoreless ocean driven.
There are songs of rapture which thrill the soul
When thoughts of God and of heaven control,
They wake in the spirit like visions bright,
There are songs that are voiceless but swift as light.

There are songs of triumph, unheard, untold,
As the silent splendors of the day unfold,
Where it conquers night as the failing breath
Oft calms the smile on the lips of death.
There are songs of peace and unspoken rest
Which come to the spirit to make it blest,
From heights of glory by seraphs trod,
On the wings of prayer, from the hills of God.

The Call of Distress

The appeals which English Friends are making for the assistance of American Friends in the relief work which is now going on should not go unheeded. For many months English Friends have been giving almost lavishly in support of the various relief interests which are under their supervision.

Chief of these are the relief of the aliens, the Germans and Austrians which were in England at the opening of the war, the Friends Ambulance Unit work in France and Holland and the work among the victims of the war in France, Belgium and Holland and later in Serbia, Russia and Greece. One English Friend is reported to have been giving for sometime $5,000 a month to the Friends Ambulance Unit, but the work has grown to such proportions that this is only a small part of what is needed month after month.

We in this country can scarcely appreciate the depths of suffering through which all Europe is now passing. John R. Mott fittingly describes the situation as "Rivers of pain, rivers of pain." With more than 2,000,000 actually killed in battle, with upwards of 5,000,000 others having to suffer the tortures that come to the wounded, with millions of women and children left desolate, many of them starving and almost without clothing, it would seem that the time had come for Christian America to begin to make sacrificial offerings that are adequate to express the world brotherhood of which we hear so much in this generation.

The Federal Council of Churches has just issued a second general appeal for help in this European crisis and the needs which are set forth in Belgium, in France, in Germany, in Poland, in Russia, in Serbia, in Armenia and in other places are well nigh staggering. This new appeal says: "Meanwhile the cry of distress continues. Our correspondence from Europe and the reports from the organizations bring new stories of suffering, and those who suffer most are the most innocent. No united movement of the churches could be more far-reaching in spiritual influence than this effort to extend a hand of Christian love and sympathy to the peoples across the sea."

Perhaps no people in Europe are doing more to help their own neighbors and friends than the members of the Society of Friends in Great Britain, but their resources are becoming limited, and now they have turned to the great body of Friends in this country, not for themselves, but for the many whom they have failed to help because of their limitations.

In times of suffering the whole world is akin and Quakerism in America is bound to suffer unless now it rises to the occasion and does something that is worthy of our Lord and Master, something that will not only relieve distress in the spirit of beneficence, but something that in the spirit of sacrifice will show the spirit of our Christ to the world. Where Friends in this country have begun to give in dimes and quarters and dollars, we ought probably to be responding by hundreds and thousands, if we meet this emergency as the occasion demands.

Scores and hundreds of Friends in America have been helping in various ways for many months, but now that the appeal has come from English Friends direct it would seem that the denomination as a whole ought to respond in some adequate way. Having heard the call for help we cannot set it aside lightly nor can we afford to give sparingly.

While funds can be sent directly to the various relief agencies, The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana, will be glad to receive and forward any contributions which may be sent to this office. Contributions can be marked for a special purpose and they will be sent accordingly, or if sent for the war sufferers without special direction, they will be sent to Isaac Sharp in London with a request that he place them where there is the greatest need at the time.

(Note—Do not send relief funds to the Urbana office, but to Richmond, Indiana.)

A Greater Quakerism

IV

We have already intimated that the problem of a greater Quakerism will depend initially upon the fundamental character of its tenets, and the importance which attaches to the propagation of its teachings. A body of believers must stand for something really worth while as applied to the task of man's uplift and betterment, in order to justify its strivings for a larger place in the religious world. Superficialism in religion breeds infidelity, while a religion of display is a mockery that spells the doom of the civilization that fosters it.

Quakerism has never been defined with exactness, for Quakerism is a life, and life is its own best definition. It is read better in its fruits than in its creeds. It was a far cry from the dogmatism of the church of the middle ages and even the literalism of the Established Church of the Seventeenth Century to the teachings of George Fox and the religious liberty proclaimed by the early Friends. No doubt their preaching was shaped by the necessities of the times, but under the guidance of the Spirit, their interpretation of gospel truth rapidly took form as the embodiment of sound religious principles which have been the historic characterization of the Society of Friends for more than two hundred and fifty years.

It is little wonder that Quakerism stirred all England and other lands as well, when out of the midst of the religious professionalism of that day came messengers declaring that the voice of God speaks directly in every Christian heart, and that the light of Christ shines for all men in their inmost souls. With peculiar emphasis they taught the immediate communication of the will of God, the immediate personal teaching of the Holy Spirit and the actual realization of the words of the Master, "The kingdom of God is within you." Out of all this grew the doctrine of individual communion and fellowship with God as the means of the continual revelation of the Father's will and the occasion of his bounteous blessings.

At the beginning Quakerism was a revolt against professional Christianity. To quote William Penn: "The purport of the Quaker doctrine and ministry for the most part is what other professors of Christianity pretend to hold in words and forms." It has been said that Quakerism reduced to its lowest terms is the actual realization in personal and collective experience of what other people are talking about. Quakerism has always stood for the essence of truth and has disregarded all forms which were at most only typical. Herein is found the basis of Friends' belief and practice relative to baptism and the Lord's supper, the taking of oaths and the forms of personal and collective worship.

To preserve our doctrines by living them is the one best guarantee of a greater Quakerism. It is not sufficient that other churchmen have incorporated these principles into the mechanism of their faith and creeds. All Europe today needs the gospel of the days of George Fox, and all the world needs a denomination that dares to practice as well as teach the rules of life as given by Jesus, and that is willing to regard his program as the one practical program for the guidance of all men. The dominance of this spirit in all our activities would send Quakerism again to the fore. Without it all our strivings for greater efficiency will be in vain. Valuable as is organization, it can never be a substitute for life. Without life and without the obedience and faith that beget life, our scheme of Boards and Committees, no matter how perfect the machinery, will not avail.

It is a time for the exercise of a supreme faith and a prayer for the guidance and help of the Holy Spirit. "The way is always open to any honest man who would like to please God," and there is no "other way" for a denomination that has felt the stirrings of a larger life. The Society of Friends upon its knees in supplication before the Father, and the Society of Friends in counsel around the family hearthstone, seeking the vision of things that ought to be, will be the greatest assurances of reaching the larger life that lies yet beyond the skyline of our vision today.

The rending of the veil of the temple marked the passing of the old and the ushering in of a new day, for when God took his departure from the temple it was to reappear in fellowship with obedient discipleship everywhere. We are not ready to mark the dividing line between an old and a new Quakerism, but we are constrained to appeal for a concerted effort to make Quakerism what it was in the old days, an apostle of the realism of gospel truth both in precept and in practice.

With English Friends Behind the Battle Line In France

By LETTICE JOWITT.

It was in December 1914 that a small group of English doctors and nurses, sent out by the Society of Friends in Great Britain to give relief to non-combatants, innocent victims of war in the east of France, took up their quarters in one wing of the large asylum for old people at Chalons-sur-Marne.

Chalons occupied by the Germans for nine days had suffered little, but it is the center of a large number of villages crowded with refugees from the Ardennes and from the ruined villages in the neighboring department.

Herded together in most pitiable condition, sheltering in barns and stables, sleeping on straw without blankets, bereft of all that makes a home, weighed down with anxiety for their menfolk in the trenches, of whose danger the not very distant heavy firing was a continual reminder, these refugees, old men, women and children, needed all the help and comfort that we could bring them.

But in most dire need of all were the mothers-to-be and it was of them that the Prefect of the Marne thought when he invited Dr. Hilda Clark, a granddaughter of John Bright, in charge of the Medical work of the English mission, to undertake the administration of a small maternity hospital in one block of the large modern building which houses the homeless old people of the department of the Marne. The Friend, who was acting as matron, told in her letters home of the hardship and suffering which many of these women had been through.

"Many also came from Reims. Madame L. had taken refuge at Chamery, a village just outside, and there we went to fetch her with the motor. We found her cleanly lodged, but there was no possibility of her being cared for there, and her mother-in-law, also a refugee there with her, spoke most gratefully of the provision of the hospital. 'I confide her to your care,' she said, and in spite of the fact that we were unknown to them, of a foreign country, arriving late in the dusk of a winter evening, this young mother-to-be rose up, laid down her sewing, put on her hat and cloak, and came away with us into the dark. It was her first baby. Her husband, a compositor in Reims, before he was called up, had been seriously wounded four months before, and since then she had had no news at all. She spoke during the long ride back of their happy life together, then of his being called out, of the horrors of the bombardment, and her six weeks' nightly sojourn in the cellars. She spoke of the Germans in Reims, but said they were 'tres gentils,' and that many of her friends had found the same.

One she met had been so sad, and had wept over having to fight and leave his wife and children. She showed him the picture of her husband, and he wished her good fortune and his safe return. Her courage was splendid. She said, 'If he never comes back to me I must bring up my child and work for him, one must have courage these days; one has moments, but it is no good to weep, it only brings weakness.' She was some time with us before her baby was born, helpful in a hundred little ways, and so long as we could keep her busy with sewing, wonderfully cheerful and well. Just before a little daughter was born to her the news came that her husband was dead. Her courage never failed. 'For my dear little girl I want to be strong,' she said. Mercifully she has relations on a little farm in the south, to whom she can go when she is strong enough, but of her parents she has had no news since the beginning of the war, and knows not whether they are alive or dead."

In another letter she writes:

"The overcrowding presents a very serious problem. At a little village northeast of Chalons the Maire had not been able to send on any of the refugees, as all the trains were required for military purposes. We were asked to fetch an expectant mother from there, and we brought her away from a small shed, about 12 by 14 feet, the only lighting other than the door, being a piece of glass a foot or so square set into the planking. There was a stove, and on the earthen floor all down one side, covering about half the available floor space, was a pile of straw. On this were sleeping three men, four women, and six children! Here, two months before we came, a baby had been born. The mud was six inches deep before the door, but, in spite of this and of our unexpected visit, the six children were all clean, and on a string across that wretched hovel were hanging a few meager articles of children's clothing, not only washed but ironed. Our patient herself had but three garments in the world apparently, but these too were perfectly clean. She appreciated greatly the care and comfort of the hospital, and after her 'little soldier' was born she was given an outfit for herself and him and sent to his grandparents beyond Paris."

I had several opportunities of visiting the maternity hospital, and shall never forget the shy pride with which these French peasant women, so happily established in the cleanliness and peace of that cheerful little hospital showed for our admiration, as we chatted at one bedside after another, their new born babes, endearingly spoken of as "mon petit soldat" in the case of a son, nor the gratitude with which they spoke of the kindness and attention of the English nurses. In the field adjoining the hospital are anti-aircraft guns waiting for hostile visitors, and more than once since the Friends' sojourn there a shell has penetrated to the asylum grounds, but happily up to the present no harm has been done to the hospital or its inmates.

Since March, 1915, the number of maternity patients having lessened very much, one of the wards has been occupied by women and girls evacuated in our ambulance cars from Reims or Suippes, or other places within reach of the German guns. For more than a year now the bombardment of Reims has continued, but a few of its inhabitants still stay in their cellar homes. Occasionally when they emerge on some errand into the street, they are injured by an exploding shell, and it was these victims whom we were first asked to fetch to the safety of the "Maternite" at Chalons, though presently the problem of evacuation grew beyond the directly medical one and it was for the children suffering from the strain and terror of bombardment, that we were called upon to find another home.

One Sunday afternoon last September, turning my back on the ruined village of Sommeilles and on the heavy thunder of guns in the direction of St. Menehould, I bicycled through shining peaceful country to the old chateau at Bettancourt, lent us by the Comtesse Morillot, and which equipped and organized by Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Lucas, was sheltering some forty children rescued from the overcrowded quarters where our workers had found them in one village or another.

Round a dining room table with "Maman" Lucas presiding at one end over their labors, sat fifteen little French girls writing their Sunday letters home to their mothers left behind, or to fathers in the trenches and the letters in their simple childlike French all told the same story of the kindness of their new friends 'les anglais.' We are thankful to think that these many months of work and comradeship together have forged chains of friendship, too strong ever to be broken.

Home Life in Africa

Edna H. Chilson.

In civilized lands, few songs have a stronger appeal to us than "Home Sweet Home." Even in Africa, this same sentiment is not unknown. When the African is facing certain death he wants if possible to be carried, back to the home of his mother to die.

We would like to give you some idea of what the home here is like but you must put aside your ideas of home life in our own dear land. True you will find a family living in a hut, the only home they know, but how different it is from home as we think of it. The house is made of poles, grass and mud. The short poles are stuck in the ground in the shape of a circle with a higher pole in the center to hold the roof. This forms a roof that runs to a peak and it is thatched with grass. The walls of the house are smeared with mud. The floor is only of dirt that has been pounded until perfectly hard. The eaves of the hut are so low that when you enter you must almost crawl. You must keep low when you enter because of the smoke. If you keep near the floor you will not be troubled so much. All the light and air, must come through this one small door—the only opening in the hut.

Inside there is so little or nothing to make a home attractive. On one side is a platform on which they put the fire wood for the rainy season and on this the chickens roost. On another side is a place for the cattle, goats and sheep to be tied at night. Some homes have a sort of partition which separates the sleeping place of the cattle from that of the family, but not all by any means. Near the center of the hut are some stones which are used to support the cooking pots over the fire. The smoke escapes the best it can through the grass roof or through the door. There is no furniture, except possibly a stool or two, no tables, no chairs, dishes or any of the things that are so necessary to us. The father and mother may be clothed with skins of cattle or goats or again they may be without clothing. With few exceptions the children are all naked. If the man is well-to-do and has plenty of cattle with which to buy wives there will be other huts near where these wives live—a hut for each wife.

At the close of the day they will have their main meal. There is no sight more sickening to me than to see the native eat. He has no manners and eats more like an animal than a human being. Their food is eaten with their hands from the cooking pot, which is made of clay and burned. The main articles of food are a thick mush, greens, sweet potatoes, cooked bananas, beans and once in awhile meat of some kind. They will not, however, have all of this at one meal. The flour for the mush is ground by the women of the family on a large stone near the door.

When the sun has set and darkness covers the earth, the family will come together, in the little hut (also the cattle etc) around the fire on the floor, which is the only light they have, and talk over the happenings of the day or of the more remote past and also of things that would not be tolerated within the home in civilized lands.

The dreary aspect of a home like this, vacant and dark, is only a picture of the condition of the family in many ways. We cannot place lamps and furniture in all of these homes but the Light of God can dispel the darkness and His indwelling presence can come in and take possession of the homes and lives. They can be clothed with His righteousness. Let us look from this scene of hopelessness and darkness to a home where the Gospel has been received and where the Light of God has had a chance to prove what it can do.

This home is built better than the other hut and has more light and air. There are windows and better doors and more than the one room. A little room has been built at the back for the chickens and no animals are allowed to sleep in with the family. The cooking is done in a small room at the back of the house so that the smoke is not over everything. Things are crude, to be sure, but clean and neat and everything shows a desire for better things; a reaching out to improve their condition.

The family is clothed and keep their clothes clean. They eat the same food as the other natives but before eating they pause a moment to thank God for the food. They must eat with their hands, for they cannot afford to buy many dishes, although they have a few, but they wash their hands before and after eating. They have some books and can read God's word and the songs of Redemption are often heard in their home. They have a small light so they can spend their evenings in reading or some other helpful way.

This home is as a city set on a hill for it cannot be hid. Everyone knows and must admit that this home is different from the other native homes. What is the difference? Is it in that they have a different shaped house, a few dishes, a light, clothes, etc? It all seems so pitiful at the best—this effort to have better things. Can it be this that makes the difference? We would say "No." There is another light that has dispelled the heathen darkness and something more that has filled the vacant home. It is the Light of God that has shined in their hearts and lives that has changed it all. They were once as the others about them. They were in sin and shame. They knew no other way. They were satisfied with their own ways until they heard of Jesus and His love. Now their hearts reach out after others and they are praying and working for the salvation of their people. God is blessing them and their home and in That Day they will hear the "Come ye blessed."

Does Missionary work pay? Is it worth our while to come? Can anyone doubt when they hear of these things? It has paid by saving this family, if many others were not saved, for no one can tell nor see where the influence of this one little family will end. But, thank God, there are others, and will be more, who know Him; "Whom to know aright is life eternal."

The World's Sorrows

By William C. Allen.

During London Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends an intensely interesting report was listened to from Wm. A. Cadbury who had just returned from Russia. He and three other Friends had been sent out by English Friends to that Country, a few months ago, to investigate the needs of the refugees from the war zone and the possibilities of helping them. His vivid verbal account of the heart-rending conditions in Russia was, without any comment, a terrible commentary on the sufferings of non-combatants induced by war.

Two and one half millions of refugees are now distributed throughout Russia. About 500,000 of these destitute people are Poles. All have fled from the clash of contending armies, their homes have been destroyed, their crops or businesses ruined, and families often separated, never to be reunited. Disease and exposure have already killed most of the children.

These heart-broken and afflicted children of our common Father have had a terrible winter. There will be work for them during this summer, but another winter gives cause for apprehension. Whether the war stops or continues their future is pitiable to contemplate. The country districts where charity is unorganized, are and will be the most in need of help. There are practically no doctors in the country districts.

The great need will be doctors, trained nurses, drugs, clothing and large funds for the overwhelming needs. The Russian Government stands ready to assist those who can aid these unhappy victims of this terrible war.

Those who desire to give out of their plenty can forward money to C. Walter Borton, care Provident Life and Trust Company, 409 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa., who will forward contributions to English Friends. The administration of relief work by the Society of Friends has been very large during this war and exceedingly economical.

Haverford Summer School

The Haverford Summer School goes this year on a journey to New England. Six times since 1900 it has gathered together a group of Friends and Friendly people for a week or two of instruction and fellowship during the early summer. This year it has postponed its sessions until the heat of the summer is past and instead of the Haverford campus with its commodious halls and shady lawn it has secured the entire use of the comfortable Lincoln House situated on a rocky headland of its own at Swampscott, Massachusetts.

Here, surrounded on three sides by the Atlantic and accessible to all parts of New England as well as more remote parts of the East, a company of eager folk will gather on the 5th of Ninth month, the day after Labor Day, and will continue for a week to attend lectures and Bible classes, to confer with each other and with the speakers who will lead their meditations, both in public and private, and to walk and talk and swim and play golf. From this centre many charming expeditions can be made to Whittierland, to the old shrines of Puritan Massachusetts, so eagerly and so painfully sought by our Quaker forefathers. New England Friends through their efficiency committee are co-operating with the plans for the school and will welcome all who come from distant parts or from other folds.

The program will include many well known Friends. Rufus M. Jones and George A. Barton will contribute from their recent religious studies some first fruits prior to the publication of their new books. The former will deal with some lessons from the history of Quakerism a hundred years ago, the latter with some aspects of comparative religion. Elihu Grant, also a New Englander, and a Friend by conviction comes from his work at Smith College to teach a class on the development of religious and moral ideas in the Old Testament.

Similar subjects will be dealt with by Alfred C. Garrett of Philadelphia. Of the other Bible Class teachers one comes from far away Iowa, W. Irving Kelsey, of Penn College, another from nearby Boston, Wilbur K. Thomas. Agnes L. Tierney of Germantown is to speak on Christianity and character, and Elbert Russell will deal in a series of addresses with the practical applications of Christianity. Two other speakers should be mentioned who though not Friends are familiar with Friendly audiences and can contribute much of value to the Summer School. Warren H. Wilson who is at the head of the rural church work of the Presbyterian Board in America will deal with that topic which is so vital to Friends in New England and in many other parts,—the duty of the country meeting. W. L. Sperry, a minister of the Congregational Church in Boston and author of some outspoken pamphlets on war from the Christian standpoint will devote one lecture to this topic. He and several other speakers will speak at other times on the more personal and inner phases of religion.

The full program should be ready a week or two before the summer school begins. Applications for rooms will be filled in the order of date, and so should be made as early as possible. The rates of board and lodging vary from $1.75 to $3 a day. Questions concerning these and all other details should be addressed to the Secretary, Henry J. Cadbury, Haverford, Pa.

Educational Conference and Exhibit

The first inter-denominational conference and exhibit in the interests of Christian Education was held at Wilkes-Barre, Penna., June 7th-10th, under the auspices of the Council of Church Boards of Education. Eighteen Protestant denominations with a total membership of some 16,000,000 communicants were represented. Robert L. Kelly, Chairman of the Educational Board of the Five Years' Meeting was chairman of the committee that outlined the plan for the inter-denomination campaign.

The purpose of this conference and exhibit, was, (1) to impress the fundamental importance of Christian Education upon the people of the great Wyoming Valley, (2) to perfect plans and methods for future conference and exhibits in other centers and (3) to set on foot a movement designed to create a more favorable and active sentiment and interest in Christian Education throughout the length and breadth of this country.

The forenoons were devoted to Council business—the afternoons and evenings to popular meetings in the interests of Christian Education. Such phases of the work as The Kind of an Education demanded by Modern Life, The Recruiting of an Adequate Christian leadership for our age, The Religious Element in Education—a Necessity,—Life Work Problems, The Educational Responsibilities of the Home and of the Church, these and many other important questions were ably discussed by such men as Pres. McCracken of Lafayette College, Dr. J. W. Cochran, Dr. R. C. Hughes, Pres. J. H. Morgan of Dickinson College, H. F. Cope of the Religious Education Association, Bishop Nicholson and others of note.

The educational exhibits attracted great attention. Educational surveys showed the growth of denominational and State Colleges and Universities—the development of the High Schools and Academies, the distribution of the educational institutions throughout the country. A chart showed that only about one young person out of every fifty of college age (17-23 years of age) was actually enrolled in College. Charts were on exhibition, showing in a graphic way, educational tendencies and developments—the part played in this development by State, Protestant, Catholic and independent educational institutions and foundations. Pictures and Lantern Slides, giving Campus conditions and life were shown. Illustrative and informational literature was distributed. No similar exhibit of such proportions and importance was ever gathered together in this country. The exhibit is of the greatest value to the Churches.

Dr. G. Franklin Ream, who has been acting as Temporary Executive Secretary of the Campaign and to whose ability and skill the Council is deeply indebted for the great showing made at Wilkes-Barre, because of the large duties laid upon him by the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, asked to be relieved of the Secretaryship. Dr. R. Watson Cooper, recently President of Upper Iowa University and who has also served as Secretary of the Association of American Colleges since its organization was elected to act as Executive Secretary of the Campaign. Dr. Cooper is eminently well qualified for this task. He is a man of vision and power—an able organizer and an enthusiastic believer and supporter of Christian Education. The Council feels itself fortunate, indeed it feels that the way was providentially opened up, whereby Dr. Cooper's services could be secured.

Dr. Cooper is now giving his entire time to the perfecting of plans for publicising Christian Education throughout the entire United States. These plans will be presented at a meeting of the Council of Church Boards to be held at Niagara Falls on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 22nd and 23rd of August. It has been proposed that a great National Conference and Exhibit shall be held in Chicago in January, in connection with the Annual Meeting of the Council of Church Boards of Education and of the Association of American Colleges. It is possible that a Conference and Exhibit will be held somewhere in Ohio or Kentucky previous to the Chicago Exhibit.

Pressing Forward

Paul indulged in the three acts of looking backward, looking inward and looking forward, but he came to this conclusion: "Forgetting the things that are behind"—the results of retrospection—"and reaching forth to the things that are before"—the examination of present purposes with regard to life—"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus"—the power of retrospection, the result of his faith in God and his courage for the future.—Exchange.

THE GENERAL SECRETARY

The Gospel Ministry in the Five Years Meeting

IV. Friends' Colleges as Recruiting Stations for the Ministry

The criticism has sometimes been heard that Friends' colleges fall short in the number of ministers from among their students which they contribute to the Church. With a view to getting at some of the underlying facts bearing upon the case, the following list of questions was recently sent to each of the nine colleges in the Five Years meeting:

1. How many of your students give evidence of having the requisite gifts for the public Christian ministry?
2. How many of them are pursuing courses of study which are specially adapted to preparation for the ministry?
3. What opportunities, if any, do your students have for the development of their ministerial gifts while in college?
4. What is your observation as to the adequacy of the encouragement held out by the Church for young Friends to make special preparation for service as ministers in our denomination?
5. What, in your judgment, are the practical ways in which such encouragement ought to be given by the Church?

Accompanying the above questions was the following note of explanation:

Nothing in the foregoing questions is to be interpreted as inconsistent with the historic Quaker position that the fundamental requisites for the true Gospel ministry are the Divine call and the qualifications of the Holy Spirit. These being assumed, the questions are to be understood as directed to such subordinate, but vitally important, matters as "the development of gifts," "mental capacity" and "general qualifications for the ministry," all of which are specifically assigned by the Uniform Discipline as subjects for the care of the Church.

The replies received to questions 1 and 2 show that, out of approximately 1700 students of college and preparatory standing enrolled in the nine colleges during the year 1915-16, sixty-two were regarded as being in possession of the requisite gifts for the public ministry. Fully one half of these students had so far dedicated themselves to the work of the Gospel as to have chosen and pursued courses of study which were specially adapted to preparation for ministerial and pastoral service.

Food for profitable thinking by the Church may be found in a comparison between the resources for the future ministry which the foregoing figures reveal as existent in the student body of the colleges and the average number of Friends annually coming forward into the ranks of the ministry from among the whole membership of the Five Years' Meeting. In a previous article it was shown from the reports of the Yearly Meetings that recruits to the ministerial force of the Five Years' Meeting during the last three years had been enrolled at the average rate of about twenty-five a year. There were, therefore, during last college year, more young people definitely looking forward to and preparing for the ministry among the ranks of the college students than the whole average number of ministers annually recorded from among the entire membership of the Five Years' Meeting. Furthermore, if all the students who were adjudged to possess the requisite gifts for the ministry, whether pursuing special courses of study by way of preparation for that line of service or not, are taken into the count, the potential ministers among college students alone last year, if the gifts of all of them were developed and brought into active service, would constitute a body of ministers two and a half times as large as the average total number of ministers annually recruited throughout all the nine Yearly Meetings composing the Five Years' Meeting.

For the colleges it is to be said that they are striving commendably to discharge their share of responsibility toward the future ministry of our denomination. To the extent of the extremely limited means at their command for that purpose, they offer excellent courses of study in the line of special preparation for Christian service, as will be seen from the following brief details:

Whittier College provides twelve courses in Biblical History and Literature, including one course in the Fundamentals of the Friends' Church, intended to meet the demands of the times for ministers and all who desire to help in Christian work. Pacific College offers seven semesters of Biblical study. The Biblical School of Friends University is designed "to meet the need in Bible Schools and Churches of this generation for trained and devoted Bible teachers and ministers." Penn College maintains a department intended "to meet the needs of the Church today for a better ministry and men and women with training along lines of Christian service." Earlham College offers twelve courses in Biblical Literature and Church History, including one course in the History of Friends and one in Missions, which are intended "as means of preparation for those expecting to enter the ministry or other lines of religious work." Wilmington College has twelve courses "designed to prepare Christian workers and ministers for reverent and efficient service." Mention should also be made here of Haverford College, outside the Five Years Meeting, which maintains an extensive department of Biblical Literature and related courses.

That the colleges are alive to the importance of opportunities for students to exercise their gifts in the ministry while engaged in college studies is indicated by the following extracts from replies to question 3 in the foregoing list:

Guilford College students do Deputation Work in nearby churches and school houses.

At Earlham they have opportunities to preach in small meetings in and about the city of Richmond. In many cases they receive pecuniary aid sufficient to cover their college expenses. Gospel teams are sent out each year.

Penn College students serve meetings in the vicinity of the college besides aiding in the large local church and Bible School.

Four students in Friends University last year were recorded ministers, three of them being pastors of churches. Other students engage in the Friends' City Missions and other work in the neighborhood of the college.

Students at Nebraska Central College do Gospel Team Work and serve at out-appointments.

At Pacific College they do Deputation Work in the vicinity of the college and are encouraged by the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight to exercise their ministerial gifts in the local meeting.

At Whittier College they engage in Gospel Team and Y. M. C. A. work.

When God bestows gifts upon His children He intends that they shall be used in His service, as the Parable of the Ten Talents plainly teaches. To have received from the Head of the Church the requisite gifts for the ministry is to be under His calling to service in the ministry. The hour has come for the churches in the Five Years' Meeting to take stock of their God-given resources for the ministerial and pastoral forces of the future. Gifted young men and young women in all the Yearly Meetings are responding to the Spirit's promptings and are dedicating their lives to Christian service. Increasing numbers of them from year to year are availing themselves of the assistance offered them by the colleges in the line of preparation for the labor to which they are called. If this growing wealth of material for the ministry, which upon good authority is adjudged to have received the Divine sanction, shall fail as the time goes by to be utilized for the service of Christ and the Society of Friends, where will the responsibility of the failure rest? Manifestly, not primarily, at least, with the colleges nor with the goodly host of consecrated young Friends in their student ranks.

General Secretary.

THE HIGHER LIFE

THE THINGS NEEDFUL.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

I do not ask for power and place;
I ask for strength to bravely face
The daily test, and not give ear
To counselings of doubt and fear.
I ask for love that will not turn
From any human cry, nor spurn
The friendship of the humblest heart—
Thus would I know life's finest art!
I ask for faith that can not doubt
That God is good, though all about
My life's ambitions fall away.
These gifts, O Lord, give me today.

Thy Statutes Have Been My Song

When some great sorrow is our portion, there are no considerations that furnish comfort like those which are drawn directly from Scripture. We use all possible means to avert impending evil, but find ourselves utterly helpless. Grief comes; no earthly power can hinder its approach. Under such circumstances it is well for us, if by long and prayerful study of the Bible we are familiar with the precise book, chapter and verse suited to the hour. "I will flee as a bird to my mountain," cries the stricken soul. When trouble or danger is near, there is an instinct, united with experience, that impels the bird to seek some mountain of safety.

So it is with us. Added to deep spiritual instinct, there is a life-long experience that points the way. Our "mountain" is the holy word. We do not fly thither as into a strange country, losing ourselves amid sharp, unfriendly ledges of rock. We have learned just where are the "strong habitations whereunto we may continually resort." There as "in the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," we find not only rest, but delight also. There many a heart surprises all around by its outburst of song having fled from its bitter griefs to this place of security.

There is nothing like the blessed Bible. Happy is every one who owns this Book, not simply in the ordinary sense of possession, but in the sense of receiving its entire contents for spiritual edification. If endowed with earthly wealth one may take delight; how much more when possessed of such treasures! True it is, the songs of a Bible-loving heart are songs for the night of adversity as well as for the day of sunshine.—Unknown.

He Shall Bring it to Pass

Is the old Psalmist's idea that it is safe and wise to trust a great many of all sorts of things that might give us anxiety and worry in the hands and to the fatherly care of an overruling Providence a sane and reasonable idea for this scientific day of ours? Perhaps we ought to seek our answer to such a question in the method and message of Jesus Christ. He was up to date, and His words have a way of standing the test of experience even in our measurably hard and matter-of-fact day. And do we not find that the Psalmist's idea, made still more personal and real and implicit, underlies the whole life, and teaching of Jesus? He and His Father were one, and He seemed to live every moment of His life in implicit confidence in the omnipotence and availability of the power of God to assist in all the details of His life and work. And what He did Himself He frequently told His disciples it was their glorious opportunity and duty to do. No, Providence isn't played out, even in the twentieth century.—Christian Guardian.

Because He First Loved Us

Jesus has made it possible for everyone to love God, for He has taught us that God Himself "is love," that we may think of Him as a Father; and He has shown in His own life what God must be, a divine being who loves and cares for everyone. It is with many as with the little boy who thought the minister was a great man, too good to notice him, and was so afraid of him that when he saw him coming in the distance he would turn around so as not to meet him. The minister made an effort to get acquainted with the lad, and the two became great friends. One day the minister said: "Tell me, George, do you love me?" Eagerly the boy answered: "Yes, indeed I do." "But, George, there was a time when you did not, when you would run away from me. How long is it since you have loved me?" The boy thought a while and then said: "Ever since I knew that you loved me." As long as we fear God as a great and terrible being we do not love Him; it is only when we realize that He loves us that our hearts go out in love to Him. "We love Him because He first loved us."—Herald and Presbyter.

THE MILITARIST LAWS OF NEW YORK.

(The following condensed statement has been prepared by L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD, of New York City, in response to a request from the editor of this department.—A. D. H.)

The State of New York has now passed laws which are, at any rate, the first step toward universal compulsory military training in that the laws passed provide for military training of all boys between the ages of sixteen and nineteen, and physical training for boys and girls in elementary and secondary schools of such variety as shall be prescribed by the Regents of the State, after conference with the Military Training Commission.

It is interesting to note the way in which these laws were put on the statute book. One public hearing was held on the so-called Welsh-Slater bill, which contains the provision for training of children in schools and in summer training camps. The hearing was not advertised. The writer obtained some private information about the matter from a friend and on calling up the head of the Department of Education at Albany, was informed that they were not sure that the hearing would be held because the Bill was being amended by the Legislature that afternoon; and that I had better come up the next day, for if there were a hearing it would be held that afternoon. The next morning, at Albany, I discovered that the Bill had been amended the afternoon before, but that no copies of the amendment were obtainable, although I applied to the author himself. Not only was the writer unable to obtain copies of the amendment, but President John Finley, Commissioner of Education and President of the University of the State of New York, had no copies of the amendment (copies were not available until twenty minutes before the hearing).

The hearing was held in the Assembly Chamber before the Committee on Ways and Means. The room was fairly well filled with representatives of the National Guard, of the Security and Defense Leagues and other active preparedness organizations, who seemed to have had ample notice of the hearing. Assemblyman Welsh, when asked what they expected to do with the conscientious objectors, as they had made no provision for them in the bill, said that the people who object will be in the minority and will have to do exactly as the majority wishes.

Although these bills affected the child-life of the whole State of New York, the writer was the only private citizen present to speak against the bills, which is pretty good evidence of the lack of notice in regard to the hearing.

Another hearing was demanded, and after the passage of the bills, the Governor of the State was bombarded with telegrams from all over the State, requesting a hearing; but the only hearing granted was one advertised for the Board of Education and not for the general public.

Provision of the Bills.

The Welsh Bill provides that after September 1, 1916, all children above eight years of age, both boys and girls, in elementary and secondary schools, shall receive as part of their prescribed work, such physical training as the Regents of the State, after conference with the Military Training Commission, may determine. Instruction shall be at least twenty minutes each day.

The Slater Bill provides for the appointment of the Military Training Commission, composed of the Major-General commanding the National Guard as chairman, a member to be appointed by the Board of Regents (who control the educational system of New York), and a third, to be appointed by the Governor (very likely, as these bills were passed under the direct influence of the Governor, who signed the bills in the face of considerable protest, it would seem that it will be a largely military commission).

The duties and powers of the Commission are fairly extensive. It can provide "for observation and inspection of the training in schools and appoint an inspector for this purpose." It can also "maintain courses of instruction for male teachers and physical instructors," and it can recommend to the Board of Regents the establishment in schools of "habits, customs and methods best adapted to develop correct physical posture and bearing, mental and physical alertness, self-control, disciplined initiative, sense of duty and spirit of co-operation under leadership."

The Slater measure also provides that after September 1, 1916, boys between the ages of sixteen and nineteen shall be given "such military training as the Commission may prescribe." The only exemption, unless excepted by the Commission, is the boy lawfully employed in gaining a livelihood.

The Slater Bill also provides for "state military camps of instruction under the direction of the Major General of the National Guard and for from two to four weeks during the summer."

It provides that the Governor may draft "portions of the Reserve Militia to make up or complete the complement of organizations of the National Guard or Naval Militia of the State."

These laws, although not going so far in many cases as the Security and Navy Leagues would like, have actually put the State of New York, so far as the popular imagination is concerned, in a position of leading toward universal military service; and when taken in connection with the provisions of the revised Chamberlain Bill now before the Senate of the United States, constitute a dramatic departure from the established institutions of our country.

PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.

In The American Friend for Sixth month first, mention was made of one of the committees of Friends in Pasadena which is active in the work for peace. The secretary of the committee referred to in that item has given the further information that there are also two other peace committees of Friends in Pasadena, and that all three committees are active and working together for the advancement of the cause. It will be of interest to Friends generally to know the organization of these three committees is as follows:

1. The Orange Grove Friends' Peace Committee, John E. Carpenter, chairman.
2. First Friends' Church Peace Committee, Dr. John W. Dorland, chairman.
3. Villa St. (conservative) Friends' Peace Committee, Pliny Gregory, chairman; Dr. Ira Spencer Frame, secretary.

PREPAREDNESS DEBATES.

Robert Cromwell Root, representative of the Peace Association of Friends in America, from California Yearly Meeting and Pacific Coast Director of the American Peace Society, has arranged for twelve public debates on the preparedness question at various points in northern California, Oregon and Washington. Before this item reaches the readers of The American Friend the series will have closed, since the dates fixed are from June 2nd to June 14th. The question for debate was "Martial Preparedness, an Imperative Need of the United States."

The affirmative side of the question was taken by Capt. Wilson I. Davenny past assistant adjutant general of Spanish War Veterans; the negative of the question was supported by Robert C. Root.

We hope later to have some account of the results of this series of debates.

OSKALOOSA, IOWA.

Friends in Oskaloosa, Iowa, assumed a large share of the responsibility for calling a great union peace meeting in which all the churches of the city joined on Sunday, May 14th. Professor Clarence M. Case, of Penn College, was one of the speakers, presenting the program of the League to Enforce Peace. Other speakers discussed the following topics:

"Does the Monroe Doctrine Meet Modern Conditions?"
 "Our Emigration Policy."
 "Go Slow on Armament."

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

The twenty-fourth annual session of Oregon Yearly Meeting closed Tuesday, June 13, after a very profitable gathering, which terminated a very successful year. The various departments of work showed a degree of advance for the year that is very gratifying.

The visitors present from other Yearly Meetings included Thomas E. Jones, Field Secretary for the Young Friends work of the Five Years Meeting; Tennyson and Alice J. Lewis of Everett, Wash.; William E. Jones of Entiat, Wash.; Levi F. Cox of Winchester, Ind.; Lurana M. Terrell of Oskaloosa, Ia.; Joseph and Mary T. Sopher of Oskaloosa, Ia.; Harry Parry of Tacoma, Wash.; Mary R. Hornaday of Portland; Aquilla Binford of Western Yearly Meeting; Mahlon Perry of East Whittier, Calif., and Robert C. Root of Berkeley, Calif.

The evangelistic and church extension work for the past year has been very successful, with 474 claiming definite blessings in the meetings held, and 358 being added to the church.

Lindley A. Wells, who has been the yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work for some years, closes his work in this yearly meeting at this time. A hearty expression of appreciation was given him as he leaves. The work of this department is to be administered for the present by the executive committee of the board.

The subject of peace occupied a large place in the deliberations of the yearly meeting. Strong resolutions were adopted, which stated in clear terms the opposition of Friends to war and preparation for war, opposed military drill in the public schools, whether voluntary or compulsory, and denounced as tyrannous the compulsory drill in some of our state educational institutions, supported by taxation but requiring that a consistent Friend either violate his conscience or surrender his right to an education in the state school.

Earnest sympathy was expressed in the yearly meeting epistles for the Friends of London, Dublin and Canada Yearly Meetings, in the distresses caused by the present war, also for Iowa in the recent loss of her college building by fire.

The work of the young people was given a new impetus by the presence of Thomas E. Jones. Though the Christian Endeavor work has grown during the past year twice as fast, relatively, as has the yearly meeting, a goal was agreed upon for the coming year that will require very earnest and increasingly efficient work for its attainment.

The statistical reports were decidedly gratifying. Owing to an error last year, the reports show an apparent gain of only 171 for the year; but the actual gain is in excess of this, the actual net increase over last year being 201. The total membership for the yearly meeting is now 2,779.

The educational work of the yearly meeting has been very successful for the year. Greenleaf Academy has had the best year of its existence, and its building is taxed to its utmost capacity. The work of Pacific College has been very successful. The assistance given during the past year by the Friends in other yearly meetings is greatly appreciated, and the yearly meeting so expressed itself in the epistles, including a special greeting sent to Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

A special greeting was received from John Henry Douglas, and the yearly meeting sent him a letter of love and appreciation.

The yearly meeting took a very emphatic stand on the subject of prohibition, giving hearty and unanimous endorsement to a proposed amendment to the state constitution providing for the prohibition of the importation of, intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. The manufacture and sale are already prohibited.

The departments of literature, bible schools, home missions, foreign missions and systematic and proportionate giving presented good reports of their year's work, with stirring addresses on these subjects.

The evangelistic and devotional meetings were seasons in which many were helped to a higher life. These meetings were all well attended.

In spite of the stringency of the times on this coast, giving in money to the various causes was not neglected. In addition to the yearly meeting appropriations, nearly $100 was raised for the Christian Endeavor work, over $400 for the installing of a commercial department in the college, over $600 for the general evangelistic work of the yearly meeting, and other sums of smaller size for repairs and improvements to meeting houses in needy meetings, for the book and tract committee, etc. All indications point to a very successful year, under the blessing of God, for 1916-17.

ious instruction in the mission schools.

The safety of our missionaries at the Mexican border.

An early termination of the present turmoil, the cause of untold suffering and loss, which seriously hinders the Christian work so urgently needed and strongly desired by multitudes of the common people.

THE DES MOINES MISSION STUDY CLASS.

A member of the mission study class in Des Moines, described in these columns two weeks ago, writes us that the description we printed failed to give credit for the splendid work of the leader, Miss Gail Clark. Miss Clark herself wrote that article, which accounts for the omission. We are glad, however, to state that in the opinion of the members the success of the class was due largely to the untiring, thorough and skilful work of the leader. She was always well prepared and made the assignments for study and directed the discussions with exceptional skill. Her interest and enthusiasm from the study proved contagious.

If you failed to see the article in the issue of June 15th, entitled "A Study Class in Des Moines," we recommend your hunting up that number and reading the account.

AFRICA LECTURE IN USE

"Sabina, Ohio, June 19, 1916.

Friends' Board of Missions,
Richmond, Indiana.

Dear Friends:

We used the lecture on Africa last evening. Found the pictures very good. They gave the pleased congregation a better idea of what is being done at the stations than could be had by any other means. Enclosed is rental for slides, which are being returned by express.

Hoping they may do much good for the mission, Truly yours,

JOHN F. NELSON."

NOTE.—These slides and the accompanying lecture may be secured for an evening's use by any Friends' Meeting. Inquiries should be sent to the assistant secretary at the address shown at the top of this page. The Board charges a rental of one dollar, the user paying express charges.

MEXICO

No one can foretell what turn affairs in Mexico may have taken by the time this issue of The American Friend is published. As we write these words, however (on June 21), there seems but little hope of an early understanding between the de facto Mexican government and our own. Our missionaries at Matamoras and Victoria for some time have been aware of a growing state of suspicion and uncertainty and have been apprehensive of some sort of an outbreak.

Upon the vehement insistence of faithful Mexican friends, Solomon Tice reluctantly left Victoria on June 5th and came to Matamoras. It was then his hope to be able to return with Mrs. Tice after a fortnight.

The school work at Matamoras closed on June 7th. Sarah Charles left there on the 14th and expects to spend the vacation with her mother at Fountain City, Indiana. The latest word received at the Board of Missions office stated that Mr. Tice had gone to San Benito, Texas. Nancy L. Lee was left the only American worker at Matamoras. Some of the Mexican workers were staying with her in the Institute building.

The Board of Missions has arranged for practically our entire staff of American workers who have been assigned to Mexico to be ready to proceed to that field in the late summer or early autumn. Never were the common people of Mexico so hungry for the Gospel of Christ, and never did the doors of opportunity for presenting the Gospel message open so widely in our part of the field as now. We dare not delay our return to the field a day longer than is absolutely necessary. Let Friends, and all friends of Mexico increase rather than diminish their gifts and their prayers just now, to the end the Society of Friends may have funds and workers ready to enter the field again when the way opens.

NEBRASKA YEARLY MEETING.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting convened in its ninth annual assembly at Central City, Nebraska, on third day, the thirteenth of fifth month. Visiting Friends were present from other Yearly Meetings as follows: S. Edgar Nicholson and Thomas E. Jones of Indiana; Harry R. Keates, Pliny Fry, Richard Harworth, Charles Mesner and Will Reece of Iowa; Ray Lewis of California. "We believe the coming of these Friends to have been by the direct leading of the Holy Spirit. They have brought the helpful inspiring messages along the lines of evangelism, missions, education, peace, temperance, Bible Schools and young people's work, and have shown the great opportunities now open to Friends in all these departments of the world's work."

God has richly blessed our work the past year. There has been a total gain in membership of 206, but a net gain of only 50, owing to a revision of membership lists. However, some of this loss has been due to Friends removing to other Yearly Meetings.

The Pastoral, Evangelistic and Church Extension Department displayed a large map of our field and also a chart, which brought vividly to each one the amount of work accomplished by the various meetings. "This review of the past year's work showed growth in several lines. On our prayer calendar for last year we set a goal to reach at least five hundred souls for Christ. Our Evangelistic Superintendent reports that more than that number have been definitely blessed and we feel deeply grateful for this answer to our prayers.

Gospel teams in a number of our meetings and at Nebraska Central College have done splendid work.

The cause of education claimed prayerful attention. The Nebraska Central College Board and the Pastoral Evangelistic and Church Extension Board were upon their unanimous request, granted permission to enter into a united campaign to secure an endowment of $100,000 before the Five Years Meeting convenes in 1917. Efforts to secure this fund shall be pursued along the lines of endowment funds or notes, annuities, bequests or other legitimate methods. The income from such endowment shall be used by the two boards as nearly equally as possible, giving to each donor the privilege to designate a preference to which line of work the gift shall be devoted.

"When we survey the broad field which lies within the borders of our Yearly Meeting, see the need, and hear the many calls for workers, we are almost overwhelmed by the magnitude of the work before us. But trusting for wisdom and strength in Him who knoweth and understandeth all, we are determined to go forward to a more complete occupation of our vast territory."

During the rendition of the educational program a band of ten students sat on the platform. Each told of his consecration to the Lord for his field of work and told how Nebraska Central College had influenced him to enter into this state of consecration.

"The critical situation in the mission fields of the world was brought to us with new force. Clyde Roberts and his wife, two of our members, brought to us from Mexico a better realization of the needs of our southern neighbors." Clyde Roberts conducted a mission study class using as a text book, "Mexico today."

A "Pastor's Hour" was observed three evenings from seven to eight o'clock. Vital problems were discussed by different pastors and workers. This proved to be a very helpful feature of the week's work.

"We are praying and working for the success of the great temperance campaigns which are being waged this year in Nebraska and South Dakota and confidently look forward to national prohibition in 1920."

Theodore Foxworthy was reappointed as General Superintendent of the Pastoral, Evangelistic and Church Extension Work. Ray Lewis was appointed as Financial Agent to secure the joint endowment fund referred to above.

It was decided that our Yearly Meeting take half a page every two weeks in The American Friend and Kirby V. Bowen of Boulder, Colorado, was appointed Nebraska editor.

The Sabbath services were seasons of refreshing. The truth was presented in the spirit of love, fearlessly and with power. At the evening meeting a number of persons sought Christ in His cleansing and filling power. Many were the definite victories won in individual lives throughout the entire session of this Yearly Meeting. Under a deep sense of appreciation of the presence and power of our Heavenly Father we approached the closing moments of the meeting with praise for his rich blessings and kind remembrance of us in our work for Him.

ESTELLA FOXWORTHY.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONTEST

Sunday, May 28, marked the close of what was probably the most interesting and enthusiastic Sunday School contest ever conducted within Wilmington Yearly Meeting.

Dover and Chester, our largest rural schools, started the contest the first of last October, and it has been going on for eight months with ever-increasing interest. As was stated through these columns a few months ago, Chester meeting has about a hundred more members than Dover, while the average in the Bible Schools last year was 78 and 74, respectively. Knowing these facts, the schools, at the beginning, agreed that Chester should shoulder a handicap of fifteen every Sunday more than her smaller opponent. While it was not the intention of the schools at the beginning to go outside their immediate communities for scholars, people from adjoining communities were drawn in as the contest waged warmer and warmer.

The final week was a busy one and the final day a big one for both places. The workers from both camps scoured the territory around thoroughly for scholars and the official count registered 738 for Dover and 719 for Chester. The average attendance during the period of the contest was 145 for Chester and 131.8 for her opponent. From this it can be seen that Dover needed the handicap carried by her neighbor and until the final day the contest was in doubt every minute.

Dover won by the terms of the contest, but if her large neighbor had not accepted the handicap, her opponent would probably have won. The good feeling that was manifest throughout the contest still exists between the communities and they are arranging a picnic so that the members of the two schools may become better acquainted. The attendance since the close of the contest has been good.

FIVE YEARS MEETING, 1917

The Committee on Arrangements desires to draw the attention of Friends to the approaching Five Years Meeting in 1917, and requests suggestions from Friends as to the program, arrangements, topics for consideration, arrangements of sessions and general use of the time of the Meeting.

For the committee,

J. ELWOOD COX, Chairman,
High Point, N. C.

L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD,
Secretary.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

On this page, you will find a picture of the Christian Endeavor Society of Poughkeepsie, New York. They number ninety-six members in all, this includes sixty-seven active. These Endeavorers gave a reception to the Yearly Meeting when in session at Poughkeepsie, which was a grand success. D. H. Lewis is the pastor of the Meeting.

At North Carolina State Christian Endeavor Convention held in Charlotte June 2-4, High Point Friends Society won the Efficiency Banner and Guilford College Society came second. Friends have three members on the State Executive Committee, and come second only to the Presbyterian in the number of organizations. Friends of the South are getting into the Christian Endeavor work and making it mean something.

We are in receipt of an announcement of the Young Friends Assembly of North Carolina Yearly Meeting. They have outlined a strong program, and the expenses are within reach of all. We urge all young Friends of the South to attend this gathering. It will be held at Guilford College, August 14-21. Any other Friends who happen to be near, or who could arrange to be in attendance should do so. For further information, correspond with Fred E. Smith, Greensboro, N. C.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

The final announcements and programs for the coming Conference at Cedar Lake are now ready for distribution. They contain enrollment or application blanks. Send to the Young Friends Board, Conference Department, for copies, and any other information.

Opportunity is offered delegates, preferably girls, to work for their board and lodging, which would mean that they would help in the serving of the meals for an hour and one half each meal time, or four hours and thirty minutes each day. We have three vacancies left. This offer holds good only one week more. If you wish to reduce your expenses at the Conference, this is your chance. No application for this will be considered after this week.

It will not be possible to prepare meals at camp fires this year.

Enrollments are coming in. Have you sent yours? Assignments will be made from July 1 to August 1.

STUDY CLASS.

Study Classes That Supplement Other Young People's Organizations.

Young People's Organizations such as Christian Endeavor, Fellowship Groups, or other regular meetings of Young Friends may be greatly strengthened by introducing a Study Class. Because Christian Endeavor is the most common organization of Young Friends, and because it is easy to adapt the Study Class to other groups, these remarks will be confined to the Study Class within the Christian Endeavor Prayer Meeting.

The aim of the supplementary Study Class is the same as that of the Independent Class. It also strengthens the regular meeting in spiritual power, breaks the monotony of the ordinary Christian Endeavor routine, and fills the society with spiritual objective.

RALLY AT OGDEN, OHIO.

One of the most successful rallies that has been held in Wilmington Yearly Meeting occurred at Ogden May 27 under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Union. The evening before Secretary Vandersall spoke to a crowd mostly local, at the same place, on the "Ideal Endeavorer." This meeting was presided over by Lewis C. Moone, the Secretary-treasurer of the Union.

The Convention proper was called together at 10:15 a. m. Saturday by the president, Bernice E. Hawkins, who conducted the song and prayer service. The societies of the Yearly Meeting were called and representatives were present with proper response from every society except Londonderry in Ross County, and those in the Tennessee Quarterly Meeting. Henry Cox, who was present, gave a first-class report of the Christian Endeavor Society at Puerto Padre, Cuba.

Several years ago a banner in white and red, bearing the inscription, "W. Y. M. C. E. Union" was presented to the society making the best showing toward standards set up each year. So far three societies have held it: Highland, Wilmington Intermediate, and New Burlington. This year the requirements were as follows, New Burlington standing highest with seventy-one points:

Banner Requirements.

Societies which are candidates for the banner must have

1. Representatives present
 - a. Official delegates (2 for every thirty members or fraction thereof) 5 points.
 - b. Each other member present counts one point.
2. a. Missionary offering made: Standard; one cent per week per member for the year10 points
 - b. Yearly Meeting dues ($1) paid secretary2 points
3. Favorable answers to the following:
 - a. Do your officers faithfully do their work?
 - b. Do you have regular committee meetings?
 - c. Do you have regular business sessions?
 - d. Do you have regular roll call meetings?
 - e. Do you have special Missionary meetings?
 - f. Have you made an increase in membership the past year? (Yes to 'f' counts 5 points, to all the others, 3)8 points
4. Number of Expert Endeavors, each counts10 points

The addresses of the rally were particularly fine. Stanley B. Vandersall, Ohio's general secretary, supplied all the Christian Endeavor "pep" imaginable. Ethel Hawkins, our Yearly Meeting Y. F. A. secretary, brought a message close home to us in our own field and Thomas E. Jones thrilled his hearers with a challenge to consecrate time and talents for the great cause for which the Master suffered death. The attention was perfect and old and young alike were inspired.

The convention numbered about 175 in the morning and perhaps 300 in the afternoon. This is a splendid showing in consideration of the fact that closing affairs at the college detained several and that many Endeavorers in this locality are farmers and this was their busy season.

PICNIC AND VISITATION DAY.

The picnic and visitation day held by the members of Wabash Quarterly Meeting at the Whites Institute, Thursday, June 15, proved to be a most enjoyable affair, and the day will be long remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present as a time when the members of the four meetings were brought together in pleasant association. It will indeed mark a bright spot in the history of Wabash Quarterly Meeting, and those having the arrangements for the day in charge are to be congratulated that their plans met with such great success. A. J. Furstenberger of Wabash, Aaron Napier of Amboy and Clyde Thorne and Grace Hobbs of New Holland were the committee who planned for the affair.

The day dawned bright and beautiful and as the noon hour approached one could see a large company of people assembled on the beautiful institute grounds getting ready for the sumptuous picnic dinner. These people had come with well-filled baskets from New Holland, Amboy, South Union, Wabash and Marion. One felt himself at once in a good atmosphere when he entered the grounds where these people had assembled in happy association.

Following the picnic dinner, the time was spent in visiting the different buildings belonging to the institute—these having been thrown open to visitors during this day. Later in the afternoon, after the people had spent some time visiting among themselves and in a general good time, a delightful program was given, a platform having been erected on the grounds for such purpose.

The following interesting program was given, A. J. Furstenberger having charge of the same:

Song, "Saved by Power Divine"—Children of Institute.
Prayer—Clyde Thorne.
Song, "America, I Love You"—Boys of Institute.
Reading, "An Old Man's Story"—Lillian Watson.
Song, "Jesus Meek and Gentle"—Three Girls of the Institute.
Address—Charles Hiatt.

Song, "After"—Three Girls of the Institute.

A short talk on the work of the Institute by Mr. Harkness, Superintendent of the Institute.

Closing Song, "All Hail the Power."

This program was listened to with much interest. The singing by the children of the Institute was much enjoyed. They show good training, and sang as if they enjoyed it. Charles Hiatt gave an excellent address, in which he compared the Whites Institute to "a child that grew and waxed strong in spirit." He gave a little history of the Institute, and showed how it had developed under the careful management of those having had it in charge and especially its present superintendent and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Harkness, who have been working for the past several years so efficiently and successfully with the children. Mr. Hiatt dwelt on the thought that the members of the Friends churches of the Yearly Meeting should know more about the work of the Institute and should be grateful for such an institution. He addressed a few words to both the boys and girls of the Institute, encouraging them to make the most of their opportunities—to make men and women worth-while in the world.

It was estimated that there were about five hundred, including children of Institute and employed, who listened to the program in the afternoon. There are now about two hundred and twenty-five children in the Institute.

Following the program there was a ball game between Quarterly Meeting boys and White Institute boys. The day proved an enjoyable and profitable one, indeed, and it is hoped that other such days may be planned by these meetings in the future.

PASTOR WANTED

The Friends' church at Leesburg, Ohio, wishes to make known through the columns of The American Friend that they want to secure the services of a man to act as pastor for next year, beginning September 1. For further information address Maggie M. Huff, Secretary of the Pastoral Committee, Leesburg, Ohio.

ERRATUM.

In the obituary notices of June 8 it should be stated that P. L. Scott was a devoted member of New Salem Monthly Meeting, Howard County, Indiana, instead of New Sharon.

Be so rich in God that you can afford to do without everything else.—B. M. Adams.

CHURCH AT WORK

Baltimore, Md. (Light Street)—An interesting series of meetings was held at Light Street meeting house from June 4 to 13 by Eli Reece and a quartet of young men from the Cleveland Bible Institute. Their beautiful singing and earnest testimonies were very helpful. The attendance and interest were good from the very first. Four have applied for membership with Friends.

Washington, D. C.—The Fellowship Union is a social organization connected with Washington Monthly Meeting and has been in existence for more than twenty years. The membership, however, is not confined to Friends. The Fellowship Union Committee is arranging a lecture course for the coming year, to begin in October, the aim being to have a course of at least eight lectures (illustrated when practicable), entertaining, instructive, religious, scientific, musical. The Monthly Meeting stamped the project with its approval and has appointed two members of the meeting as co-operating members of the committee. The committee welcomes suggestions from anyone as to speakers and subjects and solicits correspondence with the view of arranging a program for the coming year. Communications can be addressed to Beatrice R. Hunt, chairman, 1229 Park Road, or to J. Edgar Hiatt, 3116 13th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

On the evening of June 14, the Cleveland Bible Institute quartet gave an entertained at the Washington meeting house under the auspices of the Fellowship Union. The entertainment consisted of songs, stereopticon views of the Institute, its work and some of its fields of labor. The entertainment furnished was one of exceptional interest. Eli Reece, of Greensboro; N. C., the father of the leader of the quartet, accompanied them and all attended our mid-week prayer meeting the following evening.

Newmarket, Canada—Another exceptionally good Monthly Meeting was held on June 8. It was felt to be a time of great spiritual uplift. Several questions of importance were before the meeting, among them being the matter of holding a series of revival services early in 1917. The question took hold of the meeting and is receiving consideration. Reports of work were very encouraging. On Sunday, the 18th, the Foresters had a special church parade and a good service resulted. An appropriate address was given by the pastor and special singing added much to the attractiveness of the service. A collection in aid of the Friends' Ambulance Work resulted in $28.00 being taken up.

Dublin, Indiana—After last Yearly Meeting, Friends decided to make extensive repairs on the parsonage. Conditions were revealed, however, which led us to destroy a large part of the building and erect a new one in its place at a cost of approximately $1200.00. We now have a cosy, comfortable eight-room home for the pastor that would be a credit to any meeting. On the evening of May 14, E. Howard Brown, of Westfield, gave his illustrated address on "War Against War" before a large and appreciative audience. During the winter a couple of young Friends took up the study of Friends' history as outlined by the Board of Young Friends Activities. On the evening of June 11 the meeting was in their charge. Ten-minute discussions were given on the following subjects: "George Fox and Margaret Fell," "William Penn," "The Quakers in Wild America," "The Friends' Communion," "The Friends' Baptism," and "Elizabeth Fry."

East Main Street, Richmond, Ind.—The Quaker Girls' Quartet of East Main Street Friends' meeting gave a sacred concert at the church on Sunday evening, June 18. The platform was decorated with palms, ferns and roses. The program consisted of quartet numbers, a solo, a duet and a trio, also a reading and remarks by the pastor. The attendance was large and each number was well rendered. A free will offering was taken. The members of the quartet are Ruth Hadley, Mary Butler, Mildred Edwards and Gertrude Clark, with Alice Newman as accompanist. The quartet is open to engagements and persons desiring information should write to the chairman of the music committee, Harry B. Reeves, 123 North 18th Street, Richmond, Indiana.

Seattle, Wash.—The Friends meeting at Seattle decided not to participate in the preparedness parade in that city on June 10. The following letter in part was sent to the preparedness committee by Robert E. Pretlow, pastor of the Friends meeting:

"Throughout their history the Quakers have stood for peace, and for those forms of constructive service which make for human betterment, as opposed to the savagery and moral degradation inseparable from militarism.

"We believe that cultivation of the military spirit is clearly in direct violation of the whole spirit and teaching of Jesus, and is not only contrary to true religion, but in opposition to the best and highest patriotism.

"While recognizing the sincerity and high motives of many who think differently, we confidently believe that their methods are mistaken, and that the tendency which they foster constitutes a danger to American ideals and liberties greater than the sum of all external dangers from which they seek to protect us.

"As earnest Christians and sincere patriots we are compelled, respectfully, to decline your invitation."

Alba, Mo.—The meeting here has extended to their pastor, A. L. Knight, a unanimous invitation to serve the meeting another year. His time during the past two years has been divided between Alba and Fairview meetings.

Haviland, Kansas—Children's Day was observed at Haviland on June 11. A good program was rendered and a collection of $100.00 was taken for Haviland Academy. Commencement exercises at Haviland Academy were held at the Friends' church on May 26. The class address was given by F. Olen Hunt, of Fowler and was much appreciated. There was only one graduate, Myrtle Ross. The subject of her oration was "The Harmony of Life." Professor E. E. Hadley expressed some excellent thoughts on the breaking up that must follow all commencements. Professor Frank H. Clark will be in charge of the academy the coming year.

Liberal, Kans.—O. B. Ong, a Friends' minister of Pasadena, California, conducted a three-weeks' meeting here with a special burden and concern for the church. He came with a message that reminded us of the ministry of the early Friends. His teaching on the definite work of grace in sanctification was clear and convincing. People came for miles around. Seventy-two knelt at the altar for sanctification and conversion. About the first of March we were favored with a two-weeks' meeting conducted by Eli Reece of North Carolina. His preaching was clear and convincing and many were definitely blessed and the church was greatly strengthened.

Greensboro, N. C.—For several weeks the Ashboro Street Friends have been holding their meetings for worship in the Bible School room while the auditorium has been undergoing a complete redecoration. The room is now finished with a beam ceiling, tinted walls and a new indirect lighting system, all in keeping with the true Quaker ideals of simplicity, yet its effect is truly beautiful. The reopening service was held on June 11 with a large and appreciative audience. Dr. Thomas Newlin, President of Guilford College, preached a most excellent sermon in the morning and the pastor, Fred E. Smith, in the evening.

Springfield, N. C.—We were pleased to have Dr. Thomas Newlin, president of Guilford College, with us on June 4. His splendid message was taken from The Song of Solomon 1:6, "They made me the keeper of the vineyards but mine own vineyard have I not kept."

On the evening of June 11 our peace contest was held. Seven young men and six young women participated in this exercise, which continued for one and a half hours. The successful contestants were Dovie Hayworth, whose subject was "The War God" and Luther Johnson, whose subject was "The Lesson of the War in Europe." It was felt that each speaker deserved honorable mention. Plans are being made for sending some of these young people to other meetings to carry their messages of peace. The judges of the contest were N. C. English, Mary Petty and John J. Blair.

Carmel, Indiana—Carmel Quarterly Meeting was held June 10 and 11. Ministers in attendance were Enos Harvey, Daisy Barr, Rufus P. King, Austin Osborn, Claude James, Gertrude Reinier, Lewis E. Stout, Jehu Reagan, Sarah J. King, Flora Holliday and Mr. Hobbs of the M. E. church. A real spiritual uplift came to our Quarterly Meeting and much good was done in the Master's name. Between the meeting for worship and the business meeting on Saturday, dinner was served in the new basement and the social hour seemed to be enjoyed by all. It was one of the most largely attended and most interesting occasions which Carmel Quarterly Meeting has experienced for many years. The message on Sabbath morning was brought by Enos Harvey, Yearly Meeting Superintendent.

Georgetown, Illinois—Lyman G. Co-sand, who has very acceptably filled the place of pastor at Georgetown since October 1st of last year, has been retained for another year. The work of the church, Sabbath School and Endeavor Society has prospered under his untiring efforts. A feature of the pastoral year has been the unity of the churches of the town, all the denominations having worked together in harmony. The ministry has been of such a nature as to instruct and edify the membership.

Noblesville, Ind.—Our pastor, Gertrude M. Reinier, has tendered her resignation, to take effect September 1. She has served our meeting faithfully for four years and it will be hard to fill her place. She is undecided what she will do the coming year. The beneficent society of our meeting observed its twenty-fifth anniversary. During this time it has grown from six members to seventy and through its efforts more than $4000 have been raised and expended for church purposes. This organization has been one of the most fruitful elements of Noblesville meeting and has shown its strength in cottage prayer meetings, family visiting and in many other ways aside from the financial benefit of the church.

Westfield, Indiana—The sessions of Westfield Quarterly Meeting, held at this place on June 3 and 4, were sessions of divine favor. The attendance at the business session on Saturday was unusually large, and the business was transacted in the spirit of harmony. E. Howard Brown, pastor at this place, preached a very strong sermon on "Practical Christianity." He is so well liked by the local congregation that his services have been engaged for another year from the first of next September. Upon occasions when he is called away from Westfield over the Sabbath, his wife attends to the ministerial duties, for which she is well qualified. June 11 was Children's Day and the regular hour of service was taken up with a most excellent program by and for the children. A dinner was served on the lawn, to which all were invited. An afternoon meeting was held at two o'clock, at which time Howard Brown gave us another good sermon with blackboard illustrations. In the evening he gave an interesting stereopticon discourse concerning the lives and services of our most eminent composers of sacred songs, a number of which—with pictures of the authors—were thrown upon the screen and were sung by the audience. Occasions like these, we believe, will minister to the social and spiritual benefit of the church and community.

NEWS NOTES

Professor W. O. Mendenhall, of Earlham College, will spend a part of his summer vacation at Chicago University.

Professor Harlow Lindley, of Earlham College, will spend the summer in the interests of the Indiana State Centennial movement.

Albert I. Bailey, of Wilmington, Ohio, was called upon recently at his home by a company of his business friends and presented with a loving cup, the occasion being his seventieth birthday.

Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, attended the meeting at Toronto on May 28, bringing helpful messages both in the meeting and in the Bible School. He was also at Yonge Street Quarterly Meeting.

We have received the forty-ninth annual report of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association of England. It presents an interesting document of seventy pages, together with cover, and is full of valuable information.

Murray S. Kenworthy, received the degree of Bachelor of Theological Science (S. T. B.) from the Harvard Divinity School last week. Having completed his work at Harvard, he is hoping to enter pastoral service for the coming year.

The Evangelistic Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting requests that all who have not sent in the statement of the number of families in the local meeting having some form of daily family worship shall do so not later than July 1. The committee also sends out a pastoral letter of friendly counsel and advice that appears to be timely.

The Young Friends Assembly of North Carolina Yearly Meeting will be held at Guilford College August 14-21. The Assembly is held for the purpose of training efficient church workers. An efficient program has been prepared and we note that Elbert Russell, Thomas E. Jones, Edgar T. Hole, Thomas Newlin, L. L. Hobbs, L. W. McFarland, Sylvester Newlin and George J. Welker are among the speakers.

A committee appointed by Stella and Shawnee Quarterly Meetings in Oklahoma recently visited Oklahoma City to consider a request made by the managers of the city mission, that Friends should support two of their members who are to work in harmony with the city mission of that place.

On June 14 a Friends' rally was held in the First Presbyterian Church at Oklahoma City at the time of the State Christian Endeavor Convention. About thirty were present. Quite a number of Friends have moved to Oklahoma City, some having joined other churches, while others have remained Friends. These have expressed a desire that a Friends' meeting shall be organized there.

THE IOWA PAGE

C. E. DEPARTMENT

The Intermediate and Senior societies at Oskaloosa are meeting together for the summer.

The Executive Committee of our Union is trying to make Yearly Meeting of special interest to the young people. The vesper services will be conducted by Dr. Clarence M. Case, who will discuss the meaning and message of Quakerism. It will be a course well worth hearing.

Begin to plan the stunts for your Quarterly Meeting for the evening of the picnic. We wish to make that occasion one of happiness and good fellowship.

Other plans are being made and will be mentioned later.

Have you appointed your delegates to the State C. E. Convention, to be held at Sioux City June 27-29? They are expecting five hundred delegates and ask each Society to send some, so they may not be disappointed.

Be sure to watch the page of the Young Friends' Board for interesting things about the Cedar Lake Conference. Iowa should have a good delegation. Boost for at least one from each Quarterly Meeting.

The year is almost over and we have not nearly raised the amount of money set as our goal by the resolutions committee. It is possible that some of this has been collected and not turned in. Please send all your remittances promptly to Cassa Conover, 712 North Market Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

FIELD NOTES.

Cummings, Iowa—Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held at Cummings June 3 and 4, the meeting on ministry and oversight being held on Saturday morning. At the regular Quarterly Meeting session Isaac N. Rich, of Marshalltown, brought the message. During the noon hour a bountiful dinner was served on the lawn of the parsonage. The business meeting in the afternoon was very interesting. Isaac N. Rich preached again on Saturday evening and Sunday morning, while Richard R. Newby preached on Sunday evening. Taylor Guthrie, the pastor at Cummings, and his wife helped in every way to make the Quarterly Meeting helpful. Several Friends from this place attended throughout and report a very enjoyable occasion.

WILMINGTON COMMENCEMENT

Commencement Day, on June 15, marked the forty years existence of Wilmington College. Ellison R. Purdy gave the invocation while Judge D. D. Woodmansee of Cincinnati gave the class address. Twenty-one Bachelor's degrees were presented to as many young people by President Edwin Jay and one degree of Master of Science to A. C. Briggs, a member of the college faculty. After a basket dinner on the campus the old students' union met in the auditorium, where a short program of music and talks was carried out. Some of the old college days were recalled and the occasion was a most enjoyable one.

Shakespearean day, on Tuesday, was a perfect one. The pageant, given by practically the whole student body on the campus, was splendid beyond description. "Midsummer Night's Dream" was given at night in the auditorium. The campus was always crowded with people during the afternoon, as was the big auditorium at night.

The alumni association met on Wednesday evening, which was followed by a largely-attended banquet. A program of toasts and music was carried out, with Mary Mills as toastmistress. According to custom, the senior class presented the college with a gift, the one this year being a contribution of $100.00. It is understood that the money will be applied towards the purchase of new seats for the study room. President Llewelyn, who is to succeed President Jay, according to a plan perfected before the latter was elected, a year ago, was present for the commencement exercises. He is a former Clinton county boy, who has gone to the top, educationally.

WHITTIER COMMENCEMENT

June 4th to 7th marked the Commencement occasion for the most successful year in the history of Whittier College.

President Absalom Rosenberger gave the baccalaureate sermon Sunday afternoon at four o'clock in the Friends church. Monday was Senior Class day, which was thoroughly enjoyed by the graduating class and its friends. On Tuesday the Alumni had a very pleasant day listening in the morning to a most inspiring address from Andrew F. Mitchell, followed by a luncheon and in the afternoon a business meeting and a ball game.

Wednesday morning at 10:30 the regular commencement exercises were held. Dr. Daniel F. Fox of Pasadena, gave a splendid address on "The Factors of Life," an address which will be long remembered by those who heard it. Doctor Fox is the strongest advocate of Peace and opponent of Militarism in Southern California. President Rosenberger then on behalf of the college conferred the bachelor's degree on a fine class of twenty-one young people, the largest class yet graduated from Whittier College.

Dr. W. V. Coffin, president of the College Board, conferred (in absentia) the degree of Master of Arts upon Prof. Wm. P. Trueblood of Friends University, and the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Charles E. Tebbetts, a former president of the college. Rounds of applause were given by the large audience when Dr. Coffin revealed some secrets. He read a telegram from Penn College, which bore the news that they were at this commencement conferring upon Mrs. Mabel H. Douglas of the Whittier college faculty the degree of Master of Arts and upon President Rosenberger the degree of Doctor of Laws. A letter from Friends University stated that they also at this time were conferring the LL.D. degree upon President Rosenberger.

Friends of Whittier College will be glad to know that Absalom Rosenberger has agreed to stay as president for a term of at least five years. The close of this year finds students, alumni, faculty and board all working in splendid harmony with prospects for an even greater year next year.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

July 9.

Subject—The Thessalonian Christians.

Lesson—I. Thess. 2:17-20; 4:13-18.

Golden Text—For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him. I. Thess. 4:14.

The first letter of Paul to the church at Thessalonica is one of the oldest documents in the New Testament—some scholars say it is the oldest, others think Galatians a few weeks or months older. At any rate, it is older by a number of years than any one of the Gospels, and should be of interest to us as indicating the way by which the doctrines of the church became fixed for future reference.

The epistle, or letter, as we would call it, reveals much concerning Paul's methods of life and conduct while in that city. It also shows us the deep concern which the apostle had for his converts. His practical teachings are a clear indication of his great desire that their Christianity should be more than a mere profession of faith in Jesus as the Messiah. The Bible student should carefully re-read the entire epistle so that the message as a whole may stand clearly before him.

With Paul evangelism and doctrine were closely associated; we might also very properly add to these his concern for the moral welfare of his converts. Paul, like our missionaries in new territory, was required to present the gospel in all its phases; no one of them could be omitted. It is true that the Jewish element had set a higher moral standard than that which the rest of the world observed, but the fact remains that it was necessary for the apostle to teach his converts all the phases of the Christian life and doctrine.

One of the earliest problems which the Christian apostle had to consider was that of the after life. Christianity was a salvation religion. It professed to save men from something; we usually term that something Sin. It is not the purpose of this lesson to say what that term meant to the early Christian. Christianity was also said to save men to something. Now what was it? Here we enter a controversial field, and space does not permit a full discussion. The Jews had a well-developed conception of a future life, and how the living and the dead were to be brought into that life. They (the Pharisees) also had outlined in considerable detail just how people were to live in the life beyond.

The Greek members of Paul's congregations were also more or less familiar with conceptions of a future life. The "mystery" sect among the Greeks taught a union with certain of the gods—depending upon which sect was holding forth—a union, obtained through their ceremonies which would secure for the initiated one salvation from a hell of mud—as one sect preached—to a heaven of delight.

The philosophers also taught—some of them—that there was salvation for certain souls, those souls, of course, which had been prepared through their teachings. All agreed that this life was to a large extent, a failure. Happiness was to be obtained, if at all, in the unknown beyond. Paul had been asked to explain the Christian position regarding this great theme, and in this letter to the Christians at Thessalonica he undertakes to set their doubts at rest concerning certain phases of that great theme. We must not suppose that this is his full teaching this discussion only touches certain misunderstood points. His main teaching had no doubt been given them earlier when he was with them in person.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC. July 9.

"The Consecration of Purpose." Acts 11:19-23. (Consecration Meeting.)

"A great purpose is cumulative; and, like a great magnet, it attracts all that is kindred. On the prairies of South America there grows a flower that always inclines in the same direction. If a traveler loses his way and has neither chart nor compass, by turning to this flower, he will find a guide on which he can rely; for no matter how it rains or how the winds blow, its leaves point to the north. So there are many men whose purposes are so well known, that no matter what hindrances come, you can tell almost to a certainty where they will come out.

A healthy, definite purpose is a remedy for a thousand ills which attend aimless lives. Discontent and dissatisfaction flee before a definite purpose. Education, genius, talent, industry, will-power, nothing, can take the place of an all-absorbing purpose. The purposeless life must ever be a failure. What good are all these powers, these faculties, unless we can use them for a purpose? A man without a purpose never leaves his mark upon the world. He is lost in the crowd.

One great secret of Paul's power lay in his strong purpose. "This one-thing-I-do" is written in all his works. The quenchless zeal of his mighty purpose burned its way down through the centuries and the hearts of men are fired with its contagion. Daniel, when but a youth, "purposed in his heart;" and Solomon says, "Let thine eyes look straight before thee, ponder the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established. Turn not to the right hand, nor to the left." The world always makes way for the man with a will, a consecrated purpose. What a grand sight is that of a youth, fired with a great purpose, dominated by one unwavering aim, going straight to his goal, surmounting obstacles which dishearten others, as though they were stepping stones!

THOMAS HIATT.

Thomas Hiatt, son of Amos and Lydia Hiatt, was born on a farm between Samantha and Careytown, O., March 16, 1835, and died at Leesburg, O., February 5, 1916, aged 80 years, 10 months and 19 days. He was married to Caroline Holmes March 20, 1856, with whom he walked life's pathway for over 60 years. He leaves to mourn his going away, the widow, three sisters and three brothers.

Thomas Hiatt grew to manhood in the church, his parents having come into the Friends Church by request, bringing their minor children with them; and we believe it could be said of him, "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures." But being possessed with keen mental powers and an inquiring turn of mind, he sought for the truth along intellectual lines, but there came a day when, in the quietness of his own home, while reading and meditating, God showed him that "Man by searching could not find God." And there with the humbleness that characterized this man of God, we believe he could say with Paul, "It pleased God to reveal His Son in me"—and from henceforth, "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain."

The church early recognized the fact of his call to the ministry and recorded him, and for over half a century he has been proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ.

He was broad in his conception of truth and was able to grasp in no small degree the magnitude of the world's need, and he glorified in the power of the gospel of the Son of God to meet that need. He took an active interest in all the problems that confronted the church, especially the subject of peace, his last message to the church being a letter addressed to Quarterly Meeting (written just one week before his death), in which he earnestly urged Friends to reaffirm their testimony on Peace as opposed to all war, and to communicate the same to our Representative in Congress. He was ever on the alert to better conditions where he lived, and succeeded.

The Toiler and the Christ

By GEORGE W. PHILLIPS

O Master, I have labored all the night,
And, as the watches dragged their lonely flight,
Wearied with toil, I plied the watery main;
I labored, failed, and failing, toiled again;
And now, behold, for all the labor fraught,
An empty boat, lo, I have toiled for naught!

And dost Thou bid me launch upon the deep?—
Me, on whose feverish eye the touch of sleep
Now gently presses?—Me, whose calloused hands
Appeal a respite brief from toil's demands?—
Me, on whose soul is fixed the cruel curse
Of disappointment?—Must I now rehearse
The fruitless toil of midnight?—Such as me,
Bid'st Thou launch out again upon the sea?

Thou sayest, Enough. These lips shall wake no more

Discordant murmurs on the peaceful shore.
Thy will unerring all I ask to know;
Back to the task abandoned, Lord, I go.
Let failure freeze my heart; let toil benumb
These lagging members; let the blood-drops come
Slow oozing from these blistered palms—I brave
Them all. Again my craft shall seek the wave.
The oars, the nets, the toil, the pain are mine;
The pity, comfort, strength, O Christ, be Thine.

The March of the Martyrs

Suggested by the Preparedness Parade

By CHARLES V. VICKREY

I am sitting at my office window on the ninth floor of the Metropolitan building, overlooking Fifth Avenue and Madison Square. It is seven o'clock on Saturday evening. The preparedness parade is passing. It has been passing the reviewing stand in front of my window since early morning. It will continue passing until the city falls asleep late tonight—a continuous stream of humanity, twenty abreast. The sound of patriotic airs has been unceasing since eight o'clock. Scores, hundreds of brass bands—thousands, tens of thousands of marchers. One cannot even count them without recourse to the multiplication table. Life—treasure—ineestimable wealth—loved ones are passing.

A rifle shot rings out—no, it doesn't, but suppose it does—a man drops dead. He is somebody's friend and brother. Within a few hours the city, the state and the nation know it and are horrified by the murder.

Yet if every man and woman in that long procession were shot dead in his tracks the moment he passed the reviewing stand, shots ringing faster than the ear could distinguish them, men falling faster than their bodies could possibly be removed from before the ever on-coming multitude and if the merciless slaughter were kept up from early morning until late at night, every hour, minute and second of the day and evening—and if it were resumed again tomorrow morning and kept up during the church services and throughout the Sabbath day until the churches are again emptied in the evening and if, insatiable, the slaughter began again with Monday's rising sun, continuing relentlessly throughout the day into the night—the imagination cannot carry the load—all this would not equal the sacrifice of innocent non-combatant life, from massacre alone, during the past twelve months in Armenia. That awful waste of life, however, is but the beginning of the tragedy.

Again let the procession start, this time composed of widows and orphans who loved their husbands and fathers as we love ours; widows and children left not only comfortless, but penniless—driven from their homes, robbed of their personal possessions, frequently stripped of their clothing, lacking food—let this second division of the procession begin on Tuesday morning, again walking twenty abreast and as rapidly as their enfeebled, ill-nourished bodies will permit—all day Tuesday they march past the reviewing stand, and all day Wednesday and Thursday and Friday—and a second Saturday and all day Sunday of the second week the weary march continues, no person passing twice. The prosperous occupants of the reviewing stand would faint from exhaustion and hunger before this multitude could possibly pass. And yet a full nine days of the most rapid marching practicable would not be sufficient for the passing of the number of our fellow-men who, we are told on good authority, have been sacrificed to the sword, famine, pestilence, outrage and deportation in Western Asia.

Thousands, even hundreds of thousands are gone beyond our power to help, but a multitude yet remains; at present banished from their lands and homes, huddled in refugee camps, absolutely dependent for food and shelter upon the bounty and charity of their fellow-Christians in other lands.

By a turn in the fortunes of war, a considerable portion of their land has now been wrenched from the possession of their persecutors. They may now return to the site of their former homes, but houses have been pillaged, lands are barren, they require grain both for daily bread and for seed with which to replant the fields. Grain and implements can be purchased at neighboring ports. Money cabled at once will enable our missionaries and United States Consuls to supply them with grain in time to plant this year's crop and to secure a harvest next autumn.

The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief is organized to solicit and forward funds for this purpose. Individual members of the committee pay all expense of transmission, thus allowing the forwarding of one hundred cents of every dollar direct to the work for which it is contributed. Checks may be made payable to Charles R. Crane, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Additional information will gladly be sent upon request.

New York City.

The power of God's Holy Spirit means a hopeful ministry and a joyful, peaceful life. St. Paul knew what perplexities and problems were, and when he closed that letter to the Roman Church he wrote: "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, in the power of the Holy Spirit." We need a hopeful ministry, a joy-filled life, a peace which means poise, an abundant and abounding life which expresses the power of the indwelling Spirit of God.—John Timothy Stone.

A Greater Quakerism

The Five Years Meeting of 1912 concerned itself largely with technique and organism. It brought promise of larger things for Quakerism through an enlarged scope of activities and by extending the machinery of the church. It sought to grow through the use of externals, taking it for granted presumably that the life of the church was taking care of itself and that it only needed fresh opportunities of expression.

The Five Years Meeting of 1917 should direct its attention less to technique, except as a simplification of machinery will conduce to greater efficiency, and concern itself more with the character of our denominational life, and the actual conditions under which as a religious body we are striving to maintain our place in the religious world. There are problems which concern us fundamentally, but which as Friends we have not yet dared to face in any adequate way, and we cannot afford to permit our natural optimism to becloud our vision of things as they are. Introspection is not always wholesome, but under proper directions and undertaken for a proper purpose it becomes a corrective force that should not be ignored.

The character of our worship and the relation of the pastoral element thereto is a problem of fundamental importance to our denominational existence. Through force of apparent necessity Friends for more than thirty years have been endeavoring to engraft the pastoral idea upon a somewhat uncongenial and unwelcome stock. It is our conviction that taking things as they were and are, there has been no other course to take. In many sections it was a question of providing adequate pastoral oversight or facing certain denominational extinction. Yet in the face of such exigencies, it cannot be said that the church as yet has given any large amount of attention to the shaping of the pastoral policy or toward the development of a satisfactory pastoral system.

In too large a degree the pastoral idea has been allowed to drift, contributing all too little of value here and there to denominational efficiency and spiritual power. In not a few places there are tendencies that must be deplored, wherein a programmed service has robbed worship of its freshness, and turned the holy sacraments of prayer and testimony and ministry into formal occasions of religious entertainment.

We are not condemning the pastoral idea. Our appeal is that the church shall endeavor to give it direction as a whole and make it an element of greater power by adapting it to the Quaker idea and to Quaker necessities. In connection therewith the church should give renewed attention to the character and equipment of its ministry. If much of our ministry is below the best standards, it is more the fault of the church than of our ministers who have found few standards of efficiency to guide them. The church can no longer hold itself guiltless if for any reason it fails to face this issue squarely, for an efficient and well equipped ministry is fundamental to denominational growth. But a discussion of the issue will be valueless if we are not bold enough to fix the standards and provide the equipment essential for a more successful ministry.

The relationship of our colleges and academies to the life and work of the denomination is a vital one that needs attention. It is not enough that we have institutions that are Friendly in name. They must be such in fact, and must contribute directly, both to the religious and intellectual upbuilding of the church, if they would fulfill their highest mission. But even here responsibility lies with the church more than with the college, if there be delinquencies in this direction, for the obligation is upon the church to make the college a contributing source of strength and power to all the departmental work of the church. The first duty of the Quaker college should be to the church of which it is a part, not for sectarian purposes, but for the sake of the firmer grip which an educated and cultured church membership may have upon the social conditions of human life.

Finally, the Five Years Meeting should take serious counsel concerning its attitude toward our young people. Through the efforts of the Young Friends Board, a commendable zeal for the welfare of Quakerism is being developed far and wide among our young people. Have they found the welcome which it is their right to expect? Of course all Friends rejoice at the many evidences of life among young Friends, but as much responsibility rests upon the church to open the door for our youth and to find methods of assimilating them into the working organism of the church, as rests upon the young people to find their place in the service of the whole body.

These and other problems are an essential part of the problem of a greater Quakerism. The time is at hand when we must face the issues and refuse to be turned aside for any considerations of policy or traditionalism. A greater Quakerism is only possible if we build for it with a faithful regard for the mission to which we are called.

As a religious body we need to remember always that it is only the worth while things that count. Never was there greater need that we should disregard the unessentials and apply ourselves with sincere consecration to the uplift and betterment of humanity. To this shall we pledge our best endeavors?

THE SITUATION IN MEXICO

There is little that can be said now about conditions in Mexico, which all right thinking people must deeply deplore. If there have been mistakes of administration upon either side, or both, now is not the time to dwell upon them. Until war is actually declared—and this seems possible at almost any time—pacifists should pray that the calamity be averted and they should aid in every possible way to find a peaceful settlement. There seems so little to go to war about from either viewpoint, that a peaceful solution should certainly be found.

Mexico, least of all, can afford war, but ignorance seems to be in the saddle, and there is not much upon which to build hopes of peace. That country needs a Christian civilization more than she needs our bullets, but if war has to come, let us hope that God will work the miracle of bringing out of it a better and more Christian civilization for our Southern neighbors.

The Friends In France

(From "The Living Age")

By M. E. CLARKE.

The work of the "Friends" in France is one of the fair sides of the war; for wherever their gray uniforms pass some scar is healed, some hope is born, and by giving generously of human sympathy they have helped suffering people to forget something of human brutality. The authentic title of their organization in France is "La Société des Amis," but it pleases the French people to speak of them in familiar phrase as "Les Quakers," and the average Frenchman's conception of their particular religious creed is delightfully vague and fantastic. The only point on which he is quite clear is the Friends' claim to be non-combatants by conviction.

In 1870 the Friends came over to France in a small band and worked behind the French armies, distributing food and clothing to impoverished civilians and giving medical aid to all who needed it. Their number was few, but they won golden opinions and did excellent work which has been remembered and recorded. In 1914, inspired by the same desire to help, they sent over another Relief Expedition, based on the same lines as that of 1870. A committee was formed in England and negotiations by means of French intermediaries were begun with the French Government. The Friends offered to send over doctors, nurses, and general helpers to do whatever was possible to relieve the distress among the civil population of the invaded districts. After some weeks of discussion their offer was accepted, and at the same time permission was given to all members of the society to wear the black and crimson star which had been given as a badge to those members of the society who had worked in France forty-four years ago.

The aim of the Friends has always been to work for civilians, and although the course of events has caused them to give help to soldiers in many instances and even to have one of their ambulances working quite near the Front, it is among the civilians that the greater part of their work has been done. When they began operations in the autumn of 1914 they were faced with a task that might have dismayed a less brave people, for the country was still trembling from the shock of the German invasion. Refugees were pouring down towards Paris, and in the villages through which the Germans had passed the remaining inhabitants were paralyzed by fear as the result of the brief but brutal occupation by the enemy.

Under the orders of General Azibert the Friends worked behind the 5th French Army, in the cantons of Montmirail, Esternay, and Fere-Champenoise. Their first center was at Esternay, from which point they sent out doctors, nurses, architects, builders, sanitary experts and men-of-all-work to inquire into and remedy whatever ill came within their scope. Destruction, sickness, death, and the direst poverty faced them on all sides, but the worst thing they had to fight against in those days was the haunting fear in the hearts of all those who had suffered, and were still suffering, that the "gray flood" would come again. They had seen the German army in all its arrogant pride sweep across the land, leaving behind it such terrible proofs of its strength that they could not believe it to be irretrievably held in check. The very thought of it paralyzed them, and it was only when this fear was subdued that they found heart to begin life again with the help of the Friends.

Strange tales were told in those early days, and the Friends as they went about among the peasantry, had hard, stern proofs of German brutality. But, like Jane Austen, they "willingly quit such odious subjects as guilt and misery, and are impatient to restore everybody, not greatly in fault themselves, to tolerable comfort." Therefore, when you talk to the Friends you do not hear much of horrors and atrocities, but you learn a great deal about quiet endurance, self-denial, and the power to "begin again" in the face of disaster. In a little book, "Behind the Battle Lines in France," written for private circulation by Mr. Harvey, one of the Friends, there are many stories which bear witness to the French peasant's fine qualities, and which refute the tradition that he is beyond all things grasping and uncharitable. "Happy is the people that has such a peasantry," says Mr. Harvey, and as you read the countless stories of women who have set aside their own safety to promote the security of others, who have given half of their little all to help a neighbor, who have offered to care for orphaned children when already their own quiver was more than full, you are convinced that he is right. It was among such people that the Friends distributed food and clothing in abundance, for it was those things which were greatly needed. At the same time, and with an orderly rapidity that was suggestive of magic, they established centers for medical aid and sent out district nurses; they started their hut-building depots and began to rebuild brick and stone houses out of the old materials. They pervaded the unhappy districts like an army of good genii, and before their unobtrusive way of doing good even the suspicions of this home-keeping peasant people sank to rest.

At the end of December they changed their center from Esternay to Fere-Champenoise, where they established a hut-building depot, a provision depot, and, with a staff of doctors and nurses, worked in twenty neighboring communes distributing relief of all kinds. Their gray motor cars, with the inscription, "Mission Anglaise" written on them, went all over the countryside, strictly but kindly watched over by the military authorities, and warmly supported by all civilian officials and private individuals. The practical gray uniforms of both men and women had become familiar features in the landscape, and the wearers were accepted wherever they went as workers of great value.

In the meantime another group of workers had established a maternity hospital at Chalons-sur-Marne, by the request of the Prefet. They were offered the use of a part of the Asile des Vieillards, which stands on the outskirts of the town, and in the name of the department the Prefet undertook to pay all the domestic charges of the hospital if the Friends would be responsible for the provision of the medical staff and equipment. Under these conditions the hospital was opened, and it has proved a valuable refuge for mothers and children who have come from the devastated districts. It relieved the town hospital, which was greatly strained, and it has proved itself very elastic in its resources, for it goes much further than its title of "maternity" suggests. Added to the maternity wards, it has a creche and quite a big out-patients' department, run on peculiarly pleasant lines; the consultation days are called "our at-home days," and they mean nourishment as well as medicine, and gifts of clothing go with good advice.

The difficulties of beginning the Chalons work were many, and an "Asile," even at its best, is a depressing institution. It looks and feels like a workhouse of the least prepossessing kind, and the inmates appear to belong to that unhappy fringe of humanity which, for one reason or another, is wanting in wit. In one of the unlovely red-brick blocks of the Chalons Asile the Friends installed themselves last December, and found even in their quarters a remnant of that poor humanity for which the building had been constructed; twenty silent, foolish-looking women sat doing nothing in a ground-floor room, and formed a mute, indifferent audience to the Friends' activities. They watched the goings and comings, they assisted at all the meals. And although so little comprehending and so harmless, they were grim, uncomfortable guests to have always at the board. Thus, when the Prefet had them removed a sigh of relief went up from all the staff.

A less easily disposed of factor was the dirt of the place, for to make the amateur French domestic staff clean according to English hospital rules was not an easy thing to do. The cold was another adversary, and the glory of "serving" was dim in the minds of most as they shivered through meals in an icy room and crept along arctic passages to bed. But the day's work was hard enough to make them sleep the heavy sleep of exhaustion until they were called in the gray dawn to begin again.

Many tragic cases have been nursed in the Chalons wards, and it was only with the coming of spring that the Friends began to see wide effects of their winter's work. Women who had come into them almost dead from having given birth to their children in cold, damp cellars; children who were half starved because their mothers had been unable to get food for them; homeless, orphaned babies; mothers who had got separated from their children, were among their many patients and although they lost a few the majority flourished and grew fat. To such as these the bare wards (clean and dainty after a struggle between the ward maids and the matron) were havens of rest, and between the women who nursed and those who were being nursed a mutual respect had grown up. Both sides avoided any familiarity or undue curiosity, and the matron told me she was immensely impressed by the courage, common sense, and competence of the average French woman of the people. "They are good wives and good mothers and their simple trust in the Bon Dieu is encouraging to see."

In the creche on the ground floor life ran to a livelier measure than in the wards, and a certain "Roland" of five or six summers was continually being called to order for leading his elders astray. In the common room, nurses off duty could rest in basket chairs, the only sign of luxury in the hospital, and there visitors were received and Friends who were passing through the town would come and get a meal. There was a hint of Quaker simplicity in everything, and I could not but think of Charles Lamb when he wrote in his "Quakers' Meeting":

"When the spirit is sore fettered, even tired to sickness of the janglings and nonsense-noises of the world, what a balm and solace it is to go and seat yourself for a quiet half-hour upon some undisputed corner of a bench, among the gentle Quakers. Their garb and stillness conjoined present an uniformity . . . and cleanliness in them is something more than the absence of its contrary."

We know, of course, that many of the Friends who are working in France are not Quakers, but they are all working under the spell of the Quaker spirit, a very healing one to have abroad just now, whatever different convictions one may hold personally.

The construction work of the society in the different departments of the country rapidly increased as the spring advanced. At Vitry-le-Francois, where General Joffre had his Headquarters in the worst days of the Marne battle there is an important depot, and on a beautiful summer's day we visited the little town and saw with what simplicity and effectiveness the Friends carry on their work. They had been allotted a school-house with some surrounding sheds, and there, with their accustomed modesty, they had installed offices, provision depot, carpenters' sheds, and motor garage. About a dozen territorial soldiers were working with them on that particular day, and a wooden house was being made as fast as hands could make it. They showed us plans of the different sizes they were in the habit of making; some had four rooms, some three, and the smallest two. Each had a double roof, with a corrugated iron or tarpaulin covering. The walls are draught-proof, and there are good windows and fireplaces. Compared with many a thatched cottage that I know, these temporary shelters are magnificent, and if, as French people say, it is "Le 'provisoire' qui dure le plus longtemps en France," the Quaker huts are likely to be the homes of those to whom they were given for quite a long time. When a hut is complete in all its separate parts, these parts are loaded on to one of the Friends' motor lorries and carted off to the place for which the hut is destined. There the Friends put it up and leave it in the hands of those whose business it is to furnish it. Up to August, 1915, 230 huts and houses have been built and repaired in different villages of the Marne, the Aisne, and the Meuse, and, encouraged by this constructive work of the Friends, the inhabitants themselves have put up and repaired many more out of old materials. In this way a friendly and wholesome spirit of rivalry has grown up between the Friendly builders and the natives, which acts as a spur to all. One Frenchman scored a great triumph over the English workers when he announced that his house had a parquet floor, which was more than any of the Friends could boast. And no one was more delighted than the Friends when they heard the news; for, with all their generosity and love of charitableness, they know that there is no help like that which comes from the people themselves to promote a lasting cure for the misfortunes which have fallen on them and on their land.

Perfect good feeling exists between the English Mission and the French authorities; the Church, the State, and the Army work hand in hand with it, and although the restrictions as to the movements of the Friendly members are necessarily severe, they have not hampered the work in any serious sense. At Sermaize, where the devastation wrought by the enemy was very serious, the Friends have done most excellent work. Before the war, Sermaize was a smiling little town known as Sermaize-les-Bains; it had 4000 inhabitants and about 1000 houses. After the German occupation only 200 houses were left standing, and the inhabitants who remained were stricken with fear and threatened with starvation and disease. It was in this state that the Friends found the town and its people; now it has been restored to health and comparative prosperity. The sanitary experts have cleansed the wells and the drains, the builders have restored a certain number of houses, the doctors and nurses have established a hospital in a part of the neglected thermal establishment, and in another part of the building they run a little maternity school. The agricultural members of the society have cultivated a small farm from which they can supply vegetables for the family pot-au-feu. Moreover, food and clothing, furniture, and household linen have been distributed widely. The work has not been easy in spite of the courageous way in which the peasants themselves seconded the Friends, and the authorities and richer members of the population supported their efforts; because no sooner was one evil mastered than another grew up in its place. Thus, as soon as the town seemed fairly on the way to health and comfort, summer came and brought with it dangerous flies. "And," said a Quaker lady to me, "would you believe it, there was not a meat safe in Sermaize." With fairy godmother-like celerity, the Friends ordered meat safes by the score, and "of all the gifts they have had given them," resumed the Quaker lady, "the housewives seemed to appreciate these gardes-manger the most." For many miles round Sermaize the peasants come for medical and material relief, and other working centers are now established at Maurupt, Fontenelle, Maussingement, Etrepy Huiron, Nettancourt, Villers-sur-Vents, and Sommeilles. They all work on the same lines as those already spoken of, with here and there a pleasant variation in the form of a neighboring chateau which has been turned into a convalescent home for women and children: such as the one at Bettancourt-le-Longue.

A very important Agricultural Relief section is also developing immense proportions as the seasons come and go, leaving northern France still in the enemy's occupation; and under an expert's direction the Society of Friends has been able to help many peasant farmers to till and sow and reap their ground, so that the harvest, even in the devastated regions, has not been a failure. The efforts of the Friends have been strengthened by the support of the Agricultural Relief of Allies Committee, by the American Relief Clearing House, and by the French Agricultural Society. In many cases only women remained on the farms to do the work, and nowhere could men of strong working age be found; old men or boys provided the only masculine labor, but the women are so much in the habit of working on the land that they soon showed an aptitude for all sides of farm work, even for that of ploughing. Where the labor was of such a kind that the women could not do it, the Friends willingly "lent a hand."

Everything was wanted on the farms over which the Germans had passed, for they carried out the work of destruction very thoroughly. Machines, tools, crops, and even the manure heaps were burned ruthlessly, as well as the farmhouses and buildings with all their contents. Consequently, all these things had to be supplied. Last spring 1250 packages of vegetable seeds, each package holding fourteen different kinds of seeds, were distributed in the department of the Marne, and 500 in the Meuse, with 800 lb. of beetroot, 400 lb. of sainfoin, 360 lb. of clover, 180 lb. of carrots, and 50,000 cabbages. Round Fere-Champenoise alone 10,000 lb. of potatoes were sent out and large quantities of artificial manure. As the hay harvest approached, 72 new mowing machines were delivered and 86 old ones were repaired. Later on 38 new binders were given, 20 of which were presented by the Agricultural Relief of Allies Committee, and 5 by the American Relief Clearing House. About 71 old binders were repaired, and it was no uncommon thing for reapers and binders to be worked by young Englishmen who in other days were more used to playing the piano than working on a farm. Thrashing flails have been given out this autumn, and it is proposed to have steam ploughs ready for the spring work. Live stock in the form of rabbits and poultry have been supplied to many of the small farmers to encourage the women to take up poultry-farming, and it is hoped later on to send stock of a heavier kind, for the loss in sheep and cattle has been deplorably great.

The work of the women Friends is not limited to the hospitals or the district nursing, but extends over a wide housekeeping field. Many of them are learning as well as teaching, for the French peasant is no mean cook and is handy with her needle. The English Friend is working with these women as well as for them, and when a wooden hut is furnished they exchange ideas on housekeeping which are mutually beneficial. A French kitchen and a French linen chest are generally well furnished, and in finding out what the peasant women think essential to a house the English woman has come to a clearer understanding of the French character, even as the French woman is learning something of the simple comfort, which naturally surrounds the educated working women of England. The work and expense of furnishing the ruined homes of the French peasants have been heavy, and although a French society, Le Bon Gite, has been very helpful in this particular section of the work, the bulk of the charge has fallen on the resources of the Friends. Up to August of last year 553 huge bales of material had been sent over from England, as well as something like 120,000 articles of clothing. Most of the heavy furniture is bought in France to save delay and expense in transport, and some idea of what is being spent on this part of the work may be gathered by learning that the total cost of the Friends work in France is 4000 pounds a month even in its least expensive periods. Added to this, the French departments where they work make them an allowance of 140 pounds a month, and it is not unlikely that they will receive further support for their agricultural work from the French Agricultural Society, which appreciates very keenly the past efforts and the plans for the future.

The number of Friends working in France at the end of 1915 was 150, whereas in 1914 there were only 32. With the exception of one or two of the fully-trained nurses, none of the members of the Society receive salaries, and all who can afford it pay their own expenses and give generously to the funds. There has been some difficulty in getting permanent doctors in the different hospital centers, and as the war goes on the work falls more and more on the shoulders of women doctors, one of whom is responsible for the original idea of the expedition, and has worked untiringly and unceasingly in France ever since last autumn. It is difficult not to speak in glowing, enthusiastic tones of the work of the Friends in France, but there is something about their way of being and doing which makes anything beyond a subdued and sincere appreciation of them seem out of place, and even a little presumptuous. They themselves have shown such exquisite tact in their dealings with the foreign people, with a people professing a different creed, and at a time when nationality is, indeed, up in arms, no matter how peaceful a mission may be, that to fall into too vivid praise of all they have done would be to miss the very spirit of their undertaking.

PENN COLLEGE

As Estimated in the Light of Its Possible Extinction
By CLARENCE M. CASE

These are momentous days for Iowa Friends, when Penn College hangs in the balance. For it is perhaps no exaggeration to say that the very life of the Yearly Meeting is involved in the fate of the College, if in so saying attention is fixed on the larger aspects of our Iowa Quakerism—its long future and its prospect for maintaining any position of genuine spiritual and social leadership in the life of the commonwealth.

But the rebuilding of Penn College is not a matter of merely local interest. This institution is one of the indispensable links in a chain of Quaker schools which stretches from Moses Brown School and Oak Grove Seminary in New England to Whittier and Pacific Colleges on the western coast. No other Friends' school is in position to serve the territory which has sustained Penn College in the past, so that the disappearance of Penn from the educational map of the Society of Friends would entail an irreparable loss to Quakerism throughout America and the world.

This last assertion, sweeping as it may seem, is justified by that extraordinarily long list of ministers, evangelists, missionaries and social workers which this school has sent, and is still sending, into the world-wide vineyard of Christian service.

The writer came to Penn College six years ago with a very strong impression, derived solely from the long-standing reputation of this school, that in Penn College he would find, above all things, a positive, dynamic Christian faith, which seeks to utilize culture as the consecrated instrument of high moral and religious purpose. In this expectation he has not been disappointed. To be sure, Penn College is not simply an advance installment of the millennium. The forces of error and evil are not completely in chains here. Not every student is a devoted Christian, and even the Christian Associations have their problems, despite the fact that they are the biggest thing in the life of the school. In other words, Penn College is not a perpetual camp meeting and the institution has its own problems and weaknesses even upon the spiritual side, but on the whole the writer may truthfully say that he has never known an institution where the general level of spiritual life was more steadfastly positive, constructive and heartening for any young man or woman whose ideals of character and achievement were those of the consecrated Christian life. In other words, Penn College is justifying today its long-established reputation as a distinctly Christian college, where Christian devotion is the normal thing.

It should be noted here, however, that Penn is not simply a Bible School or training institute, however good those things may be. Its standards are distinctly collegiate, and the atmosphere of scholarship has been steadily improving for some years. The reputation of the school among Iowa colleges is enviable. Remarks commending the quality of the intellectual work done at Penn are a commonplace in educational circles. Penn Students are regarded as desirable candidates for work in graduate schools and they are not ashamed of their alma mater.

Now this excellent reputation for spiritual and scholarly work has been done with far too meager physical resources, both plant and endowment. A gentleman of some observation among colleges remarked that Penn had the best college in Iowa and the poorest equipment in the United States. And this was said before the recent fire which destroyed the main building.

This is not the testimony of an educational authority, and it is doubtless exaggerated on both sides, yet it will serve to show how the physical side of Penn College has tended to impress the casual observer. Those days are happily gone forever. Even before the recent fire the faculty of the College were united in their conviction that Penn must have a better plant and a larger endowment, or consider the wisdom of closing her doors. Steps were already well under way to bring the situation to a decisive issue when the main building was destroyed, as indicated. Those who know most about the College and who are investing their lives and fortunes in it, are fully convinced that this really great school of the past must descend to a relatively lower position in the future unless greater resources are provided. This is true because educational standards, particularly in Iowa, have risen enormously. A weeding out process is under way. It is due to economical and social forces which cannot be placated by any appeal to mere sentimental considerations. Penn is doomed to gradual extinction or destined to a greater future. Which it shall be will be determined by the insight, generosity and promptness of the friends of the College throughout the land. It will probably be conceded by all informed persons that a second-rate, dwindling school is worse than none, if it is to bear the name of the Society of Friends, an organization with a record for first-class educational work which has no superior and few equals in the history of this country. This conceded, it will be seen that the hour of destiny has arrived in the present campaign for Penn College.

The school is now in its forty-third year under the present name. Prior to 1873 it existed for ten years, under various names, as a Friends' boarding school. The first site was in the country, east of Oskaloosa. Here, in 1863, two young men, David and Jephthah Morgan, came from Tennessee and opened the school out of which Penn College was later to grow. The founders were members of North Carolina Yearly Meeting of Friends and had already established the Friends school at Friendsville, Tennessee, an institution still in existence. One of these brothers, Dr. J. W. Morgan, is still living and practicing medicine in Oskaloosa.

For many years after the re-incorporation of the school as Penn College and its removal to the present site within the limits of Oskaloosa city, the school was managed by a private corporation under Quaker influences. For some years Iowa Yearly Meeting has been accustomed to appoint fifteen members of the trustees and the college is recognized as a genuinely Quaker school, although by no means a sectarian one.

The college is intimately associated with the life of the town, there having been a noticeable gain in this respect during recent years. The college participates in the annual fall festival of the county, the biennial Penn pageant is a big local event and the Chautauqua Association has its assembly upon the Penn campus. These, and other things, have identified the college so closely with the town that the citizens are determined to retain the college, although various other places are prepared to submit very flattering offers. But the trustees and the faculty felt that Oskaloosa was entitled to first chance and so the city was given the opportunity to raise the funds for two new buildings, costing approximately $140,000.00, and to purchase certain adjoining lands for the campus at the cost of about $15,000.00. In a recent meeting in the city hall, at which considerable enthusiasm was manifested, the citizens undertook this task. Meanwhile, the yearly Meeting and outside Friends will be asked to raise $250,000.00 additional. Neither of these sums will be finally secured without the other, all notes being conditioned upon the subscription of a total amount of $400,000.00.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that more than one of those who know most intimately the real condition of the college and its prospects under modern educational requirements in Iowa are convinced that it is now or never with Penn College, and that the failure of this campaign would probably justify the immediate closing of the school. For a failure to subscribe these minimum necessities of a first-class college would mean that the constituency of Penn in Oskaloosa, Iowa Yearly Meeting and American Quakerism, did not care to sustain the school, or else was not able to sustain it. In both cases the result would be the same—a lingering death, and eventually the unworthy end of a worthy career, unless the facts were frankly faced and the doors promptly closed while the record remains undimmed.

Haverford College

(Address of President Sharpless at the Haverford Commencement, Sixth Month 16, 1916.)

In 1833 Haverford School began its work. For three years (1845-48) it was closed out of respect to that always-to-be-avoided iniquity in Quaker eyes, a debt. Hence this is the ending of the 80th year of actual service in the cause of education of the institution we now call Haverford College.

Four score years in America indicates a respectable but not venerable antiquity. Nor should we boast, I think in the words of the line "we live in deeds, not years," for while we may have something to claim in this respect, deeds ought to speak for themselves, if worth anything.

I want only to make a brief report on the year just passed. Thanks largely to the co-operation and initiative of the young men we graduate today, who leave us with our sincere respect and gratitude, it has been, so far as the internal life of the college is concerned, one of vitality and progress. The cause of morals and scholarship has developed in a wholesome way. "Vigor and unity," which phrase ought to be the watchword of a small college, have been in evidence in many ways. No differences of a serious character, whether in the student or the faculty body, or between them, or between either the governing board have existed. A reasonable amount of hard work has characterized the majority of student efforts towards intellectual training, and a positive and intelligent interest in the public affairs of the community and the nation, which promises well for an equally intelligent participation in the future, has been evident.

But every one who has attended these gatherings in the past will miss the venerable Friend who, for 25 years has read the Bible verses with a feeble voice, but with a feeling interest in the occasion, and a constant devotion to the best ideals and standards of the college. Thomas Wistar Brown has been a financial benefactor to the extent of three-quarters of a million dollars, but more than that, so much more that one hesitates to bring dollars into the matter at all, he has given that steady guidance without interference in detail, which has made his interest ever welcome and his wishes a pleasure to carry out. Personally, when I attend a meeting of the Board it seems to me that a great and beneficent factor in our life has passed out of it, and that something is missing from the integrity of our organization.

(Minute of Board):

We shall miss the valuable service of our Professor of French, who has been lured away from us, to our regret, by the attractions of a headship of a department in Columbia University, as was his predecessor, to Cornell. We can only derive the small satisfaction of having men who are our graduates and have been our trusted associates on the Faculty, who are worth losing to such honorable posts.

The following donations have been received or promised during the year:

$500 for the care of the trees on the lawn and additional funds through the Campus Club for allied purposes.

$400 from the class of 1914 for improvements to the athletic field.

Oil portraits of Dr. Lyman B. Hall and Dr. Francis B. Gummere by friends of theirs among the alumni.

$2400 for two new sections of Lloyd Hall, one-half of which is for a memorial to the father of Horace

E. Smith, '86. This makes accommodations for sixteen additional students.

$30,000 for a fund for the purchase of books for the Library. This with other funds recently acquired, makes it possible to spend $5000 or more a year in adding books and periodicals to the Library.

I am also informed that the fund of $100,000 for a new laboratory for Biology and Physics is progressing favorably.

$72,000, not as a new gift, but as making effective an old gift, being the sale of hitherto unproductive land belonging to the Jacob P. Jones estate.

$150,000, a bequest yet to be received from the children of Gideon Scull, a student about 1843, to teach English Constitutional History. This is a munificent appropriation for the purpose and should greatly strengthen the whole History department of the College. It means the addition to the present faculty of at least one man of superior attainments. The field narrowly construed is relatively too small to need the expenditure of the whole income, but it can in part be applied to allied subjects, and a conspicuous development of our scholarly resources should result.

$372,000 from the late T. Wistar Brown to give graduate instruction in the Bible, Philosophy, Sociology, History and kindred subjects. This totally unexpected donation made during the life of the donor, but kept private till after his death, is a most significant addition to our available resources. We have not attempted graduate instruction at Haverford except to a very few semi-official students. With the income at our command, we have thought it wiser to concentrate upon the four years of undergraduate effort and to make this as effective as possible. But this opens up new opportunities without in any way detracting from the old. While it is too soon to make any announcement, the following suggestions will immediately occur to any one:

(a) The instruction will be limited to the field specially endowed and no attempt will be made to establish a general graduate department.

(b) Funds may be released by certain combinations which will aid in the development of undergraduate work.

(c) At least two men of the highest character for scholarship and qualities as teacher and adviser of students may be added to our faculty, thus increasing very considerably the moral and intellectual forces of the college.

It is evident that a new era of progress, new in degree and somewhat in kind, is opening for Haverford, through the liberal aid of its friends. This progress will re-act upon the past, making every degree more valuable. It is also an endorsement of the past and an ample compensation to the men who have stood by the college through the financial stress of years.

Perhaps, without undue self-gratulation, we may say that it is a direct result of the attempt to maintain standards often at the sacrifice of numbers, an attempt which ought to be more easily and more faithfully carried out in the future.

The Needs of the French Churches

The General Secretary of the Federal Councils of the Churches of Christ in America has sent out a very appealing letter to the churches in behalf of the French Protestant churches. Dr. Macfarland states that many of them have suffered through the devastation of the war, that many of their ministers are at the front, and that they need for a total of nearly five hundred churches about $120,000 "to keep Protestantism in existence, to meet meager salaries, to provide humble places of worship in place of those destroyed."

Pastor Roussel, after being here a year, has gone back with only one-sixth of the amount needed. The Protestant Church of France, with its old Huguenot parentage, is of great strategic importance at any time, but at this moment to let its strength wane will be a calamity, and as Dr. Macfarland urges, this is a need which is a peculiar obligation of our churches.

Checks should be made to the order of the "French Relief Fund," and forwarded to the Federal Council, 105 East 22d Street, New York City.

THE HIGHER LIFE

As I Behold Him

This is what I see about God when I look at Christ. It is God that I see there. Not a doctrine about Him, but it is He, the light of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

I cannot read the story, I cannot know the Person of the divine Christ, without becoming aware of two things: There is a Life behind Him, and a Life before Him—a Life on which He rests, and a Life in which He issues. It is no lonely existence which suggests itself as He walks among men. At any moment He turns aside upon a mountain-top and communes with a Being which is like Himself. As He draws near the end of His peculiar work, and looks forth into the years which are to come, He sees a divine life, like His life, going on, finishing His work. He feels the Father from whom He came, the Spirit who is to come when He is gone.—Phillips Brooks.

Jesus As a Helper

This morning I was reading a passage that came sweetly to my heart: "For he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust." I am weak—Jesus knows it all. I have my anxieties—He feels them all. I am very imperfect—He understands it all. You sit down by your friend and tell him your experience. You ask him, "Did you ever feel so?" If he has, you are gratified to think some other person feels as you have felt. He says, "I have felt the same." Blessed be God, there is not a sorrow of my heart but Jesus understands it. There is not an anxiety, not a depression, but He helps me to bear them.—Bishop Simpson.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING.

In order to give some account of London Yearly Meeting, held a month ago, we quote the following "Notes" from the London Friend of June 2. We are sorry not to be able to give a more detailed account of this most interesting gathering. These assemblages of English Friends in this time of crisis will be historic. It will be noted that in the midst of war the Yearly Meeting saw ample occasion to bear testimony to their fundamental principles and to give a full measure of consideration to the various activities of the Yearly Meeting. We hope next week to be able to cull from the London Friend an adequate account of the sessions of Dublin Yearly Meeting which began its postponed sessions on June 1.

The Yearly Meeting of 1916 has been marked by a spirit of earnest expectancy. There has been an indefinable feeling that some further revelation of God's will would be manifested. This note was struck in the Swarthmore Lecture, which again formed an admirable preface to the Yearly Meeting itself. Towards the close of the lecture Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin quoted the following lines:

"Surely He cometh, and a thousand voices

Call to the saints, and to the deaf are dumb;

Surely He cometh, and the earth rejoices,

Glad in His coming, who hath sworn, I come."

* * *

In the Yearly Meeting itself, speaking of the invitation to pass through "the open door," the Clerk said that most likely the way would lead through suffering, reproach and misunderstanding, but he reminded us that when Jesus Christ saw an open door He saw through it a cross, and chose it, despising the shame. In contrast with the dark picture of the state of Ephesians to whom Paul wrote, he put the words, "But God"; throughout history these two words had stood as a bulwark. Resting on them, might we be strong to enter through the open door.

* * *

The opening time of devotion was full of solemnity, and instinct with sympathy for the young men enduring much suffering in prison for conscience sake. Our thoughts were led, too, to the great volume of suffering on the battlefield, and we were called to agonize over the great orgy of hate which is causing it. Glad witness was borne to the fact that even through the suffering, Christ was being made real as never before to some of those called to suffer shame for His name.

* * *

On several occasions the meeting-house has been so crowded that Friends have not all been able to find seats. We have, however, missed many of the young men who were with us in January, and women are again in a majority. The Clerks are the same as in the last two Yearly Meetings, viz., John Henry Barlow, Clerk, with Roger Clark and Edith J. Wilson as Assistants.

* * *

At the opening session the Clerk welcomed on behalf of the Meeting William C. Allen, of San Jose, California, but still a member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. He is accompanied by his wife and also by William B. Harvey. Several Friends who had enjoyed hospitality in W. C. Allen's home joined in expressions of greeting; and A. Warburton Davidson (recently home from China) said that he had met Chinese students who had been much impressed by addresses on Peace delivered by our Friend during his recent visit in China. W. C. Allen assured us that the word of love incorporated with the minute from Philadelphia was no idle message, but came from the heart of the Yearly Meeting. He did not expect to have large service in this country.

* * *

The Clerk's brief review of events which have occurred since we last met took this, the first opportunity of expressing sympathy with Friends in Ireland in the sore distress of that country, a sympathy which was further expressed next day by other Friends. It was a great pleasure that six Irish Friends had been able to meet us.

* * *

The Yearly Meeting of Friends, by its very constitution, is at once the easiest and the most difficult of assemblies to guide—difficult because of the need for combining sufficient and necessary pre-arrangement with the freedom of spontaneity, easy because of possessing the power to be ruled absolutely by the immediate sense of the Divine Presence. Though our methods may be democratic, we still claim to be what the late J. Bevan Braithwaite so frequently reminded us we should be, not a democracy but a theocracy. All too often this high claim is waived, and the programme previously prepared is adhered to when another course might have led us further and deeper. This year, when on Thursday morning we were brought into deep places in regard to the imperfections of our witness for Peace, it was obvious that the subject could not be adequately dealt with at that time. It was therefore arranged to continue the considerations arising out of the Peace Committee's report and the minutes from two Quarterly Meetings next morning; and later, as more time was still wanted, to omit the usual meetings for worship on Tuesday morning. It is not discussion alone that can help us.

The query was raised one morning, "Has the Society of Friends lost its genius for silent waiting?" The answer was thankfully proved to be in the negative when the great assembly settled down at once into a stillness that could be felt. And from the stillness voices were raised in confession of our unbelief, of our sense of our own importance, of our love of a good reputation, of our shrinking back when we have seen a glimmering of what we might do. But though afterwards various suggestions for action were made, it was clear that as a whole we were not yet ready to be used. We ourselves had failed so often and so badly in our witness to the power of love that we could not be entrusted at this time of the world's need with a large corporate service. So at any rate it seemed when the subject stood adjourned over the week-end.

A large place in the Yearly Meeting was devoted to the interests of the children and young people, two whole sittings on the first day being given up to the subject of "War and the Children." As the subject was opened up in its various aspects, it became more and more evident, that even in our favoured land, which has been scarcely touched by the hand of the invader, the ill results of the war on child life are definite. In day and boarding schools, in Sunday Schools, in the streets and in the courts there is evidence of the loss to the nation from lessened parental and other adult leadership and control. The Meeting was invited to consider the openings for service among the young in efforts along the lines of the "Little Commonwealth" in Dorsetshire, a most interesting experiment, of which an outline was given, in the treatment of juvenile crime.

The Educational session was marked by the suggestive introduction by Anne W. Richardson, who took the place usually occupied by William S.

Clark, the chairman of the Central Education Committee, who was absent on account of ill-health. Our friend, besides giving cogent reasons for the existence and support of the Committee, made an earnest appeal for the liberal support of the efforts now being made to provide for the future training of young women Friends in the teaching and medical professions. Unless, she said, "the peculiar contribution which Christian women have to give to the nation—the mother-instinct which wants to give rather than to get, the instinct for moral and spiritual beauty, for tenderness, for spiritual ideals—it not to be present in larger force than ever when society is remoulded, the new opportunities for women will be a national 'disaster,' not a national blessing." The session was notable also for C. E. Stansfield's interesting review of the effect of the war upon our boarding schools; for the exposition of the present aims of Woodbrooke and the Settlement idea; and for the address on Training for Citizenship in Schooldays by Charles I. Evans, the Headmaster of Leighton Park.

* * *

A year ago the Tabular Statement was not considered in the full meeting, but only by the Committee of Reference. This year it received a fair amount of consideration, notwithstanding that it was taken at the Saturday morning session, when the attendance was as usual only small. The lack of growth, as revealed by the figures was deplored by some speakers. On the other hand, it was pointed out that it is not numbers but life that is wanted. Some thought the machinery for admitting members was too complicated: it should be more easy to join the Society, and also more easy to leave it. Freedom from "following the usual course" would be an advantage. In this connection it was interesting to remember the statement which appeared in last week's Friend, that one of our largest Monthly Meetings had admitted two conscientious objectors without adopting the usual course. Another Friend pointed out that having the machinery in good working order was what was wanted. We could then easily adapt ourselves to the special circumstances of these exceptional times. If time had permitted, the Meeting might soon have plunged into a discussion of birthright membership: but, for the present, at any rate, this important topic has been avoided.

The Committee on Accounts reported, to the surprise of some and doubtless to the great satisfaction of all, that the various Quarterly Meetings would be asked only to contribute the usual sum of 2,500 pounds to the Yearly Meeting for the current year. This is notwithstanding the fact that the balance in hand has been reduced by 875 pounds, and that there is a prospect of considerably increased expenditure this year. The explanation of the reason for not asking for more is that instead of applying the additional 1,200 pounds from the New Building Account to the reduction of the mortgages, it is on this occasion to be applied to current expenditure. Evidently this cannot be regarded as a precedent.

* * *

The morning and afternoon sessions on Monday were devoted to the subject of "War and the Social Order," dealt with first on the side of "Origins," and practical proposals being considered later. Two important decisions were the appointment of an Autumn Conference on Social Questions, and the adoption of the principle of a permanent scheme to provide for a year's training in citizenship free to all young Friends. In the morning it was pleasant to hear from William A. Cadbury, just back from Russia with his companions, some report of the result of the inquiries made by the party.

* * *

The circumstances under which the Large Committee met on Friday evening were quite exceptional. The meeting was held in the Large Meeting-house, instead of the Old Meeting-house as used to be the usual course. But more unusual still, it had no definite instructions from the Yearly Meeting to prepare an Epistle. The second adjournment of the consideration of the Peace issue to Tuesday morning (a very unusual course), had led to this position. The Committee, however, had no difficulty in deciding to set aside the usual draft committee to prepare the annual message.

The arrangements made by the Agenda Committee for preventing the serious disturbance so noticeable at some recent Yearly Meetings caused by conversation in the Yard during the sessions, proved very successful on nearly every occasion, with the possible exception of the meeting of the Large Committee. The means adopted consisted of roping off most of the open space and the display in prominent places of large notices to the following effect: "Silence! All conversation in the Yard when the Yearly Meeting is in session is strictly forbidden." The personal efforts of William F. Wells, who must thereby have been prevented from attending a considerable part of Yearly Meeting, largely contributed to the satisfactory result.

* * *

The F. F. M. A. breakfast, prior to the first session of Yearly Meeting, was a helpful preliminary to those who had the privilege of attending it. About eighty guests accepted the kind hospitality of James B. and Margaret C. Crosfield at the Ideal Restaurant, where Friends congregate so much at certain hours of the day during Yearly Meeting. Missionaries were present from India, China, Syria, and Pemba, also Friends from Ireland, many Board members and others. Twelve bright, short and informal speeches were delivered after the meal; some of these dealt with the effect of the war on the missionary enterprise, and though in some respects this was naturally discouraging, the note of joy predominated.

* * *

Under the title "Whence Come Wars?" the first Report of the War and Social Order Committee was in the hands of Friends for Yearly Meeting. A substantial volume of nearly 200 pages carefully indexed, it contains the reports of the various sub-committees—on Origins, Control, Investments, Simplification, and Experiments, and the report of the Joint Training Committee; also ten papers on different aspects and notes on "Experiments in Community Life," notes of the discussions at the Jordans Conference in April, &c. (Headley Brothers, 1s. net.)

MINISTERS' AND WORKERS' CONFERENCE.

The Conference of Ministers and Workers of Indiana Yearly Meeting recently held at Lynn, Indiana, was a time of inspiration and uplift to all those present. In spite of the rain the attendance was good at all the sessions. The high note of effective consecration which was struck at the first session, was well maintained throughout, and the interchange of ideas as to methods of work, which came out in the discussions, can hardly fail to quicken the activities of the congregation represented.

In the President's opening address, Fred E. Carter called our attention to the passion of the Apostle Paul, as shown in his statement: "I could wish that I myself were accursed from Christ, for my brethren's sake." "It is at the point of sacrifice that loyalty becomes contagious" and "Service is the key of survival" were two of the slogans which he sent ringing through the Conference and out over the Yearly Meeting.

"The Pastor's Vision" was presented by Milo S. Hinckle in a carefully written paper. The center of the pastor's vision is for personal and family religion. Without this all is lost. But the true vision of the pastor, alive to the needs of men, will reach out to the saving of the conditions of life, the creation of a Christian atmosphere in which men and women may live and children may grow; the practical application to the life of the community of the teachings of Jesus Christ.

In the convention sermon Frank Cornell faced the world conditions of the present, and, with the faith and vision of a true prophet of God, traced the growth of the seed planted by Jesus Christ, and piercing the black veil of the present, gave us a glimpse of the glorious future—the reign of the Prince of Peace—as sure as the promises of God.

President Robert L. Kelly made a strong plea for an increase of effectiveness in all our work. First, a definite purpose; second, an intelligent program; third, hearty co-operation in the program for the accomplishment of the purpose. These are the elements of "efficiency effectiveness" in any organization.

The large place occupied by the church school was emphasized by William J. Sayers. Here recruits for the army of Christian conquests are won; here they are trained, and from here they are sent forth to battle for God and for His Kingdom.

The place of special evangelism in the life of the effective church was well brought out in the round table conducted by Truman C. Kenworthy. Without in any way detracting from the work of the home, the Bible School, the regular services of worship, yet 90 per cent of the harvest is gathered in special evangelistic services.

Save your boys and girls to the church and to the work of Christ by giving them the missionary vision. To do this Ross Hadley recommended the use of three books, "Missionary Programs and Incidents," "The Sunday School Teacher and the Program of Christ," by George H. Trull, and "Comrades in Service," by Margaret E. Burton. Missionary interest among Christians depends upon knowledge. Let the church know the need of the world.

Charles E. Hiatt, of Marion, and Willard O. Trueblood, of Indianapolis, gave impressive addresses after the writer left for home. From others we learn that Mr. Trueblood's address, which was the closing one of the conference, was one of the ablest and most inspiring addresses given during the sessions.

The presence of three representatives from the trenches of Europe brought home to us the real heroism of English Friends in this twentieth century. There a company of Friends no larger and no more wealthy than Indiana Yearly Meeting has organized and is carrying forward relief work which has cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and is now costing at least $25,000 a month to maintain. And now they are reaching out to a new field in Poland where hundreds of thousands more will be needed. They appeal to Friends everywhere for help. We at Lynn felt, as all must feel who hear and see them, that to take a share in such a work is certainly the duty of every follower of the Christ—yes, we felt more—that such work is the high privilege of every heroic soul.

So we separated and went home to work out in the life of each congregation as best we may the spirit of effective consecration which was in the very air at Lynn.

GEORGE C. LEVERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Agricultural College, N. D.

June 20th, 1916.

Editor of American Friend:

I have remained with my daughter during the nine months of the regular college year's work. She is at present detained to conduct a Course in Domestic Science for Rural Teachers during the Summer Term. My daughter, Geraldine, has been promoted to Assistant Professorship in Domestic Science, with a liberal increase in salary for the coming year. We will return to our home the last of this month.

I am happy to say that in my sojourn in this new and strange land, added privileges and blessings have come to me, especially in the helpful and spiritual Church associations I have enjoyed with the First Presbyterian Church of Fargo, with Thomas J. Graham, able minister and pastor. On last Sabbath which was my last attendance, I briefly spoke of the soul refreshing and helpfulness I had received in attendance at Church and Missionary services, of the blessed fellowship of believers, encouraging the elderly, strong middle-aged (of which there are quite a number), the young people, and children, closing my communication with prayer. Of course it was rather a new and added feature to the Bulletin and program of the place and occasion; but after the benediction very many warm handgrasps and expressions, with the pastor's public endorsement previous to dismissal, were, with my heart's peace sufficient to make me feel that this was in place.

I have always believed that students, teachers, and Christians of any age, leaving their homes for any length of time should have with them a Bible, church letter, and church paper. I have taken pleasure in distributing copies of the American Friend and I wish the Five Year's Publication Board would encourage Young Peoples' activities in the direction of placing some of their money into subscriptions to The American Friend to be sent to remote places instead of so much great banqueting and feasting.

Very respectfully thy sincere friend,
SARAH M. HADLEY.

AT WICHITA, KANSAS.

At a meeting of 2,000 people held recently in Wichita, with the avowed purpose of securing favorable action of the Mayor and City Commission in favor of Sunday evening opening of the moving picture theaters, James Whitaker, a young Friend and member of the Junior class of Friends University, followed a number of speakers favoring the proposition, and in a spirited speech of half an hour, without previous preparation, overthrew every argument of his numerous opponents and left the camp of the movies bewildered and disconcerted.

He vividly portrayed the evil effects of the movies and how such would draw our young people from the various church activities on Sunday evening, and has thus contributed very substantially to the agitation on the part of the church organizations against the Sunday evening opening of the moving picture theaters in Wichita.

We do not love men so much for the good they do us, as for the good we do them.—Sterne.

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

AT THE MEXICAN BORDER.

At present writing, all of our American workers who have recently been in Mexico are on this side of the border. Nancy L. Lee remained at Matamoros until the 22nd when it seemed best to come over to Brownsville "until affairs quiet down a little." The mission property she left in the care of two of the native teachers who may be counted on to look after it as well as is possible. There is grave danger of course that mission property may suffer from looting as neither the civil nor the military authorities have affairs well in hand.

A letter from Solomon Tice, written at San Benito, Texas, on the 24th, speaks as follows of their prospects: "I left Matamoros two weeks ago yesterday. Am staying here for the present and, judging from present indications of border conditions, will remain here for several weeks longer. Mrs. Tice is to come down here next week. We have arrangements made for staying here if the situation doesn't clear up but can leave at any time we may find it possible to return to Victoria. We are in no danger notwithstanding recent newspaper reports of events that took place near here. Those things only happen in the thinly settled parts."

DUPLEX ENVELOPES.

Duplex Envelopes printed uniformly, with the words "Weekly Offering for Current Expense of Friends' Meeting" on one side and "Weekly Offering for American Friends Board of Foreign Missions" on the other, dated to begin with the first Sunday in September or the first Sunday in October, may be secured at reduced prices by ordering through the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Indiana. Prices on these envelopes have advanced during the past few weeks and it is probable that they will go still higher before autumn. The Board of Missions will, however, undertake to supply the envelopes, printed in two colors and with prayer topics, at the following rates:

For less than 50 sets, 11 cents per set.
For more than 49 but less than 100 sets, 10½ cents per set.
For 100 sets or more, 10 cents per set.

Orders for envelopes dated to begin September 3d cannot be filled at these prices after August 1st, nor can orders for envelopes dating from October be filled if received later than September 1st.

YOUNG CUBAN PREPARING FOR MINISTRY.

Arthur W. Pain, writing from Santa Cruz del Norte, Cuba, tells of a volunteer for Christian service. "For some years one of our young men, Faustino Carrion, has been preparing himself for the ministry, desiring at some time to give his entire time to gospel service. After two years of acceptable service and ministry, he believed he was ready to separate himself from all other obligations, but desired to be no burden to the home nor to the native church. After seeing the need of the help of the church, he consented to receive the support of a native worker. Not knowing at that time just when this would be prepared for him, he entered in business with his brothers from which he could not easily separate himself until the end of this Quarter. Now, at the opening of the 2d Quarter, April 1st, he enters this gospel service, hoping this year to prepare himself at some college as way may open."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

In the candidates class at Seaside, Jamaica, in the first quarter of this year, there were thirteen seeking church membership—a most encouraging record.

Emory J. Rees at Maragoli in the Africa Mission writes, "The translation of the Gospel of John is completed and we are going on with Acts." The supervision of twenty outstation schools, the management of the mission press and evangelistic work in the district all falls upon Emory Rees. In addition to these lines of work, he hopes within the next two years to finish the translation of the four Gospels and Acts into the Kavirondo language.

At Orange Hill Jamaica, boys who have attended the mission school are taking responsibility in the Sunday School. The secretary of the Sunday School has been in a class of boys taught by Cecil Budu, age 15 years, who has gone through the day school. Another 15-year-old boy named Buchu teaches a class of little girls. The school has been increasing in size.

The following is from Kaimosi, another station in the Africa Mission. "In our C. E. service last Sabbath, one prodigal confessed his sins and said he was returning to the Father, and four others confessed Christ for the first time in public. We knew they had been trying to do right for some time as they had told us so in private, and in asking the older Christians about them they also confirmed the statements. We are very thankful for these."

At last, construction has been resumed on the Amity Hall chapel which is being built entirely by funds given by the native members. The financial depression of the past year in Jamaica has made this enterprise doubly difficult. The acting manager of the United Fruit Company kindly gave the Amity Hall people reduced prices on lumber. And the planters of the district hauled practically all of the lumber from Golden Grove, three miles distant, free of charge. The roof of the new building will soon be completed.

"Aside from the regular work, we (Raymond Holding and other workers at Banos, Cuba) have been visiting the United Fruit Company's Hospital with regularity. There have been a large number of patients, both English and Spanish speaking, also a few French Haitians. The number of patients has varied from thirty to sixty. Last Sunday there were fifty-two. It is almost pathetic to see how hungrily the sick people await their turn for a kind word and a tract magazine or a portion of the Bible. In one of the three wards there were twenty patients. They could all read except two. One man asked for prayer. There was one death during the quarter and we were called upon to officiate."

Fourteen members of the cradle roll at Holguin, Cuba, were graduated into the beginners' department at the end of the first quarter this year. Susie J. Martin and Bertrell S. McClean had worked together to make the occasion a success. Written invitations were sent to all cradle roll members and to their parents. The attendance reached one hundred and thirteen. There were simple exercises at the close of the school with all members of the cradle roll and of the beginner's department present on the platform. Finally diplomas were presented to those graduating. A visiting friend remarked that it was the best session of a Sunday School she had seen in Cuba.

1 The First Necessity.

(a) A meeting which lacks interest and does not respond to the ordinary Christian Endeavor Methods of awakening enthusiasm.

(b) A promotor who is acquainted with the benefits of a study class.

(1) He should be sympathetic, tactful, deeply interested in the welfare of the society and thoroughly convinced that the study class idea can awaken interest. No fad should be tried on a struggling society.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Oregon Yearly Meeting might be nicknamed the "Record-Breaking Givers." There is surely no Yearly Meeting that gives so much according to its wealth as Oregon. It has been estimated by several who are in a position to know that if Indiana Yearly Meeting or any other of the larger eastern Yearly Meetings would give, in accord, with the precedent set by Oregon there would be funds not only to support the colleges, all Yearly Meeting stock, double the missionary gifts, but entirely support the offices of the Five Years' Meeting. This sounds rather large, but I am inclined to believe it is so. Hard times which were so talked of in the east a year or so ago are in full sway in Oregon, yet in meeting after meeting Friends met the appeals for funds. After apparently the congregation had been wrung dry on Saturday afternoon in equipping a commercial department for the college, the same people in the evening at the first request, gave sixty-five dollars to Young Friends' work. In the next meeting nearly seven hundred dollars were raised for evangelistic work. And at other meetings sums for temperance, literature, etc., were pledged. When we realize that these Friends have just finished raising $100,000 for the college it makes one wonder at such courage and devotion.

The Yearly Meeting will also be remembered for its spirit of friendliness and co-operation. This is one of the most beautiful things about a Friends' Yearly Meeting. Friendships are renewed, old times discussed and new plans made. It is to be hoped that this spirit of friendliness will not be lost from our Yearly Meetings.

Again there was a marked evangelistic spirit in the meetings. For the most part this was very uplifting, but sometimes the enthusiasm of bringing people to Christ carried some to the verge of the ridiculous. Yet we will not forget the love feasts around the altar where together we poured out our hearts to God.

Many people felt that the spirit of criticism and fear of other Yearly Meetings and colleges was considerably less this year than formerly. People seem to feel that it is time to quit fighting within our own ranks and to begin work to bring the warring, dying world to Christ. We can afford to let a man state his beliefs different from us if he gives himself through the power of God to changing the present world order.

Though small in numbers Oregon Yearly Meeting is powerful in consecration and determination. As her young people undertake a study of Quakerism and her pastors become no less spiritual and more tolerant in dogma surely there are bright prospects for Friends in the Northwest.

THOMAS E. JONES.

SNAP SHOTS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES IN OREGON.

The following brief reviews may give the reader an insight into the condition of the Young Friends' work in Oregon.

Portland—This Society is made up of fifty-two active young people most of whom have recently been married. The average age of the Society is a little above the ordinary young people's meeting, but its constituents are still loyal to Endeavor. The meeting looks after the social instincts of the community. A baseball team and tennis clubs furnish opportunity to work off superfluous energies.

Lents Meeting is situated in the outskirts of Portland. There is a movement on foot to call this the Second Friends' Church of Portland, while the meeting mentioned above, once known as "Sunny-side" is to be named the First Friends' Church. Both of the Portland meeting houses are made out of wood and both congregations are planning to build new quarters. The first is to put up an imposing structure of stone while the latter will enlarge its present building. The Endeavor Society is composed of twenty members at Lents. Its outlook is essentially evangelistic. Some of its members have been enthusiastic supporters of the Holiness Movement.

It is becoming quite interested in Quakerism. Plans are now on foot to start a Quaker Study Class. More attention is now being given to the social instincts of Young Friends.

Spring Brook meeting house is located in a small town. It is built of wood and has one auditorium. The Christian Endeavor Society meets here every Sunday evening with an average attendance of twenty-five members. These young people have paid little attention to the social or educational side of their work. A strong evangelistic spirit, however, has been present. This has kept things going. We hope this spirit will not be lost, but that the former points will be strengthened.

Rex Meeting is located on a hillside in a small town four or five miles north of Newberg. Prunes and berries furnish the main source of income. The young people here are wide awake and are ready to form a Young Friends' Group if some one will present the matter. Christian Endeavor seems to work better in most of the meetings on the coast, so we advocate that such be the organization at this place.

Marion Meeting is so close to Spring Brook that there has been considerable question whether it should not be consolidated with the town meeting. Still there are several young people in this country district who would not go to the town meeting. If it does not cause friction with the Presbyterian young people it might be well to start an Endeavor here.

Newberg supports a large Friends' Church and Pacific College. The house is built of brick, has gallery, Endeavor and Sunday School rooms, a kitchen and a number of class rooms. This is the Yearly Meeting house. The college students attend church at this place and are leaders in various departments of its work. There are forty-four active members in the Christian Endeavor Society. Twelve of these are above twenty-five and are beginning to want something more to their taste than C. E. The others are very enthusiastic for Endeavor, but are timid about leading. It is hoped there can be a division in the Society, letting all those over twenty-five go into a study class and the remainder run the C. E. (Reports on other meetings will be given next week).

Never let enter your mind a shadow of doubt as to the love of the Father's heart or the power of the Father's arm.—George Muller.

CHURCH AT WORK

Long Beach, California—John F. Kimber, formerly of Rhode Island, now a resident of Whittier, filled the pulpit at Long Beach on June 11. On the same day our own pastor, Andrew F. Mitchell, delivered a temperance sermon at the West Whittier Church. The fight is on again this year for prohibition in this state and we are praying that the temperance forces may be victorious. Our pastor was invited to deliver an address on peace before the Veteran's Union, an organization whose membership is made up of the old soldiers, both Union and Confederate. The address was delivered at their regular meeting on June 5, before a large audience and it was an inspiration to note the enthusiasm with which it was received. Mr. Mitchell also delivered the annual address before the alumni association of Whittier College during commencement, his topic being "Putting Conscience Into Life." Recently our leading Long Beach bank, in connection with the celebration of their twentieth anniversary, offered prizes for the best articles telling why the bank had succeeded. The first prize of $50.00 was awarded to Andrew F. Mitchell.

Chester, Indiana—On June 18 there was an all day basket meeting held at Chester Friends Church by the direction of our Yearly Meeting and Quarterly Meeting Superintendents, conducted by Elwood Davenport and Elmer Hale.

On the evening of the 21st the Monthly Meeting was held. Aside from the routine business, there was an article read from the Minister's and Workers' Conference held at Lynn, Indiana, the first of June, advising Friends to be more faithful in the attendance of Sabbath services, avoiding automobile rides and family reunions on that day.

Sabbath School on the 25th was a review of the lessons in the quarter, in which the little folks told the story of what disobedience and obedience meant. The intermediates gave the twelve principal characters in the lessons of the quarter and the young peoples' class gave the result of the two missionary tours. The meeting for worship on that day was attended by four young Friends from East Main Street Church, Richmond. Brother Price gave the message and some special singing.

Fountain City, Ind.—Leannah Hobson has received a unanimous call from the pastoral committee to remain the fourth year as pastor. The work is prospering and the Sabbath School and prayer meeting are increasing in attendance and interest. The Children's Day was a success. The ages of those who took part in the exercises ranged from five to ninety-two years, as there are four in the Sabbath School that are eighty and older. Mrs. Charles, who is eighty years old, was present at church every Sabbath during the year.

Greenfield, Indiana—The Men's class of the Friends Bible School entertained the women's class and officers and teachers of the school last evening at the home of Oscar H. Trader and wife on North State Street. The musical program consisted of duets, quartettes and a chorus of male voices, with Miss Rita Trader as accompanist. Toasts were given by William Binford, teacher of the men's class; Walter Henley, Eldon Robb and Oscar H. Trader. Responses were made by Mrs. Rollin Stuart and Mrs. J. H. Brooks. Refreshments of strawberries, ice cream, lemonade and home made cake, baked by the men, were served. Sixty-four persons enjoyed the occasion.

Mr. Hoffman took for his subject, "Let us go on unto perfection," Heb. 6:1. The three heads of his subject were given as seeking for physical, mental and spiritual perfection and the natural dependence of the one upon the other of these attainments. The members of the class were urged to find places to which they were fitted, and to press on toward the mark of their high calling.

The Wheat Yield Tells the Story

of Western Canada's Rapid Progress

The heavy crops in Western Canada have caused new records to be made in the handling of grains by railroads. For while the movement of these heavy shipments has been wonderfully rapid, the resources of the different roads, despite enlarged equipments and increased facilities, have been strained as never before, and previous records have thus been broken in all directions. The largest Canadian wheat shipments through New York ever known are reported for the period up to October 15th, upwards of four and a quarter million bushels being exported in less than six weeks, and this was but the overflow of shipments to Montreal, through which point shipments were much larger than to New York.

Yields as high as 60 bushels of wheat per acre are reported from all parts of the country; while yields of 45 bushels per acre are common. Thousands of American farmers have taken part in this wonderful production. Land prices are still low and free homestead lands are easily secured in good localities, convenient to churches, schools, markets, railways, etc. There is no war tax on land and no conscription. Friends Washington Peace Headquarters closes with a final appeal to all Meetings in the United States to influence their Senators against the proposed increase in the Naval Bill.

Friends Washington Peace Headquarters has closed its office in Washington and transferred its records to the office of the Philadelphia Joint Peace Committee, where they will be used in sending out literature to Friends from that center. Letters and inquiries addressed to Friends Peace Committee, 111 South Thirteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa., will receive prompt attention.

NEIGHBORLY RELATIONS BETWEEN THE AMERICAS.

"South America is, for us North Americans, practically a newly discovered continent today," said Bishop Wm. F. Oldham at a dinner given in the Hotel St. Denis, New York City, June 2, by the Committee on Cooperation in Latin America. "We are standing at a time when the evangelical forces have suddenly had a rebirth of consciousness that there is actually a great tract of territory with new conditions at the south of us, where any helpful friendship from us will be welcomed," continued the Bishop. "Indeed one has a right to think that before our generation has passed, there will begin to be in South America movements parallel to the movements in this land fifty, sixty, seventy years ago. And, if I may speak as a Methodist, I am aching to see Latin-American circuit-riders take possession of those great areas."

"Those of us who attended the Conference in Cuba," declared Mr. J. E. McAfee, of the Presbyterian Church, "are accustomed to say that a miracle was wrought there. And there are a good many evidences of it. (See report of this conference by Chas. E. Tebbetts in American Friend of May 18). It was seen in the change of sentiment on the part of leaders, and it was marked also in the whole atmosphere and temper of the Conference. In some cases the changed attitude was remarkable. In one session a leader arose and made an address which was not very gratifying. At the close of that same session, the same man arose to conclude the discussion, and so changed was he in his whole attitude that some of us had difficulty in recognizing him as the same individual. One of the notable results of this Conference was the taking of initial steps for a central, unified missionary training school where the youth from the whole island may come together."

"The Panama Congress is really making most Latin-American movements out-of-date," ventured Secretary S. G. Inman. "We find that we must make over our ideas of Christian cooperation and unity. This is the particular work that our Committee is striving to do."

The Society of Friends finds herself today in the midst of this aggressive Christian movement on behalf of our Latin American neighbors. Our mission in Mexico was founded in 1871 and our work in Cuba was started in 1900. In both these countries, Friends missions are strongly established and have had an enviable record both for numbers of converts and for the strength and faithfulness of the native Christian churches which have grown up through their influence. Furthermore, Friends are now represented in the cooperative and union movements referred to in the above paragraphs. The General Secretary of our Board of Missions was present at the Conferences at Panama and Havana last February and is a member of the Committee on Christian Literature appointed at Panama. Representatives of our Cuba and Mexico missions were also at Panama. Members of the missionary staff in both countries, as well as representatives of the Board, are serving on various cooperative committees which are at work on plans for improving and enlarging the scope of missionary work throughout those two republics. We cannot escape the conviction that it was for the service which we as a church might render to the Kingdom of Christ in this great day of opportunity in Latin America that Friends were divinely led years ago to undertake missionary work in these neighboring countries. "It is our duty to make the past a success."

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

Seattle, Washington,
June 3, 1916.

Dear Friend:

The American Friend of June 1 has just reached me and I have read with great interest and appreciation your editorial on "An Unparalleled Opportunity."

The editorial meets my whole-hearted approval. If we can only be big enough to forget our trivial shibboleths and interpret the gospel by word and deed in terms of real life, what a power we might be!

I am glad the editor of The American Friend has the vision and the courage to speak so. Keep it up!

Sincerely your friend,

were determined to hinder his work as much as possible, as the persecution was about to begin when it was thought best for him to depart. He passed from there, by sea, to Athens. Here he was apparently alone, so far as his former companions were concerned, Silas and Timothy having been sent on missions to Thessalonica and Philippi. While Paul was waiting for them to return he viewed the city and preached as opportunity presented itself.

An altar, To An Unknown God. Not an unusual sight among the Greeks. They were a devout people and since there were, as they thought, many Gods they wished to be sure that they gave due respect to all of them. This one, according to one tradition, had saved them from a great plague. The statement, An Unknown God, lent itself easily to Paul's purpose, and when the opportunity came he boldly undertook to proclaim his message.

This effort "on Mars Hill" should be compared with his sermon in the synagogue in Antioch of Pisidia. There he was speaking to Jews and appealed to their history. Here he is speaking to Greeks and adapts himself to the changed situation. He is able to quote from their own literature, thus proving himself a master of the situation. This trait in Paul is to be commended. Too frequently we have but one line of approach and the probabilities are that it is a line too short for the occasion.

This message to the Athenians is worth careful study. Paul makes some very interesting observations.

In the first place he is very careful to portray the character and power of the God whom he is preaching, then he turns to the human element of the creation, declaring that God made of one every nation of men. This statement touches a very serious problem. The race question is one of the greatest obstacles to world peace. It goes much deeper than the larger divisions of the human family—the white, yellow and black races—it is one of the most important factors in the present European struggle. The Teuton versus the Slav for instance. It lies at the bottom of much of the so-called Balkan problem. It is the tendency of each one of these petty divisions of the world's population to think it has been destined by God to be the ultimate arbiter of the destinies of the world. Each seems to think that it has the true ideas of government, culture, civilization and all that goes to make the ideal life. Perhaps we of the States are over presumptuous in our attitude to the rest of the world, especially towards our southern neighbors. Big brother is not always infallible.

Paul also has the idea that his religion is the world religion. There is but one God and all men are his creation, hence all men should worship the one God. Evidently we are generations away from the ultimate goal as Paul here proclaims it. The world is receiving Christianity—in a way. Europe has not as yet been united in its worship to the extent that as one race, one family, it can worship at one altar. Is God still An Unknown God?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

July 16.

Topic—"Purity, Temperance and Strength" Dan. 1:8-20:

Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's dainties nor with the wine which he drank." He had a temperate heart, therefore he had a temperate life. A temperate life means a pure soul and a strong mind. Tennyson wrote, "My strength is as the strength of ten because my heart is pure." There never was a more beautiful and pathetic prayer than that of the Psalmist in his hour of shame, "Create in me a clean heart." "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." Purity is power, because it means integrity of thought, integrity of conduct. It means wholeness. It has been characteristic of great leaders that they have been virtuous in conduct, pure in thought. A great trait of General Grant's character was his purity. Napoleon once said "Had I yielded to human weakness, I should have lost my power." Chemists tell us that scarlet is the only color which cannot be bleached. There is certainly one sin which only Divine Power can bleach out of the character. When the Psalmist wished to emphasize the power of Divine forgiveness and love, he said, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be made white as wool."

Just suppose that we could get rid of all unnecessary and previous terror; just suppose that we could be sure of final victory in every conflict, and final emergency out of every shadow into brightest day; how our hearts would be lightened! how much more bravely we should work and fight and march forward! This is the courage to which we are entitled, and which we may find in the thought that God is with us everywhere.—Henry Van Dyke, D. D.

One son, two daughters, two grandchildren, a brother and a sister survive her. Funeral services were held at New London, Indiana, and were conducted by Samuel Talbert.

Harold—Mr. Cyrus Nathan Harold, son of Nathan and Betsy Hawkins Harold, was born near Carmel, Indiana, January 20, 1855, and died at Rochester, Minnesota, April 19, 1916, from complications following an operation eight days before. He was a birthright Friend and through a bright experience of conversion in early boyhood he was firmly established in the experiences and principles of a spiritual religion. From boyhood to his last moments he knew and trusted his Savior. Following graduation at the high school at Carmel he began the study of medicine, later going to Indianapolis, where he was associated with his dearest earthly friend, N. D. Woodard. He graduated from the Physio-Medical College of Indiana in 1879 and after two years' successful practice at Eagletown, Indiana, he opened an office in Richmond, Indiana, where he practiced for fourteen years. He then moved to Indianapolis, where he resided at the time of his death. He was a prominent member of the First District Medical Society, the Indiana State Physio-Medical Society, the Indianapolis Physio-Medical Society and the National Physio-Medical Society. How Large Is A Rose?

By James Henry Burdick

I said to a gardener old one day,

"How large is a rose. How large is a rose?"

He measured an inch and a half each way

And kindly smiled as a gardener may;

"Measured by inches I should say

That that's the size of a rose."

I said to a Bride one night in June,

"How large is a rose. How large is a rose?"

"By a memory sweet of an old love time,

And the vows that were pledged by the light of the moon.

Measured by these, all passed too soon;

Ah, that's the size of the rose."

But still my question perseveres;

"O sorrowing one, How large is a rose?"

And withered and dead as her hopes and fears

She showed me the roses of other years—

The blighted blossoms faded in years—

"Ah, that's the size of a rose."

I said at last, "O hear my own,

How large is The Rose, Sweet Sharon's Rose?"

"Measured from Calvary's suffering moan

Where mortals weep o'er their sins, and groan,

Up to Immanuel's conquering throne,

Lo! that's the size of The Rose."

"Preparedness"

(With apologies where due)

By Charles H. Battey.

The shades of fear were falling fast
As through this land of ours there passed
A bogey of most strange device
Who uttered a cry not new nor nice,
"Preparedness."

His brow was black, his eye beneath
Gleamed like a dagger from its sheath,
And like an ancient clarion rung,
That note that is too often sung,
"Preparedness."

In happy homes he saw the light
Of household fires glow warm and bright,
But o'er the wave fresh terrors shone
And from his lips escaped the groan,
"Preparedness."

"Try not that dodge," the old man said,
"Beware cold commonsense ahead, Repentance will sometime abide,"
But still that bogey man replied,
"Preparedness."

"O stay," the maiden said, "and rest
Thy head upon the Truth's fair breast."
A tear stood in that idiot's eye
But still he made inane reply
"Preparedness."

"Beware munition maker's scheme
To skim this country's richest cream,"
It was the old man's last advice
And failed to move that heart of ice
"Preparedness."

At break of day when peace is here
Real lovers of our country dear
Will utter their most thankful prayer
That finally is 'scaped in air,
"Preparedness."

And someone in the days to come
Will find half buried, old and dumb,
This motto of a feverish age,
Now but museum's heritage,
"Preparedness."

There in the twilight, cold and gray,
Lifeless, not beautiful, he lay,
And from a sky low frowning far
This voice fell with a general jar,
"Preparedness."

Friends Missionary Advocate

The Friends Missionary Advocate for July is a "Japan issue," and is a most interesting and valuable number. Edith F. Sharpless presents a readable and informing article on "Spread of Christian Thought in Japan." Nine pages are devoted to a history of the Japan mission, together with an account of the present work. There are other interesting articles, including letters from Alice G. Lewis and Elizabeth J. S. Binford. Several illustrations add to the worth of this particular issue.

The Advocate is always interesting and presents information which no Friends' family can afford to be without. It is issued monthly and contains thirty-two pages in addition to cover. Send fifty cents for a year's subscription to the treasurer, Ethel Kirk Calvert, Selma, Ohio. Add twelve cents for papers sent to Canada and foreign countries.

What To Do At Once To Save The United States From Militarism.

If there is a Committee of the American Union Against Militarism in your city, join it.

If there is none, form one. All it needs as a start is a chairman and a secretary. Write to Headquarters for a detailed plan. Enlarge your committee and appoint sub-committees as the work grows.

Make the work grow by doing the following things:

Distribute literature. Ask headquarters for an initial supply which will be sent free. When you see how useful it is you will want quantities, which can be had at merely nominal rates. This is the kind of "ammunition" it pays to buy.

Get names and addresses of sympathizers. Headquarters will provide as many Union slips as you can use. Distribute them and get signatures at meetings of clubs, churches, labor unions, and associations of any and every kind.

Give our facts to the newspapers. See the editors personally. Write letters for publication. Ask our publicity department for suggestions.

Send a Special Dollar and ask to be put on the mailing list for the confidential bulletins concerning developments at Washington.

Write to your Congressmen and Senators. Remember that they are in Washington to represent you. Don't fail to let them know what you want,—that you are not fooled by the exploded notion that "preparedness" prevents war. Make them understand that you want our country's millions appropriated for establishing friendly relations with other nations instead of preparing to fight them. Insist on constructive patriotism. The United States is big enough to set new fashions for the world and now is the time to do it.

The Cedar Lake Conference

The near approach of the Young Friends' Conference at Cedar Lake, Indiana, should stimulate interest in this gathering throughout the length and breadth of the Society of Friends in this country. No little part of the revival of interest in the work of the church among our young people is due to the inspiration, fellowship and study at this annual gathering, which, for purposes of convenience and greater freedom from the distractions of other events, is transferred this year from Winona to Cedar Lake.

To accomplish the greatest good, however, in binding Young Friends together and in bringing to them a vision of the needs and work of the whole church, every Yearly Meeting, and as near as possible every Quarterly Meeting, should be liberally represented. The fellowship of these occasions is no small part of the benefit to be enjoyed, and year after year, Yearly Meetings, east and west, are becoming better acquainted with each other.

When, however, these young people are brought face to face with the problems of the church, and are driven to their knees to seek for the divine touch and guidance in their lives, the value of the experience cannot be measured in words. There should be a large attendance next month at Cedar Lake, and all who participate should go praying for the blessing of the Lord upon the assembly.

The Call of Penn College

On another page of this issue will be found an endorsement by the Board of Education of the Five Years Meeting of the appeal which Penn College is making to American Friends for help in this time of its distress. In recent issues of The American Friend the Penn College situation has been set forth most clearly. Friends throughout America cannot fail to take note of the statement that if the sum of $400,000 is not subscribed by August 1st, Penn College will likely have to close her doors. This would be a calamity that is unthinkable.

Penn College has stood for years well at the head of the group of Friends' colleges which stretch across the continent. Its value both to Iowa Yearly Meeting and to educational work in general among Friends can hardly be over-estimated. Not only must it have a new building to take the place of the principal building destroyed by fire more than a month ago, but it must have an adequate endowment that will enable it to keep pace with the rising educational standards in Iowa and throughout the country. All Friends, who ever expect to do anything for Penn College, should hasten to send in their subscriptions now, at a time when they will count for most in this period of Penn's greatest need.

The London General Epistle, 1916

To Friends the World Over, and to all Who Seek the Way of Life.

Dear Friends and Comrades,

We need one another in these dark days if we are to find the way to the true goal of humanity. We have missed the way. In struggling to find it we have been foolish enough to think that we could find it alone, or in small groups. Each group has its own pet scheme; and we call our different plans by names that exclude those who will not use our labels. Socialism, nationalism, democracy, orthodoxy, conservatism, liberalism—these are so many names by which we group ourselves around ideas. The goal of the race must include all noble human aims. Is it not time to set about seeking that goal—together?

British and German, Slav and Teuton, Mongol and Negro—into such groups we have been divided by birth. And so we conclude that we must struggle one against the other, each to win his own ends or work out his particular ideal of good. Can we not see a common good in which none shall be crushed, in which all shall strive together for more worthy ends than any of us can see alone?

There is warfare for all of us in this world. But against whom? and for what end? It is not our brother men who are our enemies, but the germs of disease that destroy men's bodies, and the false ideas and evil passions that destroy their souls. We strive for a state of society in which the good of all may be achieved by the self-denying labor of each. In this warfare we need one another. Every true man and every true woman counts. We cannot afford to lose brave spirits, whatever national allegiance they own, to whatever sect or party they belong.

Is it not time to try to find our way back to one another? We are all more or less in bonds. Some of us are bound by never-ceasing toil, and we cannot find the way to our best life. Some of us are bound by wealth that dims the vision of the Highest, and leaves us poor in soul when we are called rich. Some of us are bound, by what seems like a tragic fate, to take the lives of our fellowmen while we only wish to give our lives for our country. Some of us are bound to appear the enemies of our country for conscience sake, when we wish to serve her with all our powers. Many of us are carrying a sorrow that is almost more than we can bear, and we cannot see the meaning of the loss of those whom we loved better than ourselves. Some of us are cut off from friends with whom we have worked, by deep differences of opinion that we cannot reconcile.

How are we to find our way back to one another? There is a way back, and, as we find this way and take it, we shall be able together to wage the one warfare worthy of all human endeavor.

There once lived a Man in whose short life men and women of the most widely diverse races and types have alike found inspiration. He moved with equal ease among rich and poor. He had a word of cheer for little children, for sorrowing women, for the outcast from society, for the sincere and true-hearted wherever He met them. His words opened men's eyes to the meaning of love. His deeds stirred their hearts by the beauty of love. His death won them by the power of love. Thus all sorts of people came to find in Him a Brother and a Saviour. If that kind of life were lived by many people today, the world would be a very different place. Can we not all begin at once to take Him seriously? Let us try together to see if His way will work. Let each one make the experiment. We want to begin without waiting until everyone else is ready to begin too.

Would not this mean personal disaster? There seem to be so few arguments in favor of it, except that Jesus tried it, and it would, at any rate, be something new to try it in our common life today. But is it really possible to apply this to modern conditions, and to the whole community? Would it not lead straight to national ruin? Our own methods have not been crowned with such great success as to give us any confidence in discarding the wisdom of Jesus Christ. Is it not possible that He knew best, and that He had something quite distinctive to say to the world? May not His rising again be an actual fact big with meaning for us today? If so, we could at least say that by His death on the Cross, He won a truer victory than was ever won by armies or navies, and that God was indeed with Him, and is always with those who follow His way.

We stand by the conviction that this was and is actually the case, and that the most real and abiding force in human affairs was seen in operation in the life, death and rising again of Jesus Christ. That force we call the love of God. It cannot really be vanquished. Christ is not dead. He lives in our midst today. We know something of His spirit in our own experience. We want to know more of His spirit, because we are sure that He can lead us and all men in the way of truth. Our desire is to be altogether ready to follow wherever He leads, even when we cannot see where we are going. We are convinced that He is leading us to something very different from all that has satisfied us so far.

We may have to learn to give up the whole idea of defending our rights, and be willing to stand, as Christ stood, defenceless in the midst of a world of possible enemies. Might it not be that this plan would turn them into friends—a much better thing than defeating them? We may have to learn anew the real meaning of justice, and to demonstrate it in the world as Christ did by accepting the full consequences of injustice. Is it not possible that we should thus find ourselves possessed of the only weapon by which evil can be overthrown—even the love that never fails?

The way may be difficult. The service called for may be menial, unseen, unrecognized. It matters not, if only, along with all others who really love their fellows, we can help to find the way back to one another, and to the Son of God. Let us begin again. The mistakes we have made have had terrible consequences. All the world is torn and divided, and there may be worse things to come. If we were all to begin as little children, might not God use even us to save the world from threatened disaster? Might we not wage a winning war against all that destroys men's bodies and souls? Could we not find the way along which we might reach the true goal for the whole human family?

The way to discover and reach the goal is for each one of us to begin in dead earnest. When one person really steps out into the desperate venture of following Jesus all the way, someone else will see and want to follow too. There is a splendid contagion in courageous goodwill. One man, one Church, one nation, that takes the risks of such a following may lead the world to a better day. Is it not worth trying? Is it not, in fact, the one thing in the world that is really worth trying? Is it not the way by which we and our brothers may come to know God?

Together with all who strive for these things we seek to know and follow His wonderful will for men. Let us turn to Him without any reserve in the confidence that He is eager to give to us His best—now.

Signed in and on behalf of the Meeting,
JOHN H. BARLOW, Clerk.

Dr. Hole's Question of Conscience.

By CHARLES F. DOLE.

Some one has kindly sent me your paper of Fourth Month 27 with Prof. Hole's discussion of "The League to Enforce Peace" from the point of view of one who abhors war. I confess that I found this article by one of the Society of Friends rather depressing. It struck me as ingenious and labored rather than the kind of straightforward utterance which I associate with the simple doctrines of your Society.

May I venture to try to put the case as it appears to one who, so far as he knows, has no interest, except that of duty, in holding an unpopular position in the minority of his community as regards the question at issue. As a believer in the idea of spiritual evolution, I easily agree with Prof. Hole in having no blame for those who for various reasons are unable to see the beauty and commanding power of the ideal laws which I seek to obey.

Here is a tremendous crisis in history. A "Great Cause, God's New Messiah," comes into view more distinctly than ever before. Now is the time to give it devoted and efficient service. The situation is much like that in our fathers' time touching slavery. But the issue appears as usual in a more subtle form. While the evil seems worse than anything else, the old plausible compromise formula is also more insidious; namely, "We can never get rid of this monster evil till all men, that is, all nations agree to put it away." Also, as with slavery and the drink evil, "The thing, bad as it is, still has certain uses in our imperfect stage of civilization." May we not, then, agree with the great majority to allow a modified use of war for the humane purposes of a progressive movement towards its ultimate abolition? This attitude is made more plausible by means of a specious analogy with the local police. But the police have nothing to do with enemies, neither do they expect to kill men. Whereas, war presupposes enemies and destruction, and could no more than slavery exist for a week where good will reigned in men's hearts. This is its law and nature whatever exceptions you seem to find, still proving the rule.

Moreover, I observe that for practical purposes we who abhor war (please observe here, not because it is a use of force, but because it is essentially inhumane) could not just now serve the militarists better than by fabricating a compromise measure for public consumption, whereby we substantially let them have their way for "preparedness," under the guise of a new species of "peace party." They get the reality and the appropriations and we are put off with a dream—a dream with the color of blood!

Let us now ask what we who see the evils of war in the light of an ideal truth are here for. We are here to use every faculty—mind, skill, conscience, humanity—to the utmost in the service of the ideal things, that is, the things that ought to be. This service is life. Like artists or scholars we are bound to report the best that we can see and not "the next best," and not only to report it, but to do our best to accomplish it, like the builders of the grand cathedrals who worked for generations on the lines of the masters. Who will ever do his best if the men with the gift of a sensitive conscience put people off with an easy sense that the wrong thing which prevails is fairly tolerable for our time? The men to whom light is given thus darken the way for everyone. What is the use of the Society of Friends if it falls back and ceases to hold up its light?

What is the big obvious need of the world today? The need is of the old Quaker testimony in new and more persuasive forms of expression. Tell men to believe in the living God. Tell them to believe that men are children of God, and that whatever Jesus did, they can and should do also. Tell them that the law of life is the way of the good will, and that no man can ever safely do what the good will forbids. Tell them that nothing less than the Golden Rule ever works in human relations, and that the same rule holds good between states. Show them that this world calamity came upon us because men did not obey the rule of the universe. Do not let them suppose that any compromise measure to "enforce peace" by the threat of war, or even "peace with justice," that nevertheless leaves out good will, can do more than to put off the construction of valid civilization.

Why should those who see and believe these things say anything less? Here is a grand "tug of war" in the moral world, where the new and the old struggle for mastery. Only the few perhaps see the line of human progress. The vast majority drag backwards. No one has ever shown them the way of advance. Malign forces pull hard the wrong way. "Good people" pull in the way of their fears and distrust. Ill will, contempt and resentment blind them; and in the height of the struggle men of light and leading cease to pull with all their might the way of their faith, their hope and their love and they drop back to take on easy second-best, and they pull where no one needs them at all, where no breath of chivalrous enthusiasm can reach them. Does the spirit of goodness really bid them do this? How do they know that the easy thing which they allow is the best that we can do? How can they know if they pulled with all their might as their ideals point, that a multitude of plain people catching their note of courage would not use up and push their way and win the victory? Did ever any triumph of righteousness come by waiting for everyone to agree to work for it or rather by the fearless venture of those who gladly offered to take all risks for its sake?

Finally I do not like Prof. Hole's conclusion that the men whose conscience forbids them to fight, out of considerations of state-craft, should approve a scheme which certainly compels men of less sensitive conscience to fight. I suspect that he confuses his philosophy with his humanity. Philosophy indeed bids us be kindly in our judgment of men who do evil ignorantly. As humane men we are the more bound not to approve their conduct, but to try to show its harmful nature. Thus, when I have decided that no duty to the state would permit me to become a hangman, I can no longer stand by and cheerfully let other men do the hanging. I must try to put an end to the barbarity of capital punishment. So with the barbarity of war, under whatever guise it takes. I cannot approve a system that threatens to send my neighbor's boys to defend the outworn Monroe Doctrine in South America, or perhaps to "enforce peace" in the Balkans, when it would be tyranny for me to be sent on such an errand. I cannot be content to "go with the multitude to do evil" on the ground that they have passed a vote to that effect by a constitutional majority. What is the individual conscience in the democracy good for, if it lets itself be comfortably merged in the transient opinion of a careless or ignorant or corrupt majority?

Outposts in Holland.

By M. CATHERINE ALBRIGHT.

"Here is thy footstool and there rest thy feet, where live the poorest and lowliest and lost."—TAGORE.

Returning from a hurried visit with my brother to the outposts of War Victims' Relief Work in Holland, I find my impressions center round eight different points, from which the influence and activity radiate, including the two centers of organizing and secretarial work, shortly to be amalgamated into one at The Hague.

Flushing comes first and stands by itself. It was here that in the autumn of 1914 as many as 30,000 refugees would arrive in one day, pouring in by train, by boat, on foot, till every house in the little town had to be requisitioned to shelter them, according to the number of bedsteads and chairs it might happen to contain. Such a condition of things demanded help of all kinds and a little party of Friends went over to see what assistance could be rendered. From this first attempt all the rest of the work has grown. At Flushing there is no longer any outward sign of congestion and all is orderly and quiet, but every nook and corner is full of refugees and even the great barges on the river shelter many families, who cling to their independent life of poverty and privation there, rather than resort to the organized camps, where so many of their compatriots are congregated.

Stranded Belgians of all kinds are a constant element at Flushing, and among them our workers go in and out, cheering and counselling, and above all assisting with temporary employment. This is their daily avocation, but about once a month there arrives in Flushing an emergency party of "exchanged prisoners," under the care of "S. O. F." workers in Holland, coming through from the German frontier to London, who have long hours to wait before embarking and must be fed and watched and comforted till they finally sail at day-break. Disabled soldiers, forlorn women, helpless children, negro sailors, the miserable and even the insane, must be helped on their way.

Passing now from Flushing to the great Camps where the Dutch Government has ably provided food and shelter for the mass of refugees in Holland, we find one at Ede, built for 10,000 now housing about 4,000; one at Uden, now housing about 6-7,000; one at Nunspeet accommodating 4-5,000, and a smaller but sadly crowded one, at Gouda for about 1,300. There are also the camps for interned Belgian soldiers, barrack-camps, around which have grown up a floating population of women and children, who have followed their husbands and fathers to this foreign land. Some of the civilians' camps have been established more than a year now, and problems which seemed far off at the beginning of the war are now pressing heavily on the refugees and their hosts.

Imagine a great tract of common from which the heather has been temporarily expelled to make room for endless one-storied sheds, large and small, in which the sleeping, eating, cooking, washing, nursing, schooling, sewing, tailoring, carpentering, playing, entertaining and worshipping of thousands of people has to go on; people huddled together in their flight, whole streetfuls of families flying in haste and now crowded into the common life of the camp, to accommodate themselves as best they may to its semi-imprisonment conditions. It was a happy thought that suggested itself to Friends, of providing for at least a few families the possibility of a home of their own, a wooden hut of two or more rooms to be made by their own labor and perhaps to be taken with them eventually on their return to their own country. The idea caught on, it seemed to bring back hope and home and now there has grown up outside of the great camps in Holland a little village of some 100 or more houses where one may see today family life being resumed, the house-mother taking a pride once more in her own bits of furniture and belongings, and in the little picture on the wall and the pot of flowers on the window-sill.

And it is in the midst of this new village life that we shall find the outposts of the Society of Friends. In one or more of such wooden huts, with a few yards of garden ground separating them from their neighbors, live our workers at Uden, Ede, Gouda, Nunspeet and Amersfoort. First came the women-pioneers, with leave to work two at a time and organize employment for the women and girls—rug-making, doll-making, embroidery, etc. Next came their men colleagues, with bigger plans still for brush factories, basket-making, doormats, toys, shoes, etc. Work-rooms for women and girls, work-rooms for men and boys, creches for infants, clubs and classes, games, rambles, football, scouting, social evenings on Sunday—these keep our staff of volunteers busy from morning till night. The nominally leisure hours are all too short to prepare for the exigencies of the morrow, and leave little margin for more than a brief half-hour of chat or recreation round the common stove in the common sitting-room of the women-workers' hut. Compared with the big problems of the camps as a whole, it seems but little that the "S. O. F." workers are doing, in organizing work and recreation for some 500 of the refugees. But each little group, isolated though it may be in its own somewhat desolate location, is in reality an outpost of the Society of Friends in Holland. Though only perhaps half of the forty workers are "Friends," they and those working with them are standing for ideals very dear to the Society and working loyally under its banner.

It is not for nothing that the weeks go by and find them still there, close at hand for the refugees to look to for sympathy, encouragement, advice, good-will, cheeriness and devotion. It is not for nothing that the Dutch authorities and officials on whom the larger work of the camp organization depends, and who, in many cases, are heartily devoting themselves to the task, should recognize that paid work and official work is not all that is called for and that there is a place for volunteers who can give time to study and develop individuality and character. It is not for nothing that our organizer, Miss Vulliamy, watches the whole situation and is endeavoring to press forward into new centers where refugees are in sad need of help and the long-drawn-out months of the war are daily creating new difficulties and hardships. Our "S. O. F." workers hold no easy outposts: many things are poured into their ears which must never come out again through their lips, many troubles they cannot lighten, many wrongs they cannot right, but we who have been privileged to see their work as a whole realize that a stream of gratitude flows from Dutch and Belgian sources, and that in every center the workers stand for the reconciliation and hope of "the poorest, the lowliest and the lost."

The Woman as a Successful Pastor.

By BERTHA STUBBS SUMPTER.

(Read at Kansas Yearly Meeting Pastor's Alliance.)

This age is the woman's age. A modern encyclopedia, giving the census for 1900, says there are 5,329,807 women engaged in gainful occupations, but failed to mention the ministry as one of them. Through much discouragement and opposition woman had sought an equal footing with her brother in the political, social, educational and ecclesiastical world, and has proved herself worthy of it. The old theory of the dark ages—the theory of her inferiority—has been effectually exploded, especially in Kansas. We make no apology as we stand by our husbands, brothers or sons in the world's work, equally interested with them in its activity, and equally responsible with them for its progress and success.

In regard to the ministry, the women of our own Church have some 200 years the advantage of the women in our sister Churches. But very few of the other Evangelical Churches give women the rights of the ministry as do Friends. Our Church has not had to settle this question, for as we read the history of the Church, we find woman has always borne an equal share with her brother in the work, preaching and suffering as did he. No persecution came upon early Friends that she did not bear her full part. No prison was so dark or damp, no public whipping too disgraceful, no danger so great that she shunned it if duty called her there. The women as well as the men counted it all joy to suffer for Christ's sake.

Friends have always held to the belief that man and woman were created equal, and that God's call comes to, and His gifts are bestowed upon individuals, irrespective of sex. Neither have they gone far afield for the ground of this belief. It was doubtless under the immediate visitation of the Holy Spirit that Miriam responded to the song of Moses, Deborah uttered her psalm of praise, Hannah poured forth her acceptable thanksgiving in the temple and Huldah prophesied to King Josiah and his men.

Amongst the early ministers of the Gospel dispensation we make note of the daughters of Philip, Priscilla, and Paul speaks of the women associated with him in his missionary journeys as his "fellow-laborers in Christ." The women were closely associated with Jesus, ministering unto Him, preaching the first resurrection sermon and proclaiming the story of His Gospel.

When we speak of woman as a successful pastor, we wish to state first of all our belief that she is not successful because of her sex alone, neither in spite of it, but that the things that go to make success for the man, go to make success for the woman, with but little exception. Success is the accomplishment of the thing we are attempting to do. A successful pastor is the one who reaches the goal toward which he is aiming. This is largely dependent upon the place in which he is serving and upon the character of the person himself. The object before one person might be the building of a church edifice, because that would be the most urgent need in the place. Another may have his entire time and mind centered upon the thought of the conversion of sinners, because that, always the paramount thought, is at this particular time and place the crying need; yet another may have always before his mind's eye the urging into real spiritual activity of the Church as a whole. So no one thing may be pointed out as success, for, as we have tried to show, it is not the same to each person and in every place. Of course we all agree that no person is a successful minister or pastor unless God has called him to the work. We remember how Jesus found His twelve while they were busy with their daily occupations and called them into his service. Parents may dedicate their children, pastors may plead with their young people, but no man may be really called into the ministry except God call him.

A second most important factor in the success of the ministry is the preparation, both educationally and otherwise. This twentieth century is bringing about a revolution in Friends' meetings in this regard, and rightly so. At one time Friends were so fearful of making a matter of merchandise of the ministry, that instead of an education being a qualification, it was almost a disqualification. But in these days when Yearly Meetings own Colleges, Quarterly Meeting Academies, to say nothing of the wonderful free educational system provided by the State, when a young man is taught to think, and a premium is not put upon ignorance, the Church is seeking to keep abreast of the times, and her leaders must have the educational advantages that will make it right and possible for them to be leaders. There is an education that comes not from text books alone, and many of our men and women, eminent, successful ministers, of the generation now passing, can lay claim to little more than this, but for the young men and women who are face to face with opportunities and demands never made upon people before, there must be a larger preparation.

Whether the minister is a man or woman, makes no difference in this particular. We are demanding just as much of the woman as the man—as a preacher. When she comes into the pulpit on the Sabbath morning she must have a message that clearly comes from God, and her presentation of it must be concise and forceful. Her language and reasoning must appeal to her hearers. Her logic must carry conviction of the truth she is seeking to present. A sweet voice and a bit of family history is not a sermon when it comes from her lips any more than when uttered by her brother. In fact, we are convinced there is less apology made for the woman's failures than for the man's. Also there are heavier demands made upon her, perhaps because her ministry is less common than a man's and perhaps because she is a woman. She must be what is usually called a good pastor; i. e. equally proficient when it comes to the pulpit, family visiting, making addresses to the High School, caring for the sick, sympathizing with the broken hearted, leading the prayer-meeting, attending the Young Peoples picnics, teaching the Sabbath School class, planning the Missionary Meeting, attending the Ladies Aid, conducting Bible Classes, preaching funerals, performing marriage ceremonies, helping in the W. C. T. U., not forgetting the C. E. and beside these she must have her own home and be very hospitable. In other words, the woman pastor must do two persons' work—the work of the pastor and the work of the pastor's wife. For these things, trivial as they are, are essentials to success.

In conclusion let me say that every pastor owes it to himself, or herself, to be a success. In fact, he dare not do less, for the person who believes in God and himself and his people will succeed.

The Soundness of Early Friends.

By WILLIAM P. SMITH.

In a popular and valuable Sunday School publication expressions recently occur which remind one of some of the errors which were generally accepted by the churches two hundred and fifty years ago and which the early Friends faithfully opposed. Under the head of "Sinning Saints" the old doctrine of Christ's righteousness being imputed to "sinning saints" is taught. The old sinful nature remains, consequently we need not look for a sinless life. Satan does not tempt the "new nature," but the old, and we are "not saints in character," but only in "our standing with God." Whether or not we are acting as sons ought to act does not affect the reality of that relationship. "When God looks at us now he sees only the perfect righteousness of Christ, and some day we shall have in actual experience that imputed righteousness as our very own." "Saints who have received God's grace for the next world, but not for this;" Saints having once been accepted, though they may disobey God and die impenitent, yet "they are saved perhaps for the next world, but useless in this."

The early Friends were no believers in the doctrine "once in grace always in grace," or the "eternal perseverance of the saints," only as they were "kept by the power of God through faith." They did believe in the righteousness of Christ being imputed to the repentant sinner and imparted to the true believer. They taught that the "old nature" or "old man" was to be "put off," "done away," "crucified," not regulated and preserved alongside the new nature, hibernating at seasons.

Listen what William Penn says in his "Primitive Christianity Revived" and other writings. "As Christ died for sin, so we must die to sin. We do believe that He was our holy sacrifice, atonement and propitiation and that He bore our iniquities and that by His stripes we were healed of the wounds Adam gave us in the fall." "In short, that declared remission to all who believe and obey for the sins that are past imputes a righteousness, inasmuch as men on true repentance are imputed as clean of guilt as if they had never sinned, and thus far are justified, but the completion of this, by the working out of sin inherent must be by the power and spirit of Christ in the heart, destroying the old man and his deeds, and bringing in the new and everlasting righteousness. Speaking of "justification, that is forgiveness of the sins that are past through Christ, the alone propitiation, and the sanctification or purgation of the soul from the defiling nature and habits of sin present, which is justification in the complete sense of that word, comprehending both justification from the guilt of the sins that are past as if they had never been committed, through the love and mercy of God in Christ Jesus, and the creatures being made inwardly just through the cleansing and sanctifying power of the spirit of Christ revealed in the soul, which is commonly called sanctification."

George Fox, in one of his epistles to Friends, says "Mind Him that destroys the original of sin and cuts off the entail of Satan; viz: sin, who would have by entail an inheritance of sin in men and women from generation to generation and pleads for it by all his lawyers and counsellors. For though the law which made nothing perfect, did not cut it off, yet Christ, being come, destroys the devil and his works and cuts off the entail of sin. This angers all the devils, lawyers and counsellors, that Satan shall not hold sin by entail in thy garden, in thy field, in thy temple, thy tabernacle." (see Fox's Journal, Philadelphia Ed., Page 277)

the contrary nature, etc." (see Apology, Page 197), and further (Page 223) speaking of sanctification, "We are crucified with Christ, we are become dead with him, and our first man, 'our old man with all his deeds' as well the openly wicked as the seemingly righteous, are all buried and nailed to the cross of Christ." Also Page 229, "In whom this pure and holy birth is fully brought forth, the body of death and sin comes to be crucified and removed."

What a contrast between the teaching of the early Friends and some of the teachers of this day who contend that the "old man," "body of sin," "carnal mind" is not done away, but continues alive, only subjected to the new nature, so the best the child of God can expect in this life is by constant Christian activities to keep the carnal mind in subjection.

"Why So Few Young Friends Are Coming on in the Ministry?"

As an elder and layman in the Friends church we are much interested in a careful consideration of this query. It involves much more than we seem to comprehend, for upon the young people of today the Church must depend for a living ministry of tomorrow. As we behold the dawning of a new day for our Church we are made to wonder what the day will bring forth.

As a Church and people we may well look with pride upon our spirit of philanthropy. We contribute liberally to benevolent institutions and endow colleges, which is well and good. Why not then contribute liberally to endowing a fund for aiding the veterans who have given the best of their lives, faithfully, to the service of the Master?

Let us consider for a moment that our young Friends are justifiable in a pride for a God-given asset in ambition, object and aim in life, with a pure heart emanating from the spirit of God wherever He leadeth them.

The business world offers our young Friends, who ought to be in the ministry, attractive opportunities, with a compensation that enables them to lay aside a competency for old age. Educational institutions, railroad and other large business corporations are making provision to care for their employees in old age.

Our faith is strong in a belief that this subject would meet the approval of the Five Years Meeting if properly laid before it, and that much good would result in a substantial encouraging provision for the care of our worthy superannuated ministry.

We are hoping and praying that the Lord may touch the hearts of men and women, whom he hath bountifully prospered, to leave a portion of their means to endow a fund to be used in caring for His own when the age of inactivity overtakes them, thus encouraging our young Friends to obedience in the call to the ministry.

Sincerely from a full heart and voice from the congregation.

Christian Work

(Editorial from the Panama Daily Star and Herald, February 26, 1916.)

A little plain speaking now and then, though possibly not relished by the best of men, is of decided benefit both to them and to the worst of men as well—nor will it hurt the average man, who is neither worst nor best.

The Congress on Christian Work in Latin-America, which has just completed its scheduled sessions, brought to Panama a large number of notable divines and lay workers in educational, charitable, and church fields. Its purpose was to systematize and co-ordinate such work in Latin-American countries and it was held here, at the geographical and economic center of Latin-America, in order that the delegates from other countries might have personal contact and communion with Latin-Americans and thus learn at first hand their needs and the best methods of accomplishing their fulfilment.

There was a total of 304 delegates and visitors, representing twenty-one nations, and of this number 145 were from the countries it was proposed to benefit. Every Central and South American State was represented and, besides the attendance from the United States and Canada, there were delegates present from England, Spain and Italy. It was truly a representative gathering of the world's Christian workers.

Now, while all Latin-American countries are strongly Roman Catholic, some of them indeed having heavily endowed the church, there is nothing in that fact that should interfere with their hearty co-operation for the purpose above stated. All are Christian in principle, whether Catholic or Protestant, and all should be anxious to advance the cause of Him who was crucified.

The attitude of the Roman Catholic Church was clearly antagonistic to the enterprise from the first, and that is a great pity, for anything that advances the cause of Christ and humanity must, of necessity, be advantageous to that church if it proposes to keep abreast of the times and to keep its advanced position as the champion of progress—material and spiritual. No church in all history has done nobler work for humanity, and Catholic missionaries are, even today, the pioneers of Christian endeavor in the dark spots of the world. It thus seems all the more difficult to understand why the church in Panama opposed the holding of the Congress here and why the authorities of that church forbade its members from having anything to do with the enterprise. Surely the Roman Catholic church is not willing to admit that it fears to compete with other churches in its own field.

Life is not so short but there is always time for courtesy.—Emerson.

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HUNT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE IN PAGAN AFRICA.

In a private letter from Kalmosi, Africa, dated April 27, Alta H. Hoyt tells how encouraged they are over two recent weddings conducted with Christian ceremonies instead of the old pagan customs. We quote a paragraph from her letter.

"We had two more weddings last week. All of them were our own young people, and we are so glad to see them determined to marry amongst the Christians or prospective Christians, rather than outsiders. The parents of one of these girls were determined to have her marry an old heathen man twice her age and they came to us to try to get us to make her go with him. The old mother begged and said, 'O, he has such fine cattle and will give us three for her.' We told them it rested with the girl; if she wanted to go to him herself we could say nothing, but if she refused, it was wrong to compel her to go. So in a few days the Christians here had planned her wedding with a school boy and had it at a Christian home. We went down and watched them have their feast. These are not real Christian weddings, as they cannot have the legal Christian wedding until they are full church members, but they are surely much better than the kind of weddings the heathen have where sin runs riot."

AMONG GIBARA, CUBA, YOUNG PEOPLE.

"Another interesting evidence of the power of the gospel to transform lives even in delicate matters, has been evidenced in the courtship and marriage of two of the younger members. The young lady began to teach a class in Sunday School a number of years ago. Her hand was sought by a young man who was not a member, which in a majority of cases has meant an immediate cessation of attendance at church services, as the lover usually forbids his sweetheart to leave her home unless in his company.

"But Rosario kept steadily on her way and finally won over her lover, who began to attend church with her, where they conducted themselves with the utmost Christian dignity. In time he, too, gave his heart to Christ and joined the church. A short time before the wedding, he was received into full membership. In deference to the wishes of unconverted parents, they were married in their home by the judge, but with the pastor and assistant pastor as legal witnesses. Following the ceremony, they stopped at the church for a prayer service on their way to their new home. They also served ice cream instead of liquors to the main part of the guests, though there were some who slyly partook of beer behind the scenes. The example set by these young people will mean much to the young people of the church. On the other hand, one of our brightest and most faithful young men, president of the Christian Endeavor Society and a popular teacher of a Sunday School class, fell in love with a girl who tried to stop his attendance, and he has scarcely entered the church since."

WITH THE GIRLS OF HAPPY GROVE SCHOOL, JAMAICA.

Friends have, from the opening of the institution, shown a deep interest in the practical and thorough-going work of the Happy Grove School. First admitting girls only, a separate department for boys began work in a new building in January, 1915. Concerning the boys' work, accounts have appeared on this page from time to time and will continue to find place here frequently. From the April report of Alsina M. Andrews, the superintendent of the Girls' Department, we quote a few paragraphs.

"A surveyor, who knew the mission and workers in early days, seeing a notice of the school in the papers, wrote that he wanted to place here two girls for whom he is guardian. One of them is too young and the other is hardly advanced enough to enter. One application has come from the western part of the Island and another one from the next parish. These may be admitted later.

"The health of the girls has been good except for colds and a few minor ailments. Drilling with dumb-bells has been highly beneficial to them. The recently installed shower baths have filled a long-felt want. School work has been carried on under difficulties on account of the understaffing of the school. With the coming of an assistant to Mr. Farr, early in April, more can be accomplished. The usual industrial work has been carried on. Washing, ironing, cooking, the making of uniforms, cutting out, making and mending of dresses and other garments, pattern making, crocheting and various household duties have claimed the attention of the girls.

"The Christian Endeavor meetings, conducted by the girls at 6 o'clock on Friday mornings, are growing in interest and helpfulness. A rainy Sabbath the girls spent pleasantly and profitably at home. A part of the day was devoted to the study of the Sabbath School lesson, and listening to the reading of a sermon, singing gospel hymns, the giving of Bible promises, and marking them in their Bibles.

"One girl who refused to sign the pledge in Sabbath School, saying her father would expect her to drink when at home, has completely changed her attitude on the subject, and has signed the pledge. She frequently quotes 'Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging.' Another girl, who, upon entering a few months ago, seemed to have little sense of honesty or truthfulness, has wonderfully improved. With all of the girls there has been improvement in neatness, order, faithfulness to duty, and a growing sentiment in favor of those things which enoble life.

"The visit of Mr. and Mrs. Tebbetts and daughter, and Mr. Jones and Mr. McClean of Cuba, was much appreciated. They visited the morning classes, where the boys and girls recite together, saw them in their separate industrial classes in the afternoon, and attended the William Penn Literary Society, conducted by the pupils of both departments of the school. The entries made in the Visitors' Book by our visiting friends are encouraging to us."

DUPLEX ENVELOPES FOR FRIENDS MEETINGS.

Those meetings where the financial year starts September or October first may secure the envelopes at reduced prices through the Board of Missions. Envelopes to begin with September must, however, be ordered before August first, and those to begin with October must be ordered before the first of September. The special prices quoted on this page last week were for the regular Duplex Envelopes, printed in two colors and with prayer topics. All orders and inquiries may be sent to the Assistant Secretary at the address given at the top of the page.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

THE STUDY CLASS

(2) He should lay his concern before the Executive Committee of the Christian Endeavor. At this time he should state clearly the object of such a class. It is not enough to suggest that this move will stimulate new interest and greater attendance. The Committee must be shown that there is some definite subject in which young people of the meeting should be interested. Text book and study outline should be presented for investigation. If the Executive Committee thinks it advisable, the plan should be approved by the whole meeting. At this meeting emphasize the theme with which the class is to deal. For further suggestions see STUDY CLASS MANUAL. Part I, Sec. 4.

Do not say that the class is put in to awaken new interest.

OREGON CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS ADOPT PROGRAM.

After almost continuous deliberation for two days the central committee of the Oregon Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavorers adopted the following program for their next year's work. While this does not appear large enough to challenge members of other Yearly Meetings, it is a very advanced step for Young Friends of the Northwest. All that is here stated is expected to be realized. It will demand far more work than has been done in the past, but it is not too large to be accomplished. The plan is:

1. To adopt the Five Years Board motto, "The Entire Church At Its Entire Task."

2. To place an Efficiency Chart in every Endeavor Society and to reorganize the local Societies to meet its demands.

3. To undertake Oregon Yearly Meeting's share in the Millions Thousands Campaign, which will call for the following standards:

- a—250 new Members.
- b—50 new Converts.
- c—50 new Church members.
- d—6 new Endeavor Societies.
- e—30 new Christian Endeavor Experts.
- f—600 new Enrollments in the C. E. Peace Union.
- g—550 new Enrollments in the Young Friends Directory.
- h—125 new dollars for Home and Foreign Missions.

i—10 new Subscribers to the Christian Endeavor World.

j—10 new Life Work recruits.

To this was added a few points denominational in character, as:

a—20 new study classes to be undertaken in the following ratio of importance: Missions, 50%; Quaker, 25%, and Miscellaneous, 25%.

b—25 new subscribers to The American Friend.

c—100 new dollars for Denominational work.

4. The adoption of the Every Member Canvass. This is to be undertaken in the following manner: The C. E. executive committee outlines a year's program for the local Society in keeping with the Yearly Meeting plan. A budget is then estimated which will enable the program to be carried out. This is then given to the treasurer of the local Society, who, with the President organizes teams for a financial campaign. After proper advertising the solicitation is begun.

5. See to it that every local Society is visited at least once during the year by either an outside Society or officer.

6. Attempt to have each Society represented at both Yearly Meeting and the Annual Christian Endeavor Convention, and to send one delegate to the National Young Friends' Conference at Cedar Lake, Ind.

7. To encourage each Quarterly Meeting to hold at least one rally during the year.

This program was enthusiastically adopted by the Yearly Meeting, and the President, Chester A. Hadley, with the Secretary, Treasurer and Quarterly Meeting Superintendents pledged themselves to carry it out before next Yearly Meeting convenes.

CAMPAIGN IN INDIANA

Thomas R. Kelly, an enthusiastic young Friend of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, is beginning a campaign in the field of Indiana Yearly Meeting under the direction of the Yearly Meeting's Committee. Thomas Kelly is very anxious to get into as many Meetings as possible during the summer. He does not care to acquaint himself with the best that one Meeting can do so much as to enter the neighborhood, get in touch with the people and the problems, and help pastors and leaders come to some solution for the same. His plan is not so much to lay down a set of rules by which methods may be carried out, but to study the conditions, and where possible, open doors of service, or rather point to the already open doors, and help encourage young people and others to enter.

If there is a place where this sort of work is needed in Indiana Yearly Meeting, and we have not already had correspondence with the pastor regarding it, please write to Lillian E. Hayes, Dunreith, Ind., Secretary for the Committee.

A MEETING HOUSE HUNT.

Were you ever lost? Well I was. And it wasn't out in the midst of jungles either. It was in the heart of one of the largest cities of Canada. You see it was like this. I sent a telegram to George O. Hoyland in Vancouver, B. C., that I would be in that city one evening and I would like for him to arrange a meeting. I arrived on boat from Victoria, reaching my destination about 7:30 P. M. I waited at the wharf for some one to meet me, because I was sure some one had been sent. I learned later that my surmise was right and that a Young Friend met the boat, but did not recognize me. Of course I did not recognize him so I began to use my time-tested methods of finding my own way. I went to the telephone booth and looked for Hoyland. He had no telephone. I found his business address and called, but of course it was after closing hour so no response came. Since the time was getting late and Mr. Hoyland lived across the bay from the business part of the city, I started to find the meeting house. I looked in the city directory for Friend's Church, Friends' meeting, Society of Friends, Friends' Club and all other things that had Friend in it, but could find nothing. Then I went to the chief of police and asked him if he could tell me anything about a group of people called Friends and where they held their meetings. He knew nothing about them. I then called three leading pastors in the city, but they knew nothing about a Friends' meeting. I next went to the Y. M. C. A. and made inquiry, but with no avail. At last I decided I would cross the bay and report to Mr. Hoyland that I had come even if it was too late to find the meeting. I went, but must have found the wrong street because I could not find anyone at home where I called and no one knew the Friend. I gave up the chase and raced to catch my boat which left at just eleven o'clock. Since I have grown wiser than I was when at Vancouver I know that the Friends' meet in the Labor Hall in the city, which is listed perfectly, but the Friends are not recorded. The matter of listing a meeting is a very little thing and none of us are going to lose our tempers even if we should happen to miss a gathering, but wouldn't it prevent a stranger who wanted to attend the meeting from having so much fun all to himself? I am sure Vancouver Friends want visitors and no doubt they have advertised the meeting, but all my pet schemes failed.

THOMAS E. JONES.

DUBLIN YEARLY MEETING.

Dublin Yearly Meeting convened in adjourned session on June 1st, the regular session in April having been postponed on account of the "Sinn Fein" outbreak. The meeting on ministry and oversight was held as usual, about sixty Friends being present in the afternoon. There are in the Yearly Meeting thirty-six recorded ministers, eighty-six elders and one hundred and thirty-six overseers. Ulster reported ninety-six Friends as taking vocal part in meetings for worship. Some concern was expressed over the fact that while Ulster has twenty-four recorded ministers, Leinster, with almost as large a membership, has only seven and the large Monthly Meeting at Dublin only four. In the evening James G. Douglas read a paper on Christian Unity, while Albert Knight addressed the meeting on the Christian Life.

George A. Fox of Colchester, Secretary of the Friends Prayer League, was the only Friend present at the opening of the Yearly Meeting from outside the Yearly Meeting bounds. William C. Allen had expected to be present, but owing to the regulations about entering Ireland, had been stopped at Holyhead. Some care had to be exercised in the discussion of subjects before the Yearly Meeting, as it had been necessary to secure permission to hold the Yearly Meeting. This permission was granted by the Chief Commissioner of Police on the ground that the gathering would be purely a religious one. The reading of the epistles from London, America, Australia and New Zealand created much interest, while the letters from the mission stations, many of them referring to peace, were also very interesting. At a later session the clerk mentioned the presence of Horace G. Alexander of England, Ernest W. Sawdon of China, Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, Elizabeth J. Hodgkin and Lucy F. Morland.

Despite the handicaps put upon the Yearly Meeting in being granted permission to hold the sessions, an interesting discussion on the peace question took place and several Friends emphasized the views of the Society upon this question, in the midst of which the meeting settled down for a short period of quiet waiting, and prayer was offered for divine guidance. The clerks were directed to prepare a minute setting forth the reasons why certain phases of the peace subject could not be considered.

A session was devoted to the temperance question and after a lengthy discussion a minute was adopted, recording the meeting's opinion that "total prohibition is the most effective legislative remedy for the evils of intemperance." It was brought out that the war had caused fewer meetings to be held under the auspices of the home mission committee, the most fruitful service being that of the personal contact of the workers in connection with soldiers' camps. Several Friends were concerned over the fact that no person had been recorded a minister during the past year, but after some discussion no minute was made of the matter.

The statistical report showed a membership of 2310, an increase of two the past year. There was the usual interesting discussion on the state of society. At the educational session it was reported that forty-five children had attended the Brookfield school the past year, and an appeal for additional funds for the school was endorsed by the Yearly Meeting.

The conference on Foreign Missions on Monday evening was attended by about a hundred and fifty persons. Five fields were represented by missionaries present and addresses were given by Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, Elizabeth J. Hodgkin and R. Middleton Perry.

The Young Friends Association asked that the work be carried on hereafter through a committee of the Yearly Meeting, which was endorsed and fifty pounds was granted towards the expense of the new committee. The Association had an excursion on Saturday afternoon in which forty-four persons participated and the Association breakfasted together as usual on Monday morning. Members of the Friends Prayer League considered the advisability of having an Irish committee which was agreed to and such committee was appointed, with Theodore Webb as secretary of the work in Ireland. Of the meetings for worship held during the Yearly Meeting, that on Sabbath day at Eustace Street was felt to be particularly helpful.

BLOOMINGDALE ACADEMY.

Bloomington Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, recently decided to sell Bloomington Academy to the township in which it is situated. It is the purpose of the trustee to use the building for a township high school.

Three propositions were considered, first the raising of a substantial sum of money for needed improvements, second the raising of an adequate endowment and third the selling of the property as above indicated. At first the meeting decided against all three propositions, but upon further reflection agreed to follow the latter course. There was some pronounced difference of opinion, but a spirit of good fellowship prevailed when the decision was finally reached, although a number of Friends, both at Bloomington and at other places have deeply deplored the action.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY.

The following sentences are culled from recent letters which come to us from widely scattered localities:

"I am much pleased with the paper—think it gets better (if possible) all the time."

"I am greatly enjoying your editorials on 'A Greater Quakerism' in The American Friend. I hope to see many more along the same line."

"We appreciate your efforts to make the paper a power for good and our heart is with you if our pocketbook fails."

"From my earliest childhood recollections Friends' publications have been a recognized necessity, first in my parents' home and later in our own home. Both of us being familiar with the Friends Review, The Christian Worker and The American Friend, old and new series in order, we wish to say The American Friend of today far exceeds all the others."

"I shall be a subscriber so long as I can earn or beg the money to pay for it (the paper)."

"We like The American Friend. It grows better from week to week."

"Allow me to congratulate you upon the recent improvement and enlargement of The American Friend. I hope Friends will rally to the support of the paper."

"We enjoy the paper very much."

"Have thought we would have the paper discontinued, but when it came to the test we would rather do without something else and keep the paper."

"I cannot refrain a word of appreciation for The American Friend, especially the editorial department."

A man's faith is God's opportunity.

PEACE DEPARTMENT

NOTE—It is hoped that this page may present in brief form a record of activities typical of the work Friends are doing for peace. News items, short, pointed arguments, suggested plans, all will be welcome, and will be used subject to the limitations of space and the proper distribution and arrangement of the matter received. All communications intended for this page should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, President, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.

THE MEXICAN SITUATION AS SEEN BY FRIENDS.

(Note—This department has asked for an expression of opinion as to what attitude Friends should take in view of the present situation with respect to Mexico. The following are the first replies that have been received).

From Murray S. Barker, Thorntown, Indiana.

"'Preparedness' in the hands of some men would mean nothing less than militarism; in others, only good police protection.

"The Quaker ideal of peace, as I understand it, does not conflict with policing our cities or our country against the acts of the lawless. But the present widespread clamor for an invasion of Mexico, fostered and advocated by a powerful public press, is neither patriotic nor truly American in spirit. And I am glad to say our President apparently desires to avoid this invasion.

"I can see but one of two courses: plant the flag on the south side of the Panama Canal and keep it there; or, plant it on the north side of the Rio Grande and keep it there. The former means conquest, which we as a nation have always disavowed; the latter provides for policing our homes to which no one can object. It will cost less in money, less in lives and less in self-respect. The one means war, the other peace.

"When Radicalism runs riot there should always be a steadying hand of Conservatism. Just now the Quaker ideal of peace should furnish the steadying hand. It is the strong man in a community or a strong nation in the world that can afford to appear for a time to be weak. When either has established a reputation for strength, integrity and fairness, a quiet, steady course accomplishes more than force or bluster. We need less armor plate and more brains."

From Royal J. Davis, New York City.

"The United States has had one war with Mexico of which few well-informed Americans are proud. There is nothing in the present situation, difficult as it is, to make another seem anything less than criminal folly. Cooperation with the Mexicans rather than mobilization against them is obviously the way to real victory. Joint patrol of the border would be a statesmanlike course, calculated to remove the cause of friction between our Government and Mexico's, and to achieve the end for which our troops crossed the line. The clash at Carrizal seems to have been provoked by us. A diplomatic solution of the problem is well within the possibilities. That being the case, a military solution would be indefensible."

As To Friends Who Endorse "Preparedness."

(Note—The following from Moses Votaw of Tacoma, Washington, superintendent of peace work in Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting, voices a concern shared by many Friends. The situation here referred to is one which cannot be settled by an appeal to "authority" of any kind, but is to be met by increased thoughtful care on the part of all concerned. Opinions sincerely held are always based on what are believed to be facts. If opinions are to undergo change the foundation of the opinions must be brought under review. As suggested below, there is here an important field for work).

"Every one who knows anything about Quakers at all, knows their traditional belief that all war and everything pertaining to war is wrong. So, it would seem almost impossible that any considerable number of Friends should advocate military preparedness. We are shocked and disappointed, however, to find, according to the 'Washington letter' appearing in the American Friend of May 25, that a 'formidable number' of Friends are joining the ranks of the 'preparedness' advocates.

"It seems unfortunate, indeed, that our church should contain such members disloyal to one of our fundamental doctrines. Does it not indicate that something is lacking in the teaching and preaching of our leaders?

"This is both a moral question and a political question and hence touches the life of every voter. Let the church be made clean inside and then will the political acts of its members be in harmony with the law of righteousness. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' Then how can Friends support a political party that stands for military preparation?

"I am glad to say here that one of our Friends' ministers in Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting recently made a speech, at a state political convention of which he was temporary chairman, in which he took occasion to speak out firmly and emphatically against the dangers of threatened militarism. His speech was not only well received by the convention, but a synopsis of it was ordered printed, and was printed, in an eastern paper of wide circulation."

Washington Gladden On the Threatened War with Mexico.

In a sermon at the First Congregational Church, Columbus, Ohio, on Sunday evening, June 25, Dr. Washington Gladden spoke in part as follows:

"The sure result of this second war with Mexico will be a great waste of life on both sides, the addition to our debt of hundreds of millions of dollars, the still further impoverishment and desolation of Mexico, with the death, probably, of thousands of women and children by starvation and the fixing of a great gulf of hatred and resentment between the two countries, which no efforts of good will ever be able to bridge.

"Such is the goal toward which the American people seem to be marching quite light-heartedly. Possibly some of you may be able to feel enthusiastic and triumphant about it; I am not. If the war goes on to its bitter end, and the newspapers bring us daily reports of victories over such a foe, purchased at such a cost, I do not expect to read them with exultation; you may have all my share in that triumph.

"For I shall feel, through it all, that my country might, without shedding a drop of blood, have won a much more signal victory. I am strongly convinced that this nation has not exhausted the possibilities of conciliation. If she would address herself today to work of making peace, with one-tenth of the vigor and resolution which she is applying to the work of making war, I believe that she could speedily overcome much of the ill-will of the Mexican people, and call together the forces which would reunite them and put them on the road to the rehabilitation of their national life.

"We have sent one or two good and wise men to Mexico on errands of good will; but what I should like to see is a great delegation of our best-known and most influential men sent down there, men like President Taft and President Eliot and Cardinal Gibbons and Judge Parker and Mr. Bryan and Judge Brandeis and Secretary Baker and Samuel Gompers—a dozen or more men of all parties—men of such fame and standing that all Mexico would have to sit up and take notice, saying, 'Here are men who have a right to speak for America; let us listen.' Such a delegation could make the Mexicans understand that we have no sinister purposes; that our deepest interest is that they should be at peace."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

When President Wilson made the statement in one of the speeches of his recent western trip that he wanted this country to have "one of the largest, if not the largest, navies in the world," excuses were made for him by even some of the most radical "preparedness" advocates on the ground that he was probably carried away by the enthusiasm of the occasion. Very few government officials outside of the War College and the Naval General Board had ever been accused of aspiring to first place among the navies of the world and these men were, of course, excused for being so ambitious on account of their profession. Only six months ago the President was so well satisfied with the policy of moderation the government had been following, and he was so little interested in any extraordinary military preparations by the country, that in his message at the opening of Congress he not only had nothing to say about unusual increases in the army and navy, but he rather said things that would have the effect of assuring the nation of its safety and security.

But since then the President made his "preparedness" speeches, with a view to getting a big program of increases in armaments through Congress. Still those who have been suspicious of the "preparedness" movement were hopeful that the President had not really gone into the camp of the "peace by killing" people. They were given some encouragement when it was stated on the floor of the House of Representatives by Chairman Hay of the Military Affairs Committee that his comparatively very moderate army bill had the entire approval of President Wilson. But following that again the President, through his Secretary of the Navy, asked Congress to authorize such an increase in the size of the navy as had never before been thought of. Once more those who are fearful of the tendency toward militarism and the breaking away from the practice of brotherhood and the spirit of justice and love and good will in international relations, which they see in a vast military establishment in this country, took heart when they were told that the Administration had accepted and promised to stand back of the greatly modified naval program which was reported to the House by its Naval Affairs Committee.

It now seems, however, that the President at least came very near meaning just what he said with regard to the size of navy he wants this country to have. No doubt the knowledge that the Administration had been urging a big increase in the navy was an important element in the almost successful effort made by the "big navy" men in the House to put through an amendment to the naval bill that carried all and more than the Navy department had recommended.

Now the bill is in the hands of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. The total amount appropriated in the bill as it left the House amounted to nearly $300,000,000. Aside from the question of dollars the bill was considered by Congressmen to provide for all the increase in number of ships and all in the way of improving what the country already has in the way of a navy that could possibly be taken care of in the next year. But as was predicted the Senate was far from satisfied with the bill. A special committee of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee is now going the whole way in planning a program that will embody the five years program recommended by the Navy Department. This is expected to cost at least $500,000,000 in the next five years and to place our navy in second place. We will be well to the front in the world competition in navy building.

There appears to be little doubt that the Senate will stamp its approval upon the bill program to be offered by its committee. It is expected the bill will be reported to the Senate this week and that it will immediately be taken up for consideration.

In the meantime there is considerable uneasiness among members of the House who worked so hard to keep down the size of the naval appropriations in that body. These men have noticed that the Senate sub-committee, composed of Senators Lodge, Tillman and Brady, some of the very biggest of the "big navy" men in Congress, has been in very close touch with Secretary Daniels and they have learned that he has been urging the committee to make big increases over the House bill, including the adoption of the five-year program. At the same time these men say they had a definite understanding with Secretary Daniels that the Administration would stand by the bill that went through the House. A member of the House Naval Affairs Committee said yesterday that there is sure to be a lively struggle when the naval bill goes back to the House. Of course it will go from the Senate to a conference committee, as was the case with the army bill.

The military note is far more dominant, here in Washington at present, than at any time in the last five months. Hardly a day passes that Congress does not have some sort of military question to consider. The word war is frequently heard and it is considered by such men as Congressman Mann, the Republican floor leader, that the country is now actually at war with Mexico, although war has not been formally declared.

While psychologically the people of the country seem ready to accept most anything that may be done in the way of increasing the military establishment, it has been felt that those who want to see this country depending upon other forces than military in its dealings with other nations should keep up their efforts to influence Congressmen just as long as these men are considering "preparedness" legislation.

CHURCH AT WORK

Dana, Indiana—Lindley A. Wells and son, Charles, closed a fruitful tent meeting at Hopewell, near Dana, Ind., last Sabbath. Services began on June 18. The rain hindered the meetings quite a bit, and farmers are far behind with their work. This interfered somewhat with the attendance. An all-day meeting on July 4 was well attended, some coming from a considerable distance. The interest in all the services of the day was exceptionally good. Several persons were definitely blessed either in renewal or in sanctification.

The nearer you are brought to Him, the quicker sense you will have of your continual need of him.—John Newton.

To Whom It Comes:

This is to say that I am authorized by the Board of Education of the Five Years Meeting to express the confidence of the Board of Education in the splendid work which has been done in the past by Penn College, and to express the hope that friends of Christian education generally throughout the country will respond to their plea for assistance.

The Board of Education believes there is a great field for Penn College and that its work ought not to be interrupted. The College is given permission, therefore, to enter the field anywhere and everywhere with the view of securing funds.

Very sincerely,

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

Cedar Creek—A most interesting account of the work accomplished in this rural meeting was received a few weeks ago and will be of large interest to other Friends' meetings. The pastor of this meeting, George J. McClellan, provided himself with one of the best stereopticons available and has used it in a most successful way in his work. This is how he has used it to stimulate and deepen missionary interest.

Easter Sunday was set as Jamaica pledge day in the meeting at Cedar Creek. Leading up to and preparing for this day, two illustrated addresses were given on Friends' missionary work in old Mexico. These were given on the first two Sunday evenings of the month and then on the Sabbath evening just preceding Easter the first of two illustrated lectures on Jamaica was given, the second being given on Easter night. On Easter morning the pastor preached a missionary sermon which was followed by the taking of pledges for the work. Although measles in the community cut down the attendance greatly, yet the sum of ninety dollars was subscribed at this service. One remarkable fact connected with this was that the whole of this amount was paid either in checks or cash.

A Follow-up Committee was appointed to see those who were not present that day, so that more than $100.00 has now been received as the result of the special effort made. Besides this, probably an equal amount will be raised for missions through the other departments of the church. For example, the W. F. M. S. in their regular meeting for June observed their free will offering day for the year when one aged member gave $50.00 besides several dollars contributed by others. The excellent results obtained in this one meeting of Cedar Creek show conclusively the value of missionary information and education.

Not only has George McClellan been doing this type of work in his own meeting, but he has recently returned from a trip through Ackworth Quarter where he visited almost every meeting in the Quarter, giving seven missionary addresses in all. His stereopticon addresses were greatly appreciated in all the meetings visited and much missionary interest and zeal were quickened. God wonderfully touched the hearts of the people as they saw and felt the needs of our own Jamaican field.

BIBLE SCHOOL ITEMS.

Middle River—Children's Day was observed at Middle River, in Ackworth Quarter on Sabbath evening, June 11th. A most excellent program was given. The crowd was much larger than the church building could accommodate. The pastor made an earnest appeal for our Mission work in Jamaica and the offering received was the largest ever given by the Meeting for Mission work. The program closed with a pantomime, "Rock of Ages," by eleven young ladies, which was very effective.

Two new departments in the school have recently been organized—those of the Cradle Roll and Home Departments. The pastor and his wife are in charge of these. There are eleven names on the Cradle Roll while the Home Department now has a membership of fourteen.

On Sabbath, June 18th, two young ladies confessed Christ as their Savior, in the regular service of the church.

Bear Creek—The Bear Creek Bible School observed Children's Day on June 25th. The day was ideal and the attendance large. Many came from Dexter and Redfield for the occasion. An offering was taken for Missions.

Marshalltown—The Bible School here recently held their Children's Day exercises. The program was a very interesting one and a large attendance was present. A good collection was taken to apply on the debt of our Foreign Mission Board.

FIELD NOTES.

Cedar Creek, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa—We were greatly favored on the evening of July 2 by the presence and service of Rufus P. King of High Point, N. C., who brought to us a loving message of admonition and encouragement. He visited the meetings of this Quarterly Meeting forty-seven years ago. Born in North Carolina, he united with the Society of Friends in 1866 and was acknowledged a minister in 1869. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was pressed into the Confederate Army, but refusing to bear arms he was greatly persecuted because of his peace principles. He was one of those largely spoken of in that great book, "Southern Heroes," as one who suffered much for principle.

Rufus King has probably visited more Friends meetings throughout the country than any other Friends' minister now living. He has traveled over the world a great deal, having crossed the Atlantic Ocean eight times and has visited England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, Wales, France, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Australasia, India and many other countries. Our hearts were touched and tendered as we listened to the words of counsel and loving benediction that fell from the lips of this aged Friend, and we were greatly encouraged to do more efficient service for Christ than ever before. His visit was a benediction to the church of Christ.

The pastor, George J. McClellan, has been giving us a series of illustrated missionary addresses the past summer on Friends mission work in Mexico and Jamaica. On July 9 and 16 he will speak on work in Cuba. On July 30 and August 6 he will give studies on our work in Africa. These studies of Friends mission work in the various fields are proving very helpful to our people, giving them a larger vision of the open doors of service and what we, as a church, are accomplishing. A stereopticon is used.

Bangor, Iowa—Bangor Quarterly Meeting was held at Bangor May 26 and 27. The address at the Bible School conference on Friday evening was given by H. W. Cope of Hartland, and was very much appreciated. The meeting on Saturday opened with a prayer and praise service, every pastor in the Quarterly Meeting and several visiting ministers being present. An excellent sermon on prayer was given by Charles Moore of Indianola, after which a bountiful dinner was served on the church lawn. The business session was held in the afternoon, at which time the sum of $40 was raised for home mission work. The meeting in the evening was conducted by our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, H. R. Keates, who also preached with much power on Sunday morning and afternoon. The Sunday evening sermon was preached by I. P. Cook of Ankeny, which closed a very profitable and interesting Quarterly Meeting, all sessions being well attended.

Springdale, Iowa—The Friends church at Springdale observed Sunday, July 2, as home coming day, being the last meeting to be held in the old meeting house. Many old friends and former members were present for the occasion. E. L. Gregory, a former pastor, now pastor at Arnolds Park, Iowa, was present and brought a helpful message at the morning service. The Woman's Auxiliary of the church served a bounteous luncheon at the noon hour and the afternoon was spent in relating reminiscences of former days of the church. A number of those were present who were members of the meeting when the church was built in 1857. Plans for the new building are completed and work will be commenced at once. It is to be 38x50 feet in size and will be modern in every respect.

FOR CIVILIAN INTERVENTION IN MEXICO.

(From The Survey).

Before the militia had mobilized and almost as quickly as the War Department and the Red Cross had gotten under way, the American Union Against Militarism took steps to enable the civilian populations of the United States and Mexico to express themselves on the issues of war and peace, to make public an unmilitary interpretation of the events that are leading to a rupture and to do it at the friction point—on the border.

After an all-night session in New York City, the union sent a telegram to President Wilson declaring that a war resulting from a determination to keep our troops in Mexico would be "nothing but a national humiliation." And it called upon three civilians in Mexico and three in the United States to go at once to El Paso to do everything in their power to avoid hostilities and make for mediation.

The men from our side are David

Starr Jordan, William Jennings Bryan and Frank P. Walsh. The Mexicans are Dr. Atl, editor of Accion Mundial, a weekly paper published at Mexico City; Luis Manuel Rojas, director of the Biblioteca Nacional in Mexico City, and Modesto C. Rolland, a Mexican engineer who lives in New York City.

The telegram to President Wilson was as follows:

"From the beginning of your administration you have consistently opposed intervention on the ground that there was not sufficient cause for war; that President Carranza could not with justice be held responsible for isolated raids on the border, possibly inspired—as you have pointed out—by Americans interested in intervention; and that the occupation of Mexican territory by the United States would be an act of aggression against a friendly republic that should receive our help and forbearance in its task of reconstruction.

"The dispersal of Villa's band removed the original reason for keeping United States troops in Mexico. We feel that the withdrawal of these troops at the earliest possible moment is essential to the maintenance of our national honor and as a demonstration of our good faith to the Latin-American republics. The continued presence of the military is a provocation to the Mexican people and makes it increasingly difficult for the de facto government to control the situation. A war arising out of the determination of our government to keep its troops in Mexican territory would be nothing but a national humiliation."

Students from twenty-six colleges and universities, assembled at the Conference on International Relations in session at Cleveland, united in sending a telegram to President Wilson on June 24 urging creation of a joint commission to take over responsibility of preserving order on the Mexican border as an alternative to war. The appeal reads:

"We submit that further penetration of Mexican territory, intervention, or invasion in any form, will violate high principles of respect for sovereignty of weaker peoples upon which the Democratic party has gone before the country in its St. Louis platform; will nullify the generous policy which your administration has maintained toward the Mexican people for two years; will wreck the slow upbuilding of constitutional government as a great fruit of revolution; and will destroy Pan-American friendship and good will."

If the joint commission proves impracticable, the appeal urges the creation of a "Pan-American commission to take over practical problems of border patrol, without offense to Mexican sovereignty and as a basis for continued friendship between the peoples of the two great republics."

The President is further asked to institute at once civil inquiry into "self-interested American sources of enmity which you at different times have denounced."

EDITORIAL MESSAGE.

To Nebraska Friends.

Since our Yearly Meeting organ was dropped more than a year ago, many Friends have felt and appreciated, as never before, the large place which it had in the Yearly Meeting. To supply this need as nearly as possible, at the recent Yearly Meeting, it was decided to purchase a half page in the American Friend every two weeks, and I was asked to act as editor. This is not a large task, but nevertheless, it is one requiring the assistance of each and every meeting, in order that the best results might be accomplished. We are asking, therefore, that every meeting appoint a correspondent, someone who will attend to the duties of the office regularly and promptly. All news items should be sent directly to the American Friend, Richmond, Ind., but everything else should be sent to me, at 2119 Eighteenth Street, Boulder, Colo. Will not the pastors or other church officials see that this is looked after immediately?

Subject—Paul at Corinth.

Lesson—Acts 18:1-22.

Golden Text—Be not afraid, but speak and hold not thy peace. Acts 18:9.

There were Athenians who believed in Paul and accepted his message, but so far as we know he did not establish a church there. Having found this field less suitable for extended service than others, he journeyed westward to Corinth. This city was to be the end of the second missionary journey and from there he retraced his steps and ultimately reached Jerusalem.

Corinth was destined to become a prominent Christian center. A strong church was organized there, but one which caused its founder much anxiety. Later he wrote the Corinthians no fewer than four letters—part of them lost to us—and made one special visit. Many serious questions arose and Paul's discussions of them form some of the most valuable of the New Testament literature.

The opening paragraph of the lesson text reveals an interesting phase of Paul's methods. He was a missionary without "home support." It was necessary for him to make his own living. This he did by following the trade to which he was apprenticed while a youth. This method has been tried by a few modern missionaries and in some sections has been more or less successful, but it always hampers the efforts of the worker and in the end

BOULDER, COLORADO.

The Boulder Christian Endeavor Society had one member present at the Colorado State Christian Endeavor Convention, which was recently held at Greeley, Miss Mary Cramer.

The Friends Church has joined with the other churches of the city in union evening services from June 25 to August 20, inclusive. These services are held in the various larger churches of the city, and local pastors preach at one meeting each. The Friends pastor, K. V. Bowen, preaches in the First Christian Church, August 6. These occasions are largely attended, and are very profitable.

Ruth A. Joyce of Central City, Nebr., William H. Hill of Greeley, Colo., Ethel L. Scott of Danville, Ind., and Grace Hanson of Westfield, Ind., are attending the summer sessions of the University of Colorado, which is located in this city. This is surely an ideal place for summer school work.

Large numbers of visitors are appearing at the regular services of the church. Boulder is expecting the largest tourist season of its history, and all Friends and others will be made welcome at our meetings.

The Christian Endeavor Society has recently purchased a piano for the defeats the purpose for which he went into the field. We Friends tried this method out in our ministerial relations, but in recent years have found it necessary to give our ministers or pastors sufficient financial support to enable them to give part or full time through the week to the work to which they have been called.

As usual, Paul began his work in the synagogue. Christianity was not yet a separate religion, it was a movement within Judaism. In practically every city, however, his preaching brought about a division and ultimately resulted in establishing, what in those days would have been called a rival synagogue. In this instance the Christians established themselves in a hall very near the Jewish quarters.

While here Paul came into a spiritual experience of unusual clearness. For months he had passed through crisis after crisis. He had been beaten, jailed, persecuted and evil-treated in many ways. He now enjoyed another of those special divine communions so encouraging to workers physically worn. God gave him positive assurance that he was not laboring in vain.

CENTRAL CITY MONTHLY MEETING.

The Friends will join with the other churches at Central City in holding a Dry Federation picnic and celebration at the city park on the Fourth. They are hoping and working for a "dry Nebraska in 1916."

Ruth Joyce, president of the C. E. Union of the Yearly Meeting, has gone to Boulder, Colo., to attend summer school and expects to visit the various societies in eastern Colorado before she returns.

An active campaign for students and funds for Nebraska Central College is now in progress. Prospects are promising for an increased enrollment.

Two of the College teachers, Prof. Crosbie and Prof. Woodward, are away attending summer school, the former at the State University at Lincoln, the latter at the university at Boulder, Colo.

was 250 feet above water and two miles wide. Suddenly he noticed an enormous mass of ice breaking away from the glacier. It was several hundred yards long, and Gifford quickly realized that he was witnessing something few men had seen. He saw his danger if he stayed on the beach, but he wanted a picture of that huge detached mass of ice. He had his camera with him; he quickly adjusted it and took a snap-shot. He didn't lose a minute then in collecting his tools and running as fast as he could to the high ground.

The secret of success in any calling is an enthusiasm for our work like that of this artist. The meaning of the Greek word for enthusiasm is God in you. Enthusiasm does not mean noise; for much is often accomplished in a quiet way. We must be quick to sense danger, and hasten to higher ground.

The most terrific heat known to science is a torch operated by oxygen and acetylene, radiating a heat of 6,300 degrees, by means of which it is possible to weld aluminum, heretofore regarded as an impossibility. The torch makes a flame that will cut through two inches of solid steel in less than a minute and pierce a twelve-inch piece of the hardest steel in less than ten minutes—a task that would take a saw almost twenty hours to accomplish. When the soul burns with the heat of great enthusiasm, it will burn through obstacles that are entirely insuperable to ordinary efforts.

OAK GROVE SEMINARY.

First Impressions of Oak Grove.

By E. A. F. H.

Acres and acres of blossoming daisies and sweet scented clover greeted us as we went up the hillside, with the opposite hill spread out before our view. The old horse had about all he could do to pull his load of humanity up the steep driveway to the foot of the Seminary steps. As one looked off across the Kennebec, with its floating logs that sometimes drift together till they look like a carpet, and again single out as if wishing to reach the shore, the charm of the country in June steals over us and the spirit of the place begins at the outset to grow in our hearts. Such was our coming for the first time to Oak Grove Seminary, way up in heart of our old Pine Tree state.

The work that Oak Grove is doing is unique in itself. The school motto, "teach everything useful and civil in creation," tells a goodly part of the story. This is made possible through the generosity of friends.

Talking with a socially-prominent lady in our largest city, she said, "students who lack for finance should not be allowed to enter anything above the grammar schools and even stop at the fifth grade." It was a positive shock, and such schools as Oak Grove prove the contrary. What would our country do if education were relegated to only those who have full bank accounts?

The needs of the school, as we made a careful study of conditions, appeal to us. Permanent improvement in the plant is desirable and is being carefully considered. Necessary arrangements are at present just under way, and include not only the increasing of the school's endowment, but the putting in efficient order of the old school building now in use. The construction of a bungalow for the Head Master and his family would remove them from the uncomfortable quarters which they have so uncomplainingly occupied in the corridor of the second floor, and thus leave suitable quarters for the Preceptor, Preceptress and House Mother. The dining room and kitchen, which have served to feed a hungry horde of Maine's best citizens, are outgrown by the increasing student-body, and need to be reconstructed. With a liberal use of paint and muresco and attention to the heating system a most attractive home school is arranged for.

Deeply conscious of its financial needs, and also deeply realizing its magnificent possibilities, this year seems just the time for a step forward, to wipe out the small indebtedness and put the building in a condition for practical work of the first order. The strict economy of the past year has done much to push things ahead, while the high standing of the work has been maintained and carried through by the devotion of the workers on the ground. We long to go onward, but fully realize our dependence on the Yearly Meeting.

Acting as an advance school in the town of Vassalboro, very many young people are brought under our care, and this gives us a far-reaching influence. The gospel team of the students must be mentioned. There is always folly in neglect, says the old adage. That "one can do a certain amount of work well in a certain time" has been strained, but not broken, and with larger classes coming in, we cry out to you that the good neighbor is the one who helps another to help himself.

Purity is the innocence of infancy without the stain—that innocence matured into the spotless, positive and eternally established holiness of a responsible manhood.—Horace Bushnell.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

America the Burden Bearer

MY BROTHERS, no greater thought must hold its place in the midst of our thinking than this, that in this strange permissive providence of God, when we walk out of these doors we walk out to face a most troubled world, in what may in some regards be called the darkest hour in human history. And facing that fact, what of the situation in that great unevangelized heathen world lying beyond the borders of Christendom, where there have hitherto been three great gospel burden-bearers? There have been three; and the three have been the German, the Briton and the American. Of those three, alas, alas, two are locked in fratricidal strife. God forgive them both! They are destroying and crippling each other's energies, the very source of their strength, their vital young manhood being laid low by the hundreds of thousands, and their resources being crippled not only for today, but for many a long to-morrow. Now, in the midst of all that, one great gospel burden-bearer remains untouched! Tell me, why do you think this America of ours is untouched? By some great skill, here, there, some other place? No, no! Behind it all and beyond it all is the restraining purpose of the living God. God has kept one great reservoir for the refreshment of humanity, for the reinspiring of hope, for the reinforcement of courage, and for the possibilities of still carrying on a great world program for Christ.

In that strange providence, with its permissals and its restraints seeming to cross each other to perplex the human vision unless the human vision be reinforced by the deep trust of the heart, for when the head is perplexed the heart can still say, "I know, I know"—in this strained hour it has pleased this great God of ours to take the torch that enlightens humanity and put it into the hand of this the youngest-born people of his family. And God calls in those striking accents that can not but be heard by any listening ear to this generation, saying: "Children of God in America, to you I commit the high and holy task, the unspeakable privilege, of being the pathfinders for humanity, of leading a perplexed and troubled world to find the answer to all its perplexities and the enlightening of all its darkness, at the foot of the cross."—From Bishop Oldham's Address to the General M. E. Conference on Monday morning, May 29.

An Unexpected Opportunity

By ROSS A. HADLEY.

Just as we are warned by the owner that the building now occupied by the Colegio de Los Amigos (Friend's school) at Holguin, Cuba, may be sold at any moment there has come an opportunity to buy a property better suited to our purpose at just half the price asked for the present quarters. The only other higher school in Holguin is anti-Christian in its influence. The ability of Friends to put the Christian stamp upon the educational situation in this growing Cuban city, the commercial and intellectual center of the northern part of Oriente Province depends upon our securing an adequate, permanent home for the Colegio.

Two years ago the mission declared that if our Cuban young people are to be properly prepared for Christian service or to be trained for intelligent Christian citizenship there must be a higher school where Christian influence is strong and where pupils from outside may be taken as boarders. Holguin, they decided, is clearly the place for such a school. But the only available property at all suited to its needs was the one the school has been occupying and was held at $7500. Extensive alterations were needed to put it into satisfactory condition and to provide room for boarders. At that time the Board of Missions was obliged to delay securing the property as funds were not in sight to meet such an expenditure. During the two year interval Holguin has grown, new industries have located in the city and the Cuban railroad has decided to continue its line direct from Holguin to the port of Banes, one of the great centers of the sugar industry in the island. All this has demonstrated the wisdom of our missionaries in selecting Holguin as the site for the school, but it has at the same time caused property to advance in price. The building which could then have been bought at $7,500 is now held at $10,000.

During the latter part of June a corner lot only forty yards from the meeting house came unexpectedly on the market. This lot 80x210 feet in size is larger than the other and the buildings upon it can at an expenditure of $1500 be admirably fitted out for the use of the school. By acting immediately the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions has been able to negotiate for the purchase of the property at $5000, just one-half what would now be required to purchase the other one. A total outlay of $6500 will secure this larger lot and put the buildings on it into splendid shape to accommodate the school, giving quarters for ten or twelve boarding pupils. The property is being held for us and if we can meet the terms of purchase the Colegio de Los Amigos will have a home of its own and be able to center upon a new and higher stage in its worthy career. Last year in the face of the handicap under which it worked no less than ten of the pupils in the school made open profession of Christ, a fact which gives some indication of the power of such an institution amid surroundings of spiritual destitution and moral darkness.

In the face of the record the Colegio has already made and the promise for the future in such a center as Holguin, the Board of Missions feels that it dare not decline the offer to secure this property. Already $2000 has been raised, a little less than one-third of the $6500 needed. Of this amount $1000 was raised on the field. Appeal is now made to Friends at large for the $4500 still needed. Can some Friend, who has had it on his heart to make a bequest to the foreign work of the Society of Friends, come forward with an immediate gift, in view of this unexpected opportunity, and provide a part or all of the sum required? The writer, or any of the other officers of the Board of Missions, will be glad to explain the situation more fully to any who will write or call for further information. The name of the treasurer is Edgar F. Hiatt, and the office of the Board is in the Second National Bank Building in Richmond, Indiana.

The Same Message

"I have the same message." Thus in substance Dr. John Clifford, the veteran English Baptist leader, prefaced a sermon recently preached at a little town in England, where he was born and where sixty-four years ago he preached a trial sermon. The text then was, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world," and he frankly said that after fifty-seven years as pastor or one church he had no other message than the one with which he began his ministry. In all these years Dr. Clifford has been a champion of progressive thought and of the most comprehensive type of Christian fellowship. Here is an instance certainly of the persistence of underlying truth despite inevitable changes in emphasis. How many men who have preached fifty or even twenty-five years can honestly say today, "I have the same message"?—Congregationalist.

A Greater Quakerism

Some weeks ago, Mr. W. E. Doughty of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, was quoted as saying that Christianity is being retarded because "the blight of the township mind" is upon the church. The task of the church is a world task, and as a religious movement it will never triumph in the larger sense so long as it is content to localize its operations and narrow its vision, either to sectarian or continental bounds. The apostolic character of the church today can be tested in no better way than by the measurement of itself with the Pauline conception of the gospel mission; for "I am debtor both to Greeks and to Barbarians, both to the wise and to the foolish."

Candor compels the statement that the Society of Friends is being handicapped by the blight of the Yearly Meeting mind and the still further blight of the locality mind. Although Friends have cultivated the sectional spirit in actual practice, it must be said that the Quaker faith is unsuited altogether to the provincial stamp. The great doctrines of the leading and baptism of the Holy Spirit, the consciousness of the actual presence of Christ in the surrendered life, heart purity and holy living are the Christian ideals for mankind everywhere, and he who is content to limit their teaching to scattered communities here and there is robbing humanity of its most sacred heritage.

Friends have always held to the simplest and most realistic interpretation of the gospel message, that the teachings of Jesus were ideals for all men and all nations, to be obeyed literally and universally as the basis of all human progress toward a higher destiny, a nobler existence and a complete redemption here and hereafter. Such ideals cannot be circumscribed by community or Yearly Meeting bounds, and the denomination that embodies these as a part of its fundamental faith ought at least to have the capacity of expansion, adequate for their propagation as the great remedial and saving force in all our social, industrial, national and international life.

We are fully aware of the fact that some Friends probably in every Yearly Meeting, and many Friends in a few Yearly Meetings, have never been fully reconciled to the organization of the Five Years Meeting, and see in it only a useless and costly bit of machinery, designed in the main to dictate terms to the Yearly Meetings and ultimately to destroy their autonomy. We give credit for the utmost sincerity to those who hold these views. We nevertheless believe they are mistaken views, and should give place to a different interpretation of the Quaker mission. For, let it be said, that our conceptions of the mission of Quakerism will determine the character of our working organism. If the chief essential of Quakerism is to create and foster a close and exclusive fellowship on the part of those who stress certain interpretations of faith and who desire to maintain certain mannerisms in conduct and worship, it can probably be perpetuated better by operating in detached communities, allowing each community and each individual member the fullest liberty of an individualized interpretation of conduct and profession. But such practice is more the practice of the cloister than of that cosmopolitanism of the gospel which Jesus emphasized when he bade his followers go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

If Quakerism is to be a world force, or even a national force, as the prophet of a message that concerns the human family in all its manifold relationships, it follows that its working organism must be projected upon lines that are commensurate with the scope of its mission. The Society of Friends as represented by the Five Years Meeting could not re-incorporate itself into thirteen separate organisms without doing violence to the spirit and vital importance of the Quaker standards, which, theoretically or otherwise Friends have been supposed to uphold for two and a half centuries. The problem involved in the organization and maintenance of the Five Years Meeting is the problem of existing as one body, conscious of a definite and commanding mission in human society, or of existing in broken, and for the most part disconnected camps, with the almost certain danger of losing or obliterating gradually both the Quaker spirit and our Quaker ideals.

The real problem before us, as we see it, is not to take the back track in our march of progress toward the goal of greater power and usefulness, but to harmonize the operations of the Yearly Meetings with the Five Years Meeting upon simpler and therefore more efficient lines, for the strengthening and enlargement of our entire organism, going forward as one body of believers, bent upon the largest service for the Master in the endeavor to do our full share in making the reign of righteousness complete throughout the world.

The Measure of Faith.

The measure of faith to some people is the measure of their own experience. They are never ready to venture upon uncharted seas, they never reach the frontiers of life, to them their horizon is the limit of their world. Encompassed by doubts, life is an uncertainty and religion a matter of cold, calculating reason. Such is not the faith of the Bible.

The measure of the faith of others is the measure of their belief in the omnipotence and love of Jehovah, both as Father and Lord. There is no horizon beyond which their faith does not go. Their skyline is projected to infinity and their vision conceives all things to be possible through Christ Jesus. Communing with God they come to know Him as Father and are willing to trust Him for all that has not yet been revealed. To them life is a joy, because all things are sure, whether yet realized or not. They can walk in the dark, whether seeing or not, comforted by the assuring touch of the Master and by His voice, "It is I, be not afraid." Such men and women have a foretaste of the victories of life before they are actually accomplished. They are willing to accept all they can see and understand and trust God for all the rest. Doubts are resolved into trust, and faith in that which is to be comes from believing that God will supply all their needs according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus. Such is the faith of the Bible.

Faith is the result of experience in part, and in part it is the fruitage of prayer. No less is it an experience to be practiced and cultivated until it becomes a habit of life. Some men cultivate their doubts until doubting is a habit. Others cultivate faith until faith is the actual experience of their daily living. Doubt is disbelief. It may be in one's self, or it may be in God, but in either case can be corrected by practicing belief in the omnipotence of God and by cultivating the spirit of trust in things that are unseen. For, above all else, the measure of our faith is the measure of our belief in God and of our own willingness to follow the teachings of His Son.

The Moral Effects of the War Upon America

By CHARLES S. MACFARLAND, D.D.

General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Recent experiences in Europe may have led to over emphasis, but I am constrained to the feeling that the moral effect of this war upon America may be worse than upon any of the nations involved. Among the belligerent peoples there are compensatory influences for its awful tragedies. One witnesses examples of splendid bravery and self sacrifice, the spirit of both patriotic devotion and Christian resignation on the part of widows and children, of allegiance to conscience, the willingness of the rich to share with the poor, the deepening of the religious sense, which in some cases has risen to a spiritual atmosphere far above the conflict, the sense of a sublime faith in the future, in some cases the discrediting of militarism, at times the spirit of intercession, and many other moral and spiritual elements which, perhaps, go far to counteract the demoralizing influences of human strife. Many or most of these elements are wanting in the moral atmosphere of our country.

"What right has the United States to intervene!" protested the wife of a pastor in Paris as we were at dinner on Sunday, when the word "intervention" happened to be used by a member of the group around the table. "The United States has shown no interest or concern in matters of justice and righteousness. They have simply kept their eyes out for commercial advantage. To be sure, they have supplied the allies with munitions; but it has been a purely commercial transaction, and they would just as soon have sent the munitions to any other country for the same or more money."

My friend in Paris was not without grounds for her vehemence. We HAVE given ourselves over in many directions to the commercializing of the misfortunes of our brethren across the sea, even to the amplitude of complacency. And we have exhibited at the same moment the spirit of Pharisaism and thanked God that we are not as other men are, especially as these poor Publicans in Europe. We have forgotten that the same material ambitions and selfish competitions and suspicions which have caused this war are right in our own midst. The nations of Europe are suffering not only because of their immediate sins, but because of their past iniquities and we are not altogether free, at least, from blots upon our history. Some of our militarists are not very much better than the militarists of Europe. The same social disorders that must bear their share of responsibility over there are present with us also. If the nations of Europe had only thought less about their foes without and more about their foes within, they might have preserved their common civilization, but we are making the same sort of analysis. Our brothers and our sisters across the sea have been trained and guided wrongly? Grant it all! The children of their fathers were conceived in national sin and born in racial iniquity, and the result is international depravity? Yes. But how far is our own better state due to our better national morals, and how much to our more favored station upon the map of the world? Yes, we have been guilty of the prayer of the Pharisee.

I feel sadly sure, moreover, that we are losing some of the moral idealism which was gaining its way in our midst. Our "preparedness" program has not been free from militaristic touches, and some of them are affixed to it by men and women who once were predictors of an international morality whose prophecies they have now cast off in contempt. But its worst influence has been that it has obscured that larger moral preparedness towards which we really were tending. We are not at this moment very much concerned about the violation of some of our own treaties and we are trudging along very much in the paths of the same old diplomacy that has brought Europe to ruin. The ideals of international righteousness which we had begun to dream have been at least sadly obscured by the dust of our parades and the imploring speech of the prophet of the armored conscience is drowned by the brazen band and the shouts of those who cry, "We trust in chariots and in horses." I am not speaking of a sane and normal consideration of protection, but of the hysteria which assures and admonishes us that moral power and physical force are convertible terms.

But perhaps the worst of these moral effects has been the loss of our sympathy and compassion. We have gotten "used to it" until the massacre of a nation has little more effect upon us than had the sinking of the Titanic with a thousand souls but four short years ago.

We have made such impression as this upon thinking men and women in Europe, even though their feelings have not been very clearly voiced. A European correspondent, writing concerning our new plans for war relief says, "WE HAD COME PRETTY NEARLY TO FEEL THAT THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WERE OVERWHELMINGLY CONCERNED WITH THEIR OWN COMMERCIAL GAINS." The criticisms and reproaches which one hears in Germany, France and England are thus not concerned so much with our diplomacy as with what they feel to be our national selfishness.

And yet, withal, we profess at the same time to be looking toward a reconciliation and a reconstruction in which we shall exercise a moral influence and we live to talk upon it with complacent assurance. So are they looking towards it. There WILL be opportunity for moral intervention. Despite all mutterings and trivial complaints, all these peoples are really looking or will look to the west for light, and there may be a great work of reconciliation by the spiritual forces in America with the like forces in Europe.

The American churches and the American people have before them an open door, but it can only be entered in the habiliments of unselfishness. We have not yet entered it. For Belgium and her three million destitute and starving people we have given seven cents per capita, while New Zealand, bearing its own war burdens as part of the British Empire, has given a dollar and a quarter per capita to Belgian Relief. England, staggering under the war load, has received and cared for thousands of Belgian refugees, and given millions of pounds besides. It was thought that the United States, the only great nation untouched by the war, might furnish the food supplies for Belgium, but the Commission was obliged to ask food from the whole world to save Belgium from starvation. It must be remembered also that the gifts to Belgium from our country include the large contributions of the Rockefeller Foundation, so that the total of popular contributions is smaller than appears. For Serbia, with her five millions of suffering peoples and her five thousand orphans, we have given less than three hundred thousand dollars, while the British Serbian Relief Committee three months ago had raised a million and a half pounds ($7,500,000), and France two million francs ($400,000). To the more than one million Armenians, whose story forms one of the darkest chapters in human history, we have given, covering the whole period, about one dollar for each sufferer. For the sufferers in Northern France little or nothing, and for Poland's millions of homeless, wandering peasants, mostly women and children, a total of something like two hundred thousand dollars.

It is estimated by those who claim to know, that our national wealth increases at the rate of about twenty-two million dollars a day, and I suppose it would be larger than this at the present time, owing to the commercial influence of the war. If that be the case, then, up to April, 1916, we had given to all the war sufferers during the entire period a total of something like one day's profit.

And yet the effect of what little we have done has been startling. After my friend in Paris had ended her outburst, I said somewhat calmly, "But just what intervention has the United States of America attempted? I have been going about through your country and I have found our physicians and our nurses and other men and women from the United States whose only intervention seems to have been for the alleviation of suffering and want." I had not proceeded very far when she broke utterly down and made unnecessary confession of her unjust reproach. But still, she knew it had not been unjust and that she had merely been confused.

Our only counteracting influence to a reproachfulness which is in danger of reaching the feeling of contempt, is and will be our work of relief. I will frankly say that I might have found access to French Protestants difficult had it not been for the reason that we had helped (little enough) to meet the needs of their churches. And yet Pastor Roussel came over here to raise a little fund of one hundred and ten thousand dollars, and we had to let him go back with only twenty thousand of it.

The American churches, therefore, as represented in the Federal Council, are attempting to approach the people at a new angle, to appeal beyond the ordinary impulse of philanthropy to the religious and spiritual motive. It has been felt that we might well begin with the churches, for our Christian churches have as yet failed to rise to the great occasion and opportunity before them, have lost sight of their distinctive spiritual mission, and have themselves been drawn into the vortex of a seething civilization. We have come very near declaring, or at least assuming, a "moratorium" of Christian faith. Christian leaders are everywhere drawing new maps of Europe instead of seeking to realize an international kingdom of the spirit. They are still dealing with the terms of international diplomacy which have wrought the very disaster from which they seek to escape. Like Saul of Tarsus, we have not stoned Stephen, but we have held the coats of those who did.

We may, without intruding upon men's con-sciences, in the spirit of the Publican, find ways of suggesting that peace and justice will both be approached by the churches; and especially the responsible Christian leaders of all nations, rising above the conflict (even though led in it by conscience) into a higher spiritual atmosphere. But the first manifestation of our love must be the reaction of our human sympathy.

In pursuance of this end, the Federal Council has sent out a first message directly to the churches and the Sunday Schools, for their own contributions.
The second message went two steps farther and translated the message from one to the churches to one which should be sent through the churches to the American people, urging not only a war relief committee in every church, but also urging a community committee and movement in every city and town.

"It is the creation of a new atmosphere in the nation," these were the terms in which Professor Samuel T. Dutton, Secretary of the Armenian Committee, described the task of the church at a conference of Relief Societies. It is the invoking of the spirit of unselfishness and self-sacrifice. The representatives of the war relief organizations, many of them, have expressed their feeling that this has been the one thing lacking. Our Ex-President of the United States, and the business men and publicists associated with him in re-enforcing our first message, reminded us that we must invoke the religious motive of the people and transfuse the whole movement with a spiritual light. One of our European brethren writes concerning our first message:
"Every expression of unselfishness is a chord of love between America and the Nations."

I am profoundly convinced that the spiritual effect on our own churches would be as great if not greater than the reaction which has come to us from Foreign Missions, and if the voice of the churches can reach the American people, it may be the means of lifting our nation itself out of its economic and industrial confusion to a higher idealism which shall make us a moral power in the world.

Indeed, if this movement should induce the Congress of the United States to make a great appropriation for the relief of suffering Europe, it might be at least as wisely expended as the same contribution for ammunition and armament.

The United States has the most magnificent opportunity for moral power in the world that ever faced a people, a chance to make herself inviolate, unassailable, immortal, if she will listen to the law of Jesus: "He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake, shall find it."

The hour is coming when they shall cry: "There is no daysman betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both," and in the hour of reconciliation and reconstruction, the power of America then will be simply the measure of her sympathy and her compassion now. But at this moment, "WE ARE IN DANGER"—so say our political conventionists one and all—and so we are—OF LOSING OUR IDEALS AND OF LOSING OUR COMPAS-SION.

THE DIVINE FELLOWSHIP.

(Editorial In The Continent).

"What does Communion with Christ mean?"

That question from a serious-minded church man, it is fair to call a symptom of the times.

At least, time has been in the church, not more than a generation or two removed, when the asking of such a question on the part of one who regularly attended public worship in the house of God would have been unthinkable. But today it surprises nobody.

The whole tenor of religious thinking has so changed that now it is an exceptional layman indeed whose range of ideas includes anything so mystical as conscious contact between everyday earthly human beings and their heavenly Lord.

And when anybody mentions such a thing, it is quite according to the temper of the times for the listener to ask what this strange talk actually means.

This extinction of the idea of spiritual communion between God and his children results abnormally with two different groups.

It produces, first of all, many Christians who are trying to be religious men without the aid of any inner impulse whatever beyond their own conscience of what's right.

But that result is not so pathetic as the spiritual impoverishing of other men who do enter into a large measure of real communion with the divine life, yet fail to recognize what it is.

It is a sorry thing that a soul should not meet
God, but sorrier to meet God and not know him.

And it is chargeable to the unspiritual stupidity of our age that this latter misfortune can be the lot of so many men nowadays.

Assuming from current ideas that the divine fellowship is some sort of awesome and uncanny spell, multitudes are cheated out of realizing that the genuine signs of God with them are instead the unaffected stirrings of holy intent that they feel in those moments when, as they say, they are "at their best."

What such people need more than anything from their church is a straight emphasis on the fact that experience of God in the life of the common man comes not at all by ghostly exaltation into ecstasies or trances, but by a sweet and wholesome quickening of the heart for every rightful purpose and sentiment.

To believe that these "best moments" which men are conscious of evolve simply out of themselves, is grave practical atheism.

And it is a very grievous irreligion too to tell a person that association with the heavenly Father and the elder Brother is something unnatural—something strained and painful. Quite opposite is the truth—only in divine association can the human soul be wholly in poise and wholly attuned to all it touches.

Along normal paths of living then, and not in rare mountain atmospheres of ecstasy, are to be sought the experiences of real communion between God and man.

And the man who wishes to know what is meant by such communion should be answered first of all with pointed questions about what he has felt already in his own life.

Was there ever a time when even for the briefest space he felt in his soul supremely and sublimely convinced of the worth and beauty of a clean life faithfully lived for God's sake in accordance with the will of God—any hour when he knew, by clear, direct insight into the reality of things, without need of argument or demonstration, that one can better afford to give up every worldly good—"yea, and his own life also"—rather than surrender a whit of the integrity of the spirit within him?

Was there ever a day when for a little while nothing that was evil or even dubious looked attractive to him, and all his soul craved was to be sincere and noble and pure?

Was there ever an hour when doubts and perplexities concerning God's being and God's love all on an instant faded away like vapor and left him to see clearly and without a shadow of fear that God actually is and that God truly loves?

Or when the gospel of the atoning Jesus was spoken to him, did there ever answer within him a voice saying: "He is the One for me?"

Somewhere along the line of such questioning every soul is certain to respond with some remembrance of an hour when sordid things of purely worldly meaning turned unprofitable in his sight and something of better worth began to challenge him.

And what in the face of such recollection each honest man, religious or irreligious, should be adjured to acknowledge, is that it was not himself who gave to himself this truer view.

The hour in which a man's valuations of things swing back to parallel God's valuation, as the Bible reveals them, is the hour that he is not alone; God is with him.

What then, a man is called on to do when the summons reaches him to cultivate a spiritual communion with God, is, in plain language, to put himself in such attitudes toward the things of religion that God may work in him, more and more often and ever more deeply, these convictions which lift him above the fluctuating motives that debase life and the wavering questions that agitate it.

And this, being further translated into terms of habit and practice, means that a man should open every door in his life by which he believes God can enter into him.

To read the Bible often and thoughtfully, to pray "without ceasing" both statedly and on impulse, to attend upon church worship and the preaching of God's word at every opportunity, to seek the society of those like-minded in the purpose to experience divine reality, to claim and secure for one's self the frequent opportunity of soul-searching meditation, to expose one's life in every possible way to the manifestation of the Creator's presence in nature, and especially to cultivate acquaintance with Christ in those works of human helpfulness which were His joy in the days of his flesh—these and such like means are an honest soul's invitation for the Father and the Son to dwell in his house.

And what the answer will be is written in Christ's own words:

"If a man love me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

"Practicing the presence of God" is then not trying to work up a state of unearthly transport or to develop high-tension raptures but simply to live day by day in the realization that spiritualities are the true realities.

Perfectly has George Croly put the right Christian desire:

"I ask no dream, no prophet ecstasies,
No sudden rending of the veil of clay,
No angel visitant, no opening skies;
But take the dimness of my soul away."

ISAIAH LIVES AGAIN.

A Biblical Play Effectively Presented

By ALBERT E. BAILEY
(The Congregationalist.)

Vivid, picturesque, human, impressive, everything that an amateur play on a religious theme should be—that was Isaiah as presented recently at the Elizabeth Peabody House Theater, Boston. Prof. Eleanor D. Wood of Wellesley College, a well known Friend, is the conjurer who has worked the miracle on the dry bones of the past, and the young settlement house were the assistants. The great prophet of the eighth century B. C. came to life under their touch.

To the throbbing of a tom-tom the curtain rises on a scene in the Temple court at Jerusalem. The feast of Jehovah is being celebrated. A throng gay with the striking colors of the East busies itself with preparation or breaks into dance to the zither's music and the rhythmic clapping. A temple-servant moves among them with his white lamb, crying, "Lambs for the evening sacrifice!" An old lame wine-seller, picturesque as Damascus itself, dispenses wine from his leathern skin and sets up a howl when a buyer defrauds him on the ground that the wine is for Jehovah's feast. Into the merriment comes Isaiah, and in dignified and impressive words rebukes the insincerity of their worship and denounces the proud "Daughters of Zion." Wailing takes the place of their scornful laughter as mourners enter to announce the death of King Uzziah; and for the moment the crowd listens to the prophet's plea, "Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes."

The second scene shows us the bribe-taking priest at his altar. Isaiah again denounces the sins of his people; and while praying before the Temple is called to the prophetic office by a brilliant light and a voice from the Holy of Holies, and is inspired by the unseen celestial chorus.

The third scene is most attractively staged. It presents an Oriental bazar with its little booths hung with bright cloths, strings of beads and vegetables. Turbaned and whiskered dealers squat under their canopies; bare-legged countrymen with shepherd's cloak and club or with sheepskin jacket, brilliant headcloth and black coils, push among the throng; townsmen with long robes, giddy sashes and pointed shoes, women clad in the embroidered garb of Ramallah or Bethlehem with head-dress of coins, finger the tradesmen's wares and dicker in true Jerusalem style. Again Isaiah enters, touches his lyre and chants to the hushed throng the Song of the Vineyard. His passionate closing denunciation empties the bazar of its buyers; the shopmen pick up their goods and leave shaking their fists at the destroyer of trade. Only the sweet-faced Shelah stays to sympathize with the prophet and join her spirit to his.

The first act has pictured Isaiah as a preacher of righteousness; the second and third show him also as a statesman, the adviser of kings, the vindicator of Jehovah's faithfulness. Dramatic are the entrances of the runners to announce the approach of the armies of Pekah and Rezin; dramatic the encounter of Isaiah with Ahaz by the "conduit of the upper pool;" and the presentation of his little son, "Shear Yashub," who prostrates himself so prettily before the king as the prophet explains his name, "A remnant shall turn." Again in the buzzing bazar the crowd watches Isaiah write the tablet as a testimony that God will destroy Samaria and Damascus, and marvels when the runners bring news that these cities have fallen.

The last act, scheduled twenty years after the first, shows Jerusalem when the armies of Assyria are approaching. Hezekiah in full council rejects Isaiah's advice to remain firm and not bargain with Egypt. Then in his sick chamber he repents his folly, sets free Isaiah and throws into prison the faithless treasurer, Shebna, whose advice he has followed to his hurt. The climax is reached when Hezekiah and Isaiah, in the presence of the assembled city, defy the Rabshakah to do his worst, and the panting messengers bring word that the angel of Jehovah has smitten the host of Sennacherib. Solemnly the king and his train enter the Temple and destroy the idols of the foreign gods, while all listen to the closing rhapsody of Isaiah that pictures the blessedness of a united and faithful people.

The play does to a difficult book of the Bible what a lifetime of ordinary reading cannot do—stamps reality upon it. It does it, first, because it is a play; and who would not rather see life than read about it? It does it, second, because the characters have all stepped out of the East, garments, accessories, colors, sounds, Jewish faces and all; one can never forget the wine-seller, the Egyptian messenger, the farmer with the goatee, King Hezekiah in his robe of red and gold, the little boy, Zillah, the dancing-girl, the prophetess, to say nothing of half a dozen unnamed ones. And best of all, one can never read again those splendid passages of Isaiah, throbbing with tenderness and indignation and entreaty, without hearing the rich voice and feeling the wonderfully sympathetic interpretation of Mr. John P. Whitman, who took the title part. Nothing could be more impressive than his dignified and whole-souled presentation. Professor Wood is to be congratulated on finding so skillful an actor to realize her inspiring dream.

What would not the presentation of one play like this a year be worth to a church or a Sunday school! Absolutely nothing could touch it as a means of making the Bible a real book to young people.

REPORT OF LU HO MISSION.

Annual Report of Dr. George F. De Vol to the China Committee of New York Yearly Meeting.

One by one the precious years of our service are being completed. Today as we begin our sixteenth annual report, let me express my heartfelt gratitude to you who have made it possible to begin and continue this blessed service for our Heavenly Father. Thousands of people have heard the glad tidings of redeeming love who would otherwise never have known that there was a Saviour for the lost.

Our pastoral responsibility practically covers the county of Luho and at several points overlaps adjoining counties. We feel it a duty to follow up our patients anywhere within a radius of twenty miles and when we know no other mission is likely to meet their spiritual needs we send our men out still farther. We have often spoken of our method for shepherding this field but added years of experience has enabled us to make our plans more efficient. For our work among men we are assisted by five regular evangelists beside our self-supporting workers. One of these men spends most of his time in the hospital. Another is located at Guapu and has oversight over two other centers. The others go out far and near and are doing a splendid work. They report to me every Seventh day evening. We have a record book wherein is allotted space for twenty large centers. Each brings in the results of his week's work. Names of special inquirers are recorded, the fitness of probationers is discussed and irregularities among Christians is made a subject for prayer.

Our conception of regarding active Christians from various centers as delegates was evidently of the Spirit. We have often made mention of this plan but each year it is coming to mean more and more. This year two of our station representatives have been acknowledged as overseers and one who was formerly an overseer has been made an elder. At present we have eight overseers and four elders and still others are about to be appointed. The development of these who were once idol-worshippers, living in heathen darkness to places of responsibility has been a long process. To feel now after these years that we really have those who are able to share with us the responsibilities of laying the foundation of a Church is a matter for great thanksgiving.

During the year suitable men have been given us of the Lord, to represent the Gospel in two centers which have hitherto resisted our efforts to give them the Gospel. Our new representative at Chengah-chiao (Chen family bridge) is a unique character. He was formerly a soldier of considerable education but thoroughly corrupt. He became an opium eater. His mother also smoked opium and they together consumed all the available property of his father, which was a comfortable estate. He gambled, making his living by his wits and making spoil of petty law suits. When reduced to the appearance of a beggar, he listened to the Gospel and was completely transformed. He had a most distressing stammering tongue, but since his conversion he has been given faith for his healing of this affliction and now speaks with power in our meetings and is bringing the knowledge of the love of Christ to the dark hearts of his people.

The last of our large centers to yield is an aristocratic village to the north of us, called Bah-beh-chiao (Eight hundred bridge). Our victory there is fresh in our memory. Very recently after much prayer we made a trip there on a First day morning. We had sent an evangelist the day before to announce our coming and to make preparations. At an early hour a company of representative men gathered in a large tea house. When we arrived about ten-thirty our evangelist had been preaching for over an hour. We were given a cordial reception. We proceeded with our meeting and after having taught them for an hour it was then suggested that we eat something. Steamed biscuits and eggs were served where we were sitting and then we continued to teach them of God the Father and Christ our Saviour until 2:30. At this time we were invited to call upon several of the principal men and we were followed from home to home by a considerable crowd of listeners.

One among the number of those who listened for several hours was a much respected business man who has promised to attend our coming semi-annual meeting. Another was a city elder for twenty years and another person was a woman who stood behind us and listened. Chinese propriety did not admit of her sitting at the tables with us but she is known as a religious woman of the place who is laying up merit by good deeds.

Our former evangelist, Weiruling, has now become a self-supporting evangelist at still another center which we long despaired of opening, for want of men and money. He serves as a representative of that place and is doing excellent work for the church. By the assistance of one of our members he was enabled to open a chapel there. Still another chapel has been opened at Sanchaho (Three Forks River) at their own initiative and largely at their own expense. The work is growing there and one of our boarding school graduates has been called there to teach a Christian school in their new building. He assists in their meetings on First day. An old man of eighty-four, the father of one of our Christians there, has been saved. He is perfectly deaf and has never heard a word of the Gospel spoken. He is able to read and it is through reading the Bible and tracts, together with the changed lives of his children that has led him to accept Christ. He is faithful in prayer and bows his head in worship before each meal.

During the year twenty-seven new members have been added to our membership, making 155 up to the present. We also have thirty-seven probationers and eighty-two inquirers whose names have been recorded. Before closing this part of our report I wish to tell you of the conversion of a very interesting character. We have been very intimately connected for many years with the military official of this city. We were brought especially in contact with him when his son became our medical student. When China became a Republic he was one among the many who lost this glory. His home was only two blocks from our hospital. His appearance on our street with all his Oriental pomp, riding on horseback preceded by a big red umbrella and followed by a squad of retainers and soldiers was a matter of frequent occurrence. He was always friendly to us but absolutely deaf to the Gospel message. This year, largely through the sickness of his wife we have been frequently in his home. His Christian son, by his devoted attention to his mother, completely broke down any opposition there may have been previously to the Gospel. This once proud old man has now become an humble follower of our Lord. His whole home has been transformed.

Our street chapel in the city has been more effective this year than ever before. On First day afternoons some of our men go out to neighboring villages to preach, but for some months the meetings at the street chapel have been unusual. A series of short addresses by our Christian workers on previously arranged Gospel themes is followed by opportunity for personal testimony. Frequently these meetings continue for two hours or more. The meeting is sometimes followed by an after service in the hospital chapel where we are able to invite any who are willing to learn to pray.

Hospital Report

We have had rather a remarkable year in one respect, that there has been comparatively very little sickness in all this section of country. There has been very much less malaria than any previous year of our experience, owing to the fact that there were very few mosquitoes last summer. We have had none of the dreaded fevers such as typhoid, typhus and relapsing. There were a few cases of diphtheria but the contagion did not spread. Whooping cough and mumps have been prevalent but the Chinese do not call upon us generally for this sort of troubles.

While there has been a dropping off at the dispensary there has been the largest number of hospital patients we have ever had. The total number of in-patients amounts to 499. We have been called upon to perform a few major operations, but by far the larger part of our operative work has been upon the eye. Several large tumors have been removed. One woman, from whom we removed a large cancer, was meanwhile converted and has become an earnest Christian. Her husband is a teacher and he has invited our Christian workers to give Christian instruction to his students. She is soon to be received into membership.

Three men came to us from a town thirty miles to the North. All were truly saved. Of these one was a teacher who is eager to open a chapel in his place, another had tubercular glands of the neck removed and the third submitted to an operation for vesical calculus. He has been an invalid for ten years. We are thankful that he has made a perfect recovery although the stone was of great size. He has become a happy Christian.

For very much of the success of our work we are indebted to our faithful staff of medical assistants. We have three medical students besides Liu Bao Yung, who is completing his third year in the Peking University Medical College. We earnestly pray that the supply of the Spirit of Jesus may make the Yearly Meeting a time of gracious favor and blessing. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

Why He Yielded

The following testimony was given by a convert at a meeting: "Last night, when I was about to retire, my little three-year-old girl, who was awake, said to me, 'Papa, don't you say your prayers?' I told her lightly that mamma did the praying for both of us. Soon she said, 'Papa, don't you know how to pray?' I said, thoughtlessly, 'No.' In a moment she was by my bedside, saying, 'Poor papa, I will teach you how to pray.' With all my excuses she would not sleep until I arose, and kneeling by her side repeated after her, 'Now I lay me down to sleep.' Then she went back to her bed, and in a few moments was in the land of dreams. I didn't sleep that night. God had spoken to me through my baby girl and I felt that if I died before I waked my soul would be lost. All this day I have been miserable, but tonight I have found my peace. I expect to pray that little prayer with my child tonight, knowing that living or dying I am the Lord's."—The Epworth Herald.

YOUTH MEETING, LYNN, MASSACHUSETTS, TOM SYKES, PASTOR.

"Les Amis"

No one who is familiar with Quakers is astonished that we do not now hear them in the market place preaching their doctrine of non-resistance with the European war as text. Loud propaganda is not their way; they are content to bear witness to their faith by works. The realm in which to look at this time for the "Friends" is the realm of relief work. Without wasting breath on "I told you so," they have put their hands instantly to the humane tasks that need doing.

English Friends have their ambulance unit, but most of their work is for non-combatants. It began immediately after the battle of the Marne, as a practical response to the needs of the civilian population, part native, part refugee, of that region in France over which war had flowed and ebbed again with the retreat of the German armies. They started in at once to care for sick and wounded civilians, to inoculate against typhoid, to provide good water, to feed and to clothe refugees, to build houses, and to furnish seed and farm implements with which the country people, who had lost their 1914 crop, might start their little farms afresh.

The work grew swiftly in the hands of the workers; all uninvaded Belgium and the devastated area of France is now their province. They visit every village, and with the assistance of the local authorities discover and help every needy family. They maintain hospitals, orphanages, schools, and stations to provide milk for babies; they carry orphaned children away from the fighting zone, rescue public, ecclesiastical and private property from towns under bombardment, and provide work for thousands who would otherwise be unemployed. Everywhere they cooperate with existing governments and organizations; everywhere they show their characteristic good sense by readjusting their work as fast as conditions change in one spot or another. And, looking ahead, they say that the end of the war "is likely to be only the beginning of the larger part of our work."

One of the best results of their labor is the renewal of hope and courage in the hearts of the destitute. The poor people of Belgium and of France, ignorant of any religious significance in the name of the Friends, accept them at their own valuation as les amis. The great desire of these friends to humanity is that their labors shall be a worthy sign of their "deep-seated faith in the power of love to help and to heal." In the light of recent events, persons who have regarded them as impractical idealists can hardly hold to that view.—Youth's Companion.

Worldliness

Worldliness, in the religious use of the term, is not the being occupied with secular things. It is rather a spirit of temper, a way of looking at things and judging things. The worldliness is not in the work, but in the spirit of the worker; and it may be manifested in connection with any kind of work. Worldliness can penetrate even into prayer and preaching, and the most sacred work can be done in a worldly spirit. In like manner the Christian life does not consist in doing formally religious things, though these have their place, but in the filial spirit which should pervade all doing and all days and all life in all its interests. Whatsoever the Christian does, he is to do it heartily, as to the Lord and not to man. And this living in all things unto the Lord is his religion.—Borden P. Bowne.

Praying is the clearing of the blocked roads which are crowded with all sorts of worldly hindrances. It is the preparing of the way of the Lord. When I turn to the Lord in prayer I open the doors and windows of my soul toward the heavenlies, and I open them for the reception of any gifts of grace which God's holy love may wish me to receive. My reverent thought and prayer perfects communion between my soul and God.—J. H. Powett.

ENVELOPES FOR CHURCH OFFERINGS.

The ability of the Board of Missions to supply Duplex Envelopes at the reduced prices quoted on this page two weeks ago depends upon a sufficient number of envelopes being ordered. Meetings contemplating the use of these envelopes or those considering a change in their present financial plans are invited to send to our office for literature explaining the advantages of the weekly pledge and envelope system. Duplex Envelopes dated to begin use on October 1st printed in two colors with prayer topics on the back may be secured from the Board of Missions at the following prices providing the orders are received by September 1st:

For fewer than 50 sets, 11 cents per set; for more than 49 but less than 100 sets, 10½ cents per set; for more than 99 sets, 10 cents per set.

Orders and inquiries should be sent to the address appearing at the top of this page. Envelopes dated for use from September 3 will be supplied at the same prices if enough orders are received to secure the reduction. For envelopes dated from September 3 orders must be in by August 1st.

LATE NEWS FROM THE FIELD.

A number of the young men and women at Holguin, Cuba, who wish to become more efficient as workers or Bible School teachers, have been organized to form a manual training class. They meet each week on Thursday evening just before the regular mid-week service.

At the same station the classes in the day school continued through a part of the vacation. The regular school year closed on May 30, but pupils and patrons both wanted the classes to continue so all except the primary grades met in half day sessions until the end of June.

Born, to Jose and Caredad Luisa Angulo, June 13, twin boys, Armando and Alfredo. Mother and babies doing well. Jose Angulo has been studying in the Baptist school at El Cresto in preparation for the ministry. His wife previous to her marriage, and for a time after, was one of the teachers in the summer school at Holguin.

AN UNEXPECTED OPPORTUNITY.

A Friends' school in the city of Holguin, Cuba, threatened with dispossession of its present rented quarters, has the opportunity of securing a permanent home of its own. The terms of sale are so favorable, the location so desirable and the need for accommodation for this school so urgent that the Board feels the property must be secured. Full description of the situation will be found in an article bearing the above title on page 546.

RELIEF FUNDS FROM CUBA.

An appeal to help 4,000 Armenian refugees at Port Said, Egypt, reached Holguin Bible School, May 28. On the following Sunday the five classes of seventy-five pupils gave an offering of $4.68, which has been sent on the mission for which it was contributed. The spirit of giving is growing among us. We pray it may increase until our Cuban churches are able to support the home work and have a share in sending the gospel to the Isles that "wait for His law."

OUR BEST AND OUR WORST IN AFRICA.

This topic or a similar one dealing with any other mission field would be a good one for a missionary meeting. Unfortunately America's worst is represented in nearly every non-Christian country along with our missionaries. The Friends' Minister for July gives an illustration from our Africa Mission: "On Sunday, April 2, Jefferson Ford, accompanied by some of his pupils, in addition to the regular Sunday services, went to a new village, three miles away, where they found the inhabitants on a great beer-drink. They started a service with some of the more sober, which was interrupted by a rainstorm with thunder and lightning. The men in the audience went into the largest hut, and the missionary and his helpers went with them. There they found a large pot of beer, which the natives removed to a dark corner, and some continued drinking. But others listened to the message and singing." It was a meeting under difficulties, because America's worst as well as her best has been carried to Africa.

Similar illustrations are abundant from other lands. For instance China's treatment at the hands of her so-called Christian neighbors of the west for many decades offers a record of which no Christian can be proud. Witness also the prize fight between two American citizens, arranged and managed by American promoters which was held in Havana, Cuba, in 1914.

BOOKS WITH A PURPOSE.

The American Friends Board of Foreign Missions at its office in Richmond carries in stock a varied assortment of missionary books and supplies. This material is sold at a narrow margin of profit and the meager proceeds are applied toward the work of the Board. Friends are invited to order their missionary supplies from the Richmond office. Merely as a suggestion we give below the names and prices of some of the books most frequently called for:

The Board will gladly advise Friends or others with regard to the best books for special uses and is anxious to send bibliography or price list to any who may care for them. It is able to furnish books in quantities for study classes or for missionary libraries at a discount.

"OUR MEXICAN PROBLEM."

The American Board of Commissioners (Congregational) has a strong mission in Chihuahua, Mexico. Their workers were forced to leave the field in March, but most of them are remaining near the border so no time may be lost in getting back when return is possible. One of their missionaries writing in the current number of the Missionary Herald declares that the opportunity for evangelical Christian work in Mexico becomes increasingly great. The common people are hungry for the pure gospel of Christ. He calls upon the Congregational church to double its missionary staff in Mexico and to open new stations in order that Mexico may be reached while the people are open, receptive, hungry for the gospel. The article concludes with these two sentences:

"In view of what we have seen during these last few months, I am persuaded that whatever may be the final solution of the political problems, we shall be face to face with a marvelous opportunity for extending the knowledge of the gospel. How to make the most of this opportunity is 'our Mexican problem,' a problem which the supporters of our work must help us to solve."

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING

During the last week of June there was massed on a hilltop near the State Capitol at Augusta, Maine, a large number of tents of the soldiery. On trains and trolleys and at the railroad stations one saw the men in khaki. On another hill but twelve miles distant in Vassalboro, was pitched a circle of the peaceful tents of New England Friends, and these same trolleys, trains and stations were the scene of their glad greetings as they came in larger numbers than for several years to attend their Yearly Meeting.

This gathering was held at the very time of crisis in our Mexican relations and this fact, together with the ever-darkening cloud of ruin and sorrow across the sea, influenced profoundly the thought of every session. The opening moments of the first session were used by Rufus M. Jones to bring to us the challenge of the hour in which we live, and from then until the reading of the final minute, there was constantly before us the picture of the great world tasks demanding our utmost of thought and devotion, and the wish that never again may we waste life or energy on things that do not matter.

A very helpful group of visiting Friends were with us,—Charles E.

Tebbetts, S. Edgar Nicholson, Mead A. Kelsey, Alexander C. Purdy, Julia S. White, Francis Anscombe and others, including A. Edward Kelsey from the Ram Allah mission and Edgar T. Hole from the African mission.

Our statistical reports showed a loss in the church membership of about forty. There have been a number more requests and admissions than dismissals and transfers, but an even greater excess of deaths over births. The Bible Schools showed a gain in membership in all departments of 139, and we believe with our present methods of graded work this gain can be conserved.

The educational interests of the Yearly Meeting received a large share of time and thought. Moses Brown School is facing the problem of how to provide adequately for the girls, that they may receive as large a benefit from the original endowment as do the boys. The proposal of the committee to build a new and entirely separate girls' school on the same grounds, was referred back to them for one year. At Oak Grove Seminary, as at Penn College, Iowa, there is a crisis involving the very continuance of the school at all. It is meeting a very definite need and serving in a splendid way the surrounding community and the weaker among the nearby Friends meetings, yet its insufficient endowment and meager equipment make it absolutely necessary that all those interested should come at once to its financial aid, if it is to go on after the coming year.

The Efficiency Committee has had for ten months the services of Perry D. Macy as Field Secretary. His work has included over eight hundred family visits, a large number of public addresses, an extensive correspondence, twenty-three complete or partial community surveys made under his direction, sixty maps of Friends' communities collected, a card catalogue of the entire membership, etc. The Evangelistic and Church Extension Committee reported helpful and aggressive work done in every Quarterly Meeting. Among their successful endeavors has been that of helping Salem Friends rebuild their meeting house, destroyed in the Salem fire. By the appointment of Perry D. Macy as Evangelistic Superintendent for the coming year the work of these two committees will be very closely correlated. The Yearly Meeting minuted a deep appreciation of the work done for years by the retiring Superintendent, Thomas Wood.

The Foreign Missionary work of the Yearly Meeting, hindered by the continuance of the war, still holds our deep interest and our workers are longing to return to the field. Edward Kelsey expressed the earnest wish that he might not be present at Yearly Meeting next year. Our property at Ram Allah is still safe and the meetings for worship have been sustained by our native Friends.

The Committee on Peace reported active work by means of lectures, literature and aid in such societies as The Fellowship of Reconciliation and the Society to Abolish War. The time given to this report was but a small portion of that which the subject received, for the deep central thought of many of the addresses and sermons throughout the week was that of our duty to uphold the highest possible ideals of love and service to all. A telegram was sent to President Wilson urging the immediate application of these ideals in our present Mexican situation.

The week was marked by the presence and active interest of a large number, not only of young men and women, but of boys and girls in their early teens. A considerable group of younger children played happily on the campus and through the family worship in the dining room, and attendance at the shorter services gained their first happy impressions of Yearly Meeting. The young people displayed on the walls of the meeting room maps and posters showing Young Friends activities. They had some very jolly times around the camp fire. They also held many very earnest meetings and considered most practical subjects such as "Personal Methods for Presenting a Decision for Christ," "Deputation Team Work," etc. Those feeling a call to the ministry or some definite line of religious work held a conference with the elders.

A Bible half hour was conducted each day by Alexander C. Purdy, his general subject being, "The Kingdom of God." This was a most inspiring course of lessons, and was one of the strong influences to unify and focus the work of the week.

All the meetings on the Sabbath were characterized by a forward looking spirit, by consecration and the desire to be of service. To discover and to know God for ourselves and to have help and comfort to give to the work in its great need, is the heartfelt wish of New England Yearly Meeting.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

2.—Leader.

The leader should be one thoroughly acquainted with the subject to be studied. The pastor or other church leader should have charge if a wide-awake, tactful young person is not available. If three or four people well trained in the subject can be found, class leading may be rotated.

3.—Course.

Courses for Supplementary Study Classes may be obtained by writing to the Board of Young Friends Activities, Dunreith, Indiana. It is best to choose some subject which will meet the greatest need of the community.

4.—Members.

Those who belong to the Christian Endeavor, both active and associate members. Those who are neither active and associate members may enter into the discussions.

WEST RICHMOND, INDIANA.

We found a very wideawake group of young Friends at West Richmond, Indiana, the other day. They were having a rally when the thermometer registered 90 in the shade. More than fifty people were present at this rally, and fewer than half of these were visitors. These young people were Junior Endeavorers several years ago; later grew into the Intermediate, under the leadership of Murray S. Kenworthy. Now they have adopted the constitution and taken the pledge of the Young People's Society.

The visitor is struck with the very friendly way in which the meetings are conducted; the freedom, the earnestness and zeal with which they are working is most encouraging. They are sending delegates to the Conference at Cedar Lake. It is expected that at least six of their number will be present.

GO TO CEDAR LAKE

You have a little more than a week to plan for the Conference at Cedar Lake. Of course you mean to come, but we haven't received your enrollment fee yet. Send to The Young Friends Board for program and enrollment blanks; or send us the fee of $2.50 and engage your room.

You could not make a better investment or find a more attractive spot to spend your vacation. Come! Join us at Cedar Lake, August 4-13.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS IN OREGON.

In accord with last week's suggestion, we continue a description of some of the Endeavor Societies in Oregon Yearly Meeting. One of the most active societies of the Yearly Meeting is that at Newberg. Here the young people of Pacific College and the Friends' Meeting work together. The enthusiastic students add much to the life of the Meeting. There are forty-four active members in the Society. Twelve of these are above twenty-five years of age and should perhaps meet in study class instead of directing the Endeavorers. The younger element of the Meeting is perfectly capable of carrying on a good Christian Endeavor Society. Where this is the case, we feel they should always be given a chance. Still, this society is not suffering from its present arrangement. It is doing much for missions, conducts a study class and holds street meetings every other Sunday evening.

Chehalem Center also has a live Society. It has thirty-two members this year, which is twice the number reported last session of Yearly Meeting. The president of the Society is a graduate of Pacific College. He is a "live wire," who is always thinking out some new plans for work. The social life of the place is being looked after, too. The pastor is a young man who is willing for others to be young in social activity as well as in spiritual experience.

The South Salem Christian Endeavor Society is not very large, but it is growing. Last year four new members were taken in. The greatest need of the Society seems to be to find leaders. During the summer months, when the college students are at home, this is not so great a problem, but some one should be found to carry on the work when the recognized leaders are away. The social life of the Meeting has been a little neglected too, but leaders are making plans to remedy this soon.

Salem—Perhaps the most active Society of the Yearly Meeting is located at Salem. The place seems overrun with young people. There is a Senior Society of sixty members, an Intermediate of fifteen and a Junior of forty. All of these are doing active work in both home and foreign missionary lines. They are interested in Quakerism and are planning some study classes in this subject. The Societies publish a monthly paper which stimulates interest, scatters information and does much to foster a community loyalty to the Christian Endeavor organization. The Society is responsible for regular services in the Tuberculosis Hospital, the County Infirmary, and at the City Mission.

Scotts Mills—There is a good Society here. About eighteen young people attend. The spiritual life of the place is high and several young people have been brought to a definite stand for Christ during the past year. The meeting is located among the hills of west central Oregon, in the midst of rich timber lands. Because there has been little sale for timber during the past year or two, the Meeting is hard pressed for ready cash. Still the young people are giving to foreign missions and to some of the shut-in people near the meeting.

Rosedale—There are thirty-three Endeavorers at Rosedale Meeting. The social life of the place has received as much attention as needed, perhaps. The thing now most desired is a deep consecration of the lives of all young Friends to our Lord Jesus Christ. The prayer meeting committee, together with the president and pastor, are making special efforts along this line. A number of definite decisions have already been achieved.

Forest Glades—Near Snohomish, Washington, is a Christian Endeavor Society that has recently been organized. It is called the Forest Glades Meeting. A number of wideawake, enthusiastic young people have gone into this Society. We have little fear that when the spirit of youth so prevalent in the "Big Woods" of the Northwest is applied to the Christian Endeavor organization big things will be accomplished for the church.

THOMAS E. JONES.

OREGON YOUNG FRIENDS ARE RESPONSIVE TO THE WORK OF THE FIVE YEARS MEETING.

The Field Secretary found Oregon Young Friends in a very receptive mood. They knew the Endeavor work of their Yearly Meeting was not in a healthy condition and were ready for suggestions. Throughout all the Yearly Meeting the Secretary was given a cordial reception and a ready hearing. As a result, the Yearly Meeting's work was thoroughly surveyed and a program gotten out that should accomplish great things for Oregon next year. Funds were also raised in a very few minutes that will not only make possible the program, but the furthering of the Young Friends Movement throughout America.

A cordial reception awaited the Secretary in each local meeting visited. Careful attention was given to his advice and spiritual suggestions. Few of the local conferences were large. The average sized audience was fifty. During the three weeks spent in the Northwest the Secretary visited thirteen meetings and gave seventeen addresses. He traveled from Boise, Idaho, and Vancouver, B. C., to Salem, Oregon. He sold several books, arranged for more than a dozen new study classes in Friends History and Ideals, and held over two score personal conferences with young Friends who are contemplating college, going into the ministry or giving their lives to Christ. The Secretary feels that he can say it was a wonderful time we had together and we thank our Heavenly Father for His abundant blessings.

PLANS IN OREGON

The Christian Endeavorers of Oregon Yearly Meeting are at work on their newly adopted program. The Executive Committee met and made the apportionments for the different Quarterly Meetings. The apportionments were made in proportion to the net gains or losses of the quarters for the last year. For example, Portland Quarterly Meeting gained about twice as many members as the other quarters, so its share of the 250 new C. E. members will be 100 and the others 50. The apportions were made in about that proportion for the other parts of the program.

The new Yearly Meeting Superintendent of the C. E. Union expects to attend the different Quarterly Meeting rallies and as many individual Societies as possible and boost the work. On account of the program affording something definite to work for, the Christian Endeavor Union of Oregon Yearly Meeting expects to make greater progress in its work this year than ever before.

WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF.

Maurice Wilson writes from Algiers: "Our Warehouse is an old champagne store which has kindly been lent to us by an interested lady. Here, during the past few weeks, 500 Serbian men and 20 women have come to leave their rags in exchange for better, if not quite new, garments. For the most part they have been peasants who are lodged and employed at the Government Botanical Gardens near by until employment is found for them in groups on large farms. Besides these, there are a number of 'fonctionaries' who live in Algiers itself on their own means or on allowances from their Government, but who are very grateful for a shirt and a pair of socks.

"The work of distribution would be almost impossible without an interpreter, and we are extremely fortunate in having such a capable and willing helper as Steva Todorovitch. He is little more than a boy, but was educated in Geneva, so speaks good French. His father was a wealthy merchant in Belgrade and a captain in the army. After escaping through the horrors of the retreat through Albania with his son, he died in hospital here. The poor boy cannot communicate with his mother in Serbia, and dare not break the news to his sister who is in Geneva. He seems delighted to serve us for a small wage and throws his whole heart into the work. To help in odd jobs at the Magazin there is also Stoiadin, a broad-chested, frank peasant boy, who enjoys himself thoroughly and throws the bales about with vim, though a month or two ago he was pale and wasted, having remained unconscious for a fortnight after his sufferings in the flight.

"Opening a bale of mixed clothing is an unending delight and amusement, though they do not always produce what one wishes. There are the soft, woolly mufflers and mittens and cardigans which are devoid of attraction in the present circumstances and which have to be packed up again by themselves. Sometimes a pair of socks will have a ticket attached with the name of the girl who knitted them. The Serb wears far more than he need in this delicious climate. It is probable that he tries to make himself believe he is at home by making no difference in his amount of clothes."

"The work is full of human interest, and we have the pleasure of seeing the gratitude of these exiles."

Our workers at Bar-le-Duc have been busy visiting the refugees at Fains, where there are about 100 families, some of whom have come lately from Verdun. They are going to give each head of a household the material for a pair of sheets and for either three pillow cases or three towels. These they are to embroider with their initials, and prizes for the best will be given at an exhibition next month. Some of the people are very sad and depressed, and it is thought this will give them an added interest in their work.

From Corsica we hear that new branches of work are the following: Tailoring, spinning, and cleaning wool for carpet-making, weaving, the looms, spindles, etc., having been made by Serbian carpenters, making of native sandals, and knitting and embroidering the native peasant stockings.

At the close of the Yearly Meeting sitting on the Relief agencies, a gathering took place of about sixty members of the Committee and workers past and present.

We should be very grateful for the gift of three or four bicycles for the nurses at our Chalons hospital, some of whom have to lodge at a distance and have a tiring walk backwards and forwards.

The Warehouse has now received 324,307 articles and despatched 298,142.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Archaeology and the Bible, by Geo. A. Barton, Ph. D., L. L. D., Professor of Biblical Literature, and Semitic Languages in Bryn Mawr College. Sometime Director of the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem. Published by American Sunday-School Union pp 450, Plate 114, Price $2.00, Postage 20c.

This book was prepared at the request of the American Sunday School Union, by Dr. Barton, who is well known among students in both Europe and America and is acknowledged to be one of the three greatest American authorities on the Archaeology of Palestine and Babylonia. His deep study, careful thinking and clear methods of expression (on quite an abstruse study) have peculiarly fitted him for this task. The book was prepared for the use of Biblical students and ministers and is a condensed statement of the various archaeological discoveries down to the present time, which affect Bible history.

The book is so divided into sections that the reader can either study the history and civilization of Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria or the Hittites. Or he may read the commentary upon their connection with Biblical texts or history. Or if he is a minister or teacher, there is for such a person a full index of scripture references by which material bearing upon the subject or passage can easily be found. All of these subjects are treated in the simplest language and terms which can be used in such an obtuse study.

CHURCH AT WORK

Amboy, Indiana—Aaron Napier, who has very acceptably served as pastor of Amboy Friends church for the past five years, has received unanimous invitation from the pastoral committee to remain with us another year. The congregation has grown in numbers and spiritual interest under his care and all are glad to keep him, believing his work is not yet done among us.

Clear Spring, Indiana—The pastoral committee of the meeting at Clear Spring near New Castle has extended a call to Edward E. Hartley to remain another year as pastor at this place. He has been doing good work here and is earnest and alive to the needs of the church. Our meeting is small, but we are endeavoring to do what we can for the Master. Mothers' Day was observed in a very appropriate way. The young married people and the young folks are organized, and held their class social recently after church service at the beautiful country home of their teacher, Blanche Williams, where a fine dinner was served by the ladies of the class. In all about forty-four were present. Like many other meetings we have had many changes, but a few of us are left and we are praying that the Lord will still bless us as He has done in the past.

Wichita, Kansas—July 1, Arthur Wollam, pastor of University Friends church, has been given a leave of absence for a few weeks, which with his wife and family will be spent in a visit to Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Utah. Before leaving for this much needed and well earned vacation, the men's class adopted a resolution commending him for his services to the church and pledging its members to do all they can to keep up the work of the church in his absence.

Tangier, Indiana—On May 22 the Yearly Meeting tent was erected on the school house grounds here and on the evening of the 23rd a union meeting of the United Brethren and Friends began with J. Walter Gibson as evangelist and Delbert Shaw as gospel singer, both of Muncie, Indiana, in charge. They closed on Sabbath night, June 18. The plain gospel was preached and all sin was denounced. The attendance increased so that the tent was insufficient to seat the company. Automobiles and buggies, lined up on all sides, were filled and yet many were standing. About ninety persons were renewed and converted. We received thirty-three into membership at our last Monthly Meeting while the United Brethren had twenty-three additions. The believers were greatly strengthened and encouraged to press on. We are retaining Orley Smith as pastor another year. It was mainly through his earnestness and faithful labors that the tent meeting was made possible.

Clarksville, Ohio—The Friends and Methodists joined in a union service on Sabbath morning, July 2, at the old Primitive Friends church at Clarksville. William A. Starbuck brought a most helpful message from Luke 17:17: "Were there not ten cleansed? But where are the nine?" Mr. Walker of the Methodist church, Homer G. Biddlecum of Xenia, and the pastor, Emma Doan, assisted in the service. Friends had come with baskets filled with the good things of the land and a bountiful dinner was enjoyed by all. In the afternoon the Township Bible School Convention was held, at which time Mr. Brant of the Wilmington Baptist church delivered an excellent address to a large and appreciative congregation.

NEWS NOTES.

Paul Brown has been elected Purchasing Agent of Earlham College, in place of Edgar A. Fisher, resigned.

Hannah J. Bailey of Winthrop Center, Maine, who has been seriously ill the past spring, is slowly recovering.

Murray S. Kenworthy, while visiting at Glens Falls, N. Y., last week, was taken quite ill, but is convalescing.

Mead A. Kelsey, who for a year past has been with the National Christian Association as field agent, will discontinue said service about September 1, and probably return to pastoral work.

B. C. Nicholson of Kokomo, Indiana, was presented with a rocking chair recently by the Typographical Union of that city, in token of their appreciation of his services as Secretary of the Union for the past twelve years.

Eli Reece has been granted a minute by New Garden Quarterly Meeting for general evangelistic work, mostly among Friends of America. Any who desire to communicate with him regarding work can reach him at his permanent address, Greensboro, N. C.

John Chawner, who has held the office of Presiding Clerk of California Yearly Meeting for twenty consecutive years, is retiring from the office. It is asked that all communications and requests be sent to the Assistant Clerk, Allen U. Tomlinson, 142 South Friends Avenue, Whittier, California.

President Thomas Newlin, of Guilford College, spent ten days recently at the Blue Ridge Y. M. C. A., near Asheville, N. C., where he gave lectures each day before some of the classes, besides two or three platform addresses. He gave a Fourth of July address at Randleman, N. C.

At the general meeting of New Zealand Friends, held from April 21-25, Dorothea Thompson read a paper on American Friends. A proposal to establish a Friends public school in New Zealand is under consideration and the committee was encouraged to proceed with the scheme.

M. Davis Branon, together with his new wife, is taking a summer course at Whites' Bible Teacher Training School in New York City. He recently spoke at the Sabbath morning service at the 20th Street meeting and also attended the Monthly Meeting. He has accepted the pastorate at Yorktown Heights, N. Y., and will take charge, the last of July.

It had been hoped that President Isaac Sharpless of Haverford College might be able to attend the annual meeting of the Friends Historical Society in England on June 25. In his absence his address on "Friends in Public Life, with Illustrations from American History" was read by the Vice President, Robert H. Marsh, and will appear in the next issue of the Friends Historical Journal.

INDIAN REPORT FOR MAY.

Dear Friends:

With a deep sense of the fleetness of time we are now making our first monthly report of the year.

The Government Schools will close this month at Wyandotte, Otoe and Shawnee, and we believe the children will carry home many of the spiritual lessons and other things they have learned at our Missions that will be a real benefit in their homes during the vacation months.

The agitation for oil in some of our territory is calling forth men who wish to lease land. Some will give a very good price while others seem to think that the fact of a well going down in the vicinity ought to be recompense enough for the first year.

We visited Kickapoo Mission and ate dinner with the Sewing and Domestic Science classes of Indian women on the 4th. It is needless to say that our Missionaries and the Field Matrons are doing a good work in that line at that place. We spent the Sabbath with our Big Jim Missionaries on the 14th.

CLARK and ELMA T. BROWN, Superintendents.

THE WICHITA HOME MISSION WORK.

To Kansas Friends:

You will be pleased to know that the reports of the work, both of that in North Wichita and of that at the Orient Shops, for the third quarter of the year are the best we have had for a good while. The average attendance of the meetings has been larger and the gifts of the attenders towards the support of the work have been larger. But the needs of the work also unavoidably increase. Kansas Friends have assisted and assured the work for years, and these small, struggling congregations and neighborhoods with an average degree of faithfulness, naturally and rightly look to them for help, just as other small congregations and neighborhoods in the City similarly look to other denominations.

Hence I must appeal to you; and this is the more needful because the re-organization of the Yearly Meeting Home Mission work is yet incomplete. See Yearly Meeting Minutes for 1915, Minute 47, and pages 76, 78. Evangelistic Work and Home Missions are combined under the new Evangelistic and Home Mission Board of the Yearly Meeting; whereas in each Quarterly Meeting there is an Evangelistic and Home Mission superintendent, and also a chairman of the Home Mission Committee.

Under these conditions, the Wichita Quarterly Meeting's Home Mission Committee makes two appeals to the Kansas Friends: 1. We request all persons who have not paid their subscriptions to the Wichita Home Missions made at yearly meeting last year or in previous years, whether through neglect or not knowing to whom to pay, to pay them at earliest moment to Bertha Stubbs Sumpter, Treasurer, Argonia, Kansas, who will promptly forward the same to its service. 2. The Wichita work is in great need of immediate, liberal assistance. The meeting house and parsonage in North Wichita both need repairs and painting, and the long overdue $500 mortgage on the latter has become discouraging. Will not some one blessed with a large wheat harvest pay it off and set the Lord's work free? Then, the temporary Orient Chapel seriously needs to be replaced by a good meeting house.

Our Committee appeals to you the more freely, since Wichita, Quarterly Meeting has for years been paying much the larger part of the expenses of these two yearly meeting works—of course this Quarterly Meeting should pay much more than any other

YOUNG FRIENDS AND OTHERS PLEASE NOTE

The time of the special offer of The American Friend to NEW subscribers for six months at the price of fifty cents will be extended until Sept. 1. There are a number of smaller meetings where only one or two, or at most a few, are getting The American Friend regularly. In these a special effort should be made to take advantage of this special offer to get new subscribers. There are few meetings in America where from one or two to twenty new subscriptions could not be taken, if the proper effort is made. A team of young people in every meeting should be selected to make this canvass. Now is the time to make the effort.

one, but not more than seventeen. And this is an appeal also to Wichita Quarterly Meeting for all its appropriation for the current year. Then, all Kansas and Oklahoma Friends are interested in the fact that the Friends' University Gospel Band, which greatly assists in the work, and sometimes carries the Orient work for weeks, is composed of Friend students from Kansas and other yearly meetings.

On behalf of Wichita Quarterly Meeting Home Mission Committee.
W. L. PEARSON, Chairman.

CORRESPONDENCE.

West Milton, O., July 5, 1916.

To The American Friend:

Our pastor, John L. Kittrell, who has been with us now about four years, resigned one month ago and our meeting is experiencing a loss and condition of things not for the best interest of the church as we see it.

He has no definite plans for the future, and will probably take up evangelistic work again, a work of his special liking and for which he is notably qualified. His successes in that line have been even more remarkable than has been his pastoral career, but this statement must not be understood to indicate that his pastoral work was not a complete success. He has broken his connection with us as pastor, but will continue to make this his home. We were in hopes that he could be induced to continue until Yearly Meeting at least, but not being able to do that we are supplying from Sabbath to Sabbath.

Professor Morrison of Earlham, has been with us three times and very kindly promises that he will help us out until we are able to secure a permanent person as pastor. Our meeting is in an excellent condition. John Kittrell and his good wife have done us valuable service. They have the esteem and love of both church and community.

I felt like making this statement, lest some wrong impression concerning both them and our church might be made that would not be fair to us or them.

Most sincerely,
H. R. PEARSON.

AT WOODBROOKE, ENGLAND.

At the meeting of Woodbrooke Council, England, on June 23, careful consideration was given to the kind of work which that institution may be called upon to do after the war is over. Not only was it felt that Woodbrooke should be able to train those who may find new fields of service opening before them, but it should also be able to make that institution a real international center with students from France, Germany, Russia, and if possible having the point of view of non-Christian peoples represented. It was also felt that Woodbrooke may have responsibilities in connection with the scheme of training suggested by the Yearly Meeting Committee on War and Social Order.

Eleven students obtained certificates during the year which entitle them to a Woodbrooke diploma. During the summer term an experiment has been tried by inserting a course for special pacifist training which has been satisfactorily attended. We gather these notes from the London Friend of June 30.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

July 30.

Topic: "How Missions are Blessing our Nation."—Luke 19:41-48.

"The need of the Christless world is the opportunity of the Christ-filled servant. It is a challenge to him to play the man for God, and live the Christian life in all its fulness."—F. S. Webster.

"What grand designs some have formed of future service for God! What small results have followed! Ah, it is better to lay one brick today than to propose to build a palace next year."—Spurgeon.

"The work of evangelizing this world is for every man a matter of personal, inalienable obligation."—R. E. Speer.

Our nation is a Missionary nation. It was started as a Mission, and it has continued all through its history as a land to which people are welcomed who are ready to accept our high ideals. And now we have grown in such fashion that we can send Missionaries abroad. The reflex action of our Missionary endeavors has made us not only prosperous, but full of courage and determination. Missionary work, like charity, is twice blessed. It blesses him that gives and him that receives.

America leads in moral reform. In no land is there such a determination, in spite of impurity and intemperance, to urge purity, to sanctify the home, and to abolish the saloon. We have much to do. So long as we press toward higher things, we are indeed doing missionary work, not only for ourselves, but for the world. Let us remember that our ideals must never be lower and that our efforts must never cease.

Goodness has ever been a stronger guard than valor. It is the surest policy always to have peace with God.—Bishop Hall.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

July 30.

Subject—The Word of the Cross.

Lesson—I Cor. 1:1-2:5.

Golden Text—Far be it from me to glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Gal. 6:14.

The organization of the church at Corinth was the crowning glory of Paul's second missionary journey. Now, some four or five years afterwards, while at Ephesus, he sends a letter of encouragement and counsel to the Corinthians, of which our lesson is the introductory part. As was frequently the case, this letter was in lieu of a visit, which he had attempted, but had not been able to accomplish.

With a boldness that is almost startling, Paul not only contrasts the spirit of the Cross and the spirit of the world, but affirms his faith in the Cross in the face of all worldly criticism and its claims of superior wisdom.

Then, as now, men were slow to understand the real meaning of Christ's message. Paul had come to realize that the simple message of the Cross

Three Hundred Million Bushel Crop in 1915

Farmers pay for their land with one year's crop and prosperity was never so great.

Regarding Western Canada as a grain producer, a prominent business man says: "Canada's position today is sounder than ever. There is more wheat, more oats, more grain for feed, 20% more cattle than last year and more hogs. The war market in Europe needs our surplus. As for the wheat crop, it is marvelous and a monument of strength for business confidence to build upon, exceeding the most optimistic predictions."

Wheat averaged in 1915 over 25 bushels per acre
Oats averaged in 1915 over 45 bushels per acre
Barley averaged in 1915 over 40 bushels per acre

Prices are high, markets convenient, excellent land low in price either improved or otherwise, ranging from $12 to $30 per acre. Free homestead lands are plentiful and not far from railway lines and convenient to good schools and churches. was more potent as a world force than all the philosophies of men, whether Judaistic, Grecian or Roman.

Pinning its faith to materialism, the world turns to guns and forts and battleships for safety, and cannot understand the simple faith of those who take the teachings of Jesus literally, and who are ready with the Psalmist to say of Jehovah, "He is my refuge and my fortress."

Men of the world trust in their ability to hold their own in their business relationships by the rules of sharp competition, ready to take all the advantages which the law allows, and they sneer at the man who is willing even in business to practice the admonitions of the Golden Rule.

The worldly spirit contends that politics and religion will not mix, that a political campaign cannot be run by Sunday School methods, and that the preachers should stick to their calling of preaching the gospel and not meddle in the dirty pool of politics, forgetting that in the final economy of God, the things which the world calls foolish will put to shame those who are wise in their own eyes.

Paul's Corinthian message is a message to the world today. It is the Cross against the spirit of militarism. The one and only hope of the world is the message of the Cross. Civilization is bound to fall or triumph, measured by its rejection or its acceptance of the story of the gospel. In the light of nineteen hundred years of history, the gospel has proved to be the power of God unto salvation, whether applied to individuals, to business, to politics, to labor, to society or to nations.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 11, 1916.

Editor The American Friend:

The visit of the Friends from England soliciting aid for the sufferers of the European war brings to my mind the liberality shown toward us at the close of the Civil War by English

Friends, when millions of destitute slaves were liberated and had to be cared for.

In the bound copy of "The Freedman's Record," which my father, Achilles Pugh, presented, are very interesting accounts of this work. "A public meeting to inaugurate the National Freedmans' Union was held on April 24, 1866, at the Westminster Palace Hotel, London, England," at which time John Bright made an address in which occurs this passage: "This meeting regards the aid afforded hitherto (estimated at more than 80,000 pounds sterling) as a proper and graceful expression of our sympathy, and would earnestly recommend that it be largely augmented." At the time the English pound was worth more than $6.00 to us.

FIELD NOTES

Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, has just completed a visit to the West Branch and Bear Creek neighborhoods, where he visited many of the meetings and families, including the Conservatives. He went immediately to the National Prohibition Convention at St. Paul, Minnesota, as a delegate from North Carolina.

The Earlham Christian Endeavor Society sent its new president, Troy Kenworthy, and its treasurer, J. Wilfred Haworth, to the State Convention at Sioux City. The young men came back full of enthusiasm, and gave a rousing report of the Convention.

BOYS DROWNED.

The American Friend has learned that on last Friday the two sons of Prof. W. Irving Kelsey, of Penn College, were drowned. Particulars are not at hand. The sympathy of Friends generally will go out to the sorrowing family.

COMMENCEMENT AT GUILFORD

The Commencement Exercises of Guilford College were opened with a musical entertainment Saturday night, May 27, under the auspices of the musical department. Sunday morning, May 28, Dr. Byron Clark, pastor First Presbyterian Church of Salisbury, N. C., gave the Baccalaureate Sermon to a large audience that taxed the capacity of the large auditorium of the church. In the evening, Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe, of High Point, spoke in behalf of the Christian Associations. Both of these services were times of uplift and helpfulness. Monday, May 29, was given over to the Senior Class and the Alumni. The attendance of the Alumni and former students was very encouraging.

Tuesday, May 30, was Commencement proper. Although the weather was rainy and threatening, yet the large auditorium in Memorial Hall was crowded with interested relatives and friends of the graduating class, consisting of twenty members. After the Baccalaureate address by President William Preston Few, of Trinity College, President Thomas Newlin conferred the academic degrees on thirteen young men and seven young women. One certificate was granted in music.

AGAINST MILITARISM.

The following letter, which was sent out recently from Friends Peace Headquarters at Washington, is self-explanatory, and should meet with a hearty response:

Dear Friend:

"Preparedness" is still the big question before Congress and the country. The size of the army has been settled. It is to be about 175,000 men in time of peace. Maintenance of the land forces will cost about $160,000,000 a year on the new basis.

The question as to the size of the navy is now in the balance. A bill has passed the House which goes far beyond any naval program ever proposed in this country. It provides for expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, of nearly $300,000,000. This bill will be taken up by the Senate in about a week. Men in position to know say the upper branch of Congress is sure to make a still further increase, particularly adding battleships to the program. It was only by the narrowest margin that the extremists in the House were prevented from putting through a program that would have added at least another one hundred millions in cost. This would seem to indicate that increases made by the Senate will probably be approved by the House when the bill goes back to that body.

The question now is, not whether we shall add a few more ships to the navy and two or three hundred million dollars more in expenditures for naval purposes; our real problem is, will this nation stand by its vaunted ideals of justice and world brotherhood or will it accept the propaganda of militarism, started and carried along by individuals and agencies of which the average citizen is ignorant.

Notwithstanding the totally misleading news and editorial columns of newspapers, the spread-eagle speeches of politicians—for home consumption, and the propaganda of the Navy League and similar organizations, the country already is well prepared in a military sense. Statements to this effect were made by a number of highest army and naval officers before congressional committees at recent hearings. These statements have had much to do with the refusal of many congressmen to be stampeded for "preparedness."

Having before us the above conditions, we desire to ask Friends to make one more effort. This time we are urging that letters, or telegrams, be sent to Senators calling upon them to oppose the huge naval program. This is worth doing, no matter how many previous letters have been sent or however sure Friends may be of the position of their Senators. Will thee kindly bring this letter to the attention of members of thy meeting, or hand it to someone who will do so? Letters should be sent at once by Friends and others. Address Senators at the Capitol.

Very truly,

Friends National Peace Headquarters.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

My Father

By RHODA JANE DICKINSON

God knows. The wonder of the thought,
When all my toil with pain is fraught,
When sorrow comes or grief and loss
Or deepening shadows of the cross.
What gladness in the heart to say, "He knows."

He cares. The Master cares for me.
What glory in the day I see,
When this I know, the God of all,
E'en notes the humble sparrow's fall.
What comfort in the heart to say, "He cares."

He loves. Such love I ne'er have known,
Nor shall, until before the throne
Of God himself his face I see,
And know what means eternity.
What peace comes in the heart to say, "He loves."

He prays. Yes, Christ prays God for me,
When strength seems small I know that he Has still a heart that for me bleeds,
And at God's throne for me he pleads.
What rest comes in my heart to say, "He prays."

He saves. He saves me by his grace,
And in his home is now a place
No one can claim save I alone,
He needs "the hundred" 'round the throne.
What rapture in the heart to say, "He saves."

THE FOURTEENTH OF JOHN

By JENNIE E. HUSSEY

When weary and sad and discouraged,
I turn to the words of our Lord;
A wonderful red-letter chapter
Did John, the beloved, record.
Sweet words of divine consolation,
Remembered when Jesus had gone,
They still breathe a balm for our sorrow,
The words of the fourteenth of John.

They tell of the beautiful mansion,
The house that has many a room,
For those who have laid down the burden,
And slipped through the valley of gloom.
How Jesus Himself will receive them
In glory where now He has gone,
If only our hearts will believe them—
These words in the fourteenth of John.

The way, truth and life is our Saviour;
No other to sinners is known
Save this, through believing in Jesus,
That leads to the heavenly throne.
So, claiming the promise He left us,
And daily with Him pressing on,
We follow the guide-book He gave us,
The beautiful fourteenth of John.

It tells us what prayer will accomplish,
If asked in the name of the Son;
The Father will grant our petition,
Whatever we ask shall be done.
And dearest of all is the promise
That now, though from earth He has gone,
The Comforter dwells with us always,
Christ taught in the fourteenth of John.

It promises peace that abideth,
A peace that the world cannot give;
The soul that doth trust in the Saviour
In freedom from fearing shall live.
He makes His abode with the trusting
Who follow the way He has gone,
Remem'ring the words of assurance,
The beautiful fourteenth of John.

Did Christ ever come into the heart without bringing summer with him, without making the heart conscious of a vitalizing energy, so that the heart felt itself growing, felt itself to be not unfitly imaged by a garden in springtime?—Joseph Parker.

MEN'S CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS

One of the best ways to perpetuate the spirit of the great Men's Conference held at Richmond, Indiana, last October is to put the addresses in printed form in the homes of Friends' families generally. Perhaps no addresses of greater importance have ever been given at any Friends' gathering, and many of them should be read and re-read as a means of continual inspiration to our working membership.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND has on hands a number of unsold copies, which should be out in Friends' libraries all over the country. Just as the delivery of these messages was a source of continual inspiration to those who were permitted to hear them, so the reading of them is bound to bring inspiration and uplift to Friends wherever the books can be sent. Several of these addresses can be used with profit in study classes and in connection with the various propaganda of the church.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ADVANCE IN THE PHILIPPINES.

"A large majority of the student body in the Philippines are without faith in their old system, and are out on a sea of religious unbelief, searching for an anchorage." This statement is made by J. L. McLaughlin, who is making an earnest effort to inject the Bible into the lives of the young people of the Islands, as a part of his work as secretary for the World's Sunday School Association.

Fifteen years ago not one Filipino had even been inside of a Sunday School; today the Islands have a Sunday School enrollment of nearly 60,000, and the movement is only just beginning. The great problem is to make of the Filipinos a united people, and in the attainment of this end the Sunday School is second to none, saving, possibly, the public schools.

"The different tribal representatives gathered at the Sunday School conventions held throughout the Islands," says Mr. McLaughlin, "and our souls were cheered and thrilled as we sensed the disappearing of the old jealousies and felt the awakening of that newer spirit of Christian love and fraternity, the like of which has never been in the Philippine Islands heretofore."

The opportunities for Sunday School work are just opening up in the Islands; they are to be practically unlimited. Every other agency being put forth by our government at such tremendous expense and labor may fail, but the Sunday School problem will win. Should it, through lack of support or any other means, fail of its mission, every effort of the government is bound to lose out. In the raising of the Filipino people to Christian self-consciousness, the Sunday School work is the biggest and most hopeful proposition in the whole Islands.

A Greater Quakerism VIII

The measure of the capability of a church is the measure of its vision. Where there is no vision the people perish. No movement can prosper long that is content to busy itself altogether with its routine operations. The church, above all other bodies, needs not only to have forward-looking men and women, but it is under the highest obligations to follow eagerly and with sympathetic concern their prophetic leadership. The church that stands still is bound to lose out, for religion must be as progressive as humanity or it will fail. Holding one's own is not enough where the destiny of human souls is in the balances.

The greatest weakness of the Society of Friends, that which has done more, perhaps, than any other one thing to keep it a small body, is the persistent tendency to an abnormal passivity, and the consequent refusal to face heroically some of its difficult but vital problems. This is not said in deprecation of the worth of this body of believers. On the contrary, it is conceded by all that Friends have always had a conception of the gospel and of its relation to human life that is fundamental and of universal importance. It is this fact which makes it all the more important that Friends shall not hide their light under a bushel, or, what is more pertinent, shall not consume their light wholly upon themselves, when the great, wide world is groping in spiritual darkness and is failing either to hear or to understand the real message of Jesus Christ to humanity.

The great problems of Christianity will never be met simply by talking about them, nor by the mere multiplication of machinery. We go to Yearly Meeting and are made conscious of a great need in this, that or the other direction. We talk it over, recommend increased faithfulness to the committees and the subordinate meetings, rest for a year and return to the annual feast only to see that the same outstanding needs exist, perhaps in exaggerated form, when the same process is repeated year in and year out with only slight variations. We have reached the time when the call is a commanding one for the Society of Friends, from the Five Years Meeting down to every Monthly Meeting, to face the demands which the sacredness of our mission is imposing upon us in the direction of a larger life and a larger community and world service.

For more than a year, the statement of the Superintendent of Evangelistic work in Nebraska Yearly Meeting, that within the limits of that body there are twenty-two fields in which Friends ought to be establishing a foothold, has stood as a challenge to Quakerism as a whole in America, and Quakerism is bound to be measured in part by the answer which it ultimately makes to that challenge. The statement has been made that in Chicago alone there are probably a thousand Friends and former Friends, most of whom no longer have any vital connection with a working Friends' meeting. The number may be an exaggeration, but the problem, to the extent that one exists, is a denominational one rather than a local one.

In almost every Yearly Meeting there are from one to a dozen or more local meetings that are in a dying condition. While deploring the fact and while making every effort to resuscitate the dying, the great work of the church should be in the direction of establishing new centers of activity, that will not only compensate for the losses elsewhere, but will prove to be the occasions of new inspiration to the whole body and a guarantee of an enlarged gospel service that will bring greater blessing to mankind. There is probably not a Yearly Meeting upon the American continent within whose limits one or more new centers of Christian work should not be opened every year, not for the purpose of perpetuating Quakerism for its own sake, but for the sake of the mission to which Quakerism has been called. We are not unmindful of the fact that the call of the age is for Christian co-operation on the part of the churches everywhere, and entrance upon new fields should never be undertaken until the whole situation has been canvassed and the claims of other denominations have been fully considered. Friends differ so widely from others, however, both in faith and practice, that in most communities there will probably be little dissent over the need of a Friends' meeting, when perhaps the needs of all other bodies would already have been fully satisfied by existing church organizations.

Our concern herein, however, is not about a particular phase of the life and work of Friends so much as that Friends as a whole shall live up to the very best vision which they have, that they shall face all our problems in the consciousness that these are real problems which are yet unsolved, and that they must undertake their solution with a purpose to serve in the highest and best sense of the term. The mission of Friends lies pre-eminently in the direction of interpreting literally the life and teachings of Jesus as practical rules of conduct for the whole of human life, and no amount of inertia or traditionalism should turn us aside from the fulfillment of that great mission.

A World Outlook

By ERROL D. PECKHAM

This paper is a condensed statement of my total impression of the National Laymen's Missionary Congress after time for reflection upon those four prayerful days under messages from leaders of world thought. I have likened my experience to that of a man upon a mountain top, where he may see ever widening visions of the world.

1. Vision of a World Broken Open for Christian Missionaries.

(a) China.

Forty to eighty per cent of the population of South America today are illiterate and illegitimate, while North America is one of the most literate and most moral nations. Why this difference? The reason lies largely in the fact that South America has inherited pre-reformation Catholicism: the Catholicism of the Inquisition, while North America was founded by champions of the Bible who would die for the convictions they had gained from a personal study of the Bible. These men were the fruit of the Protestant revolt against the pre-reformation Catholicism in Luther's day. The Reformation, in turn, was the child of the Renaissance which followed the exodus of Christian scholars from Constantinople when that city was captured by the Turks in 1453. These scholars were scattered over northwestern Europe and became the founders of colleges and universities. Thus North America's status is inherited from a period of college and university building in Europe.

Today China is building colleges ten times faster than Europe did five hundred years ago. When Mott and Eddy made their evangelistic tour through the colleges and universities of India and China two years ago they had an average student audience of three thousand a night. Many Buddhist temples are in decay or are being transformed into modern schools. Fifty such changes from temples to schools have occurred in a single city. China is broken open to Christian missionaries, for she is anxious to study in modern schools and the Christian missionaries are at the root of modern schools in China.

(b) India.

There are fifty million outcasts in India. The ostracism of an outcast in India might be likened to that of an American girl in a rural village who has lost her virtue. In spite of this, there is in India a Christian mission school in which the grandson of an outcast is a professor where fifty high caste pupils attend his classes. Multiplied instances of these striking changes have so impressed Indian life that the high castes are becoming much interested in Christianity and mass movements among the lower castes are appealing for Christian teachers. Last year one report tells of ten missionaries who received five thousand new members in eight weeks. Multitudes cannot be received for want of teachers to instruct them. India is broken wide open for Christian missionaries.

(c) Africa.

Africa suggests the Moslem world. This world stretches across northern Africa and from Constantinople in southern Europe, east to the heart of India. The signal failure of the Holy War in the present conflict is significant. True, it made possible the terrific Armenian tragedy; but not even all Turkey responded to the call. The only response from Egypt and India was a protest. The masses now know Islam is no longer united, for Mohammedans are killing Mohammedans. Quite recently a brilliant young Mohammedan professor who knew his Koran by heart made a public profession of Christianity. He was hailed to trial before a court that had always condemned to death Christian converts who would not recant. He was asked to tell the court why he had turned Christian. For an hour he told why Islam had neither satisfied his head or heart and why Christianity had. Contrary to all precedent, this high court exonerated him. The Mohammedan world is open to Christian missionaries today as never before.

(d) South America.

South America presents the Latin-American problem. For centuries she has made it a crime to teach any religion except pre-reformation Catholicism. In 1886 a ton of Bibles were condemned to be burned publicly in Ecuador. On the other hand there are Roman Catholic priests who welcome Protestant missionaries to South America today. Within a year the last country in South America has made religious liberty legal. Thus she is opening to Protestant missionaries.

(e) Europe.

The millions of Bibles distributed to the men in the trenches in Europe and the millions of sorrow-stricken homes bear witness that Europe is broken open for the spiritual resources of the Bible by the breaking of hearts.

2. Vision of the World's Need for Christian Missionaries.

(a) China.

The leading religion of China is Buddhism. Buddhism teaches a wrong attitude to life, to the physical body and to womanhood. It teaches that it is wrong to desire anything either good or bad in this life. It teaches that the physical body is the source of evil and that women have no souls. Can such teaching save men? With the coming of modern science in their government schools where no Christian teachers are, students have learned how crude and often foolish their practical customs have been and very naturally have lost faith in their religious customs also. So China is becoming Godless. She needs Christian missionaries.

(b) India.

The leading religion in India is Hinduism. Hinduism has riveted the caste system upon India and that system is her curse. Hinduism dedicates the virtue of numberless girls to lives of shame in the sacred name of religion. The growth of modern science in India is leaving her Godless as in China. She needs Christian missionaries.

(c) Africa.

The leading religion in Africa is Mohammedanism. According to Islam, God is a despot. Polygamy is taught in the Koran. The Holy War against the Armenians arose from a doctrine of Islam. Christianity and Islam are seeking to win Africa. When the simple African has been won to Islam the work of the Christian missionary is rendered ten fold more difficult. Africa's need for Christian missionaries is intense.

(d) South America.

The leading religion in South America is pre-reformation Catholicism. Forty to eighty per cent of her population are illiterate and illegitimate. Add to this the fact that the professors in her great universities, almost without exception are infidels whose thought life is fed from the infidel thinkers of France of one hundred years ago and you know South America needs Protestant Christian missionaries.

(e) Europe.

Europe's need is that of men facing death daily. It is that of homes deprived of fathers, brothers, bread-winners. It is that of over four million six hundred thousand prisoners of war in military camps.

3. Vision of Opportunity for American Christian Missionaries.

(a) China.

Sixteen years ago China hated all aliens as foreign devils. But through the persistent work of the missionaries, the return of the Boxer indemnity and other friendly acts of the United States, China has become very friendly to America. She has taken her ideal of government largely from us. A year ago leading men in China thought the republic was gone forever. Why, then, the revolt to a republic again? It was the re-action of the masses who have begun to love the ideals of liberty; ideals sown in China by the missionary, in which America has had a large share.

(b) India.

Ninety per cent of the missionaries in India are from America. The hold America has on India is illustrated by an experience of Dr. Jones, of the Kennedy school of missions, when he was leaving India. A neighbor wanted to buy an article of furniture from Dr. Jones. Since there was no furniture to spare, he asked for the hammer lying near, but on learning it was made in Austria he threw it down, saying he wanted an American hammer.

(c) Africa.

Samuel Zwemer, the great American missionary and scholar in the Christian college at Cairo, Egypt, than whom there is no greater authority on conditions in the Mohammedan world, is typical of the place American missionaries hold in that field.

(d) South America.

Of the forty-eight societies doing missionary work in Latin-America who were represented at the Panama Missionary Congress last February, all but two were American. Already the continuation committee of that congress has begun statesmanlike plans for survey and occupation, education and publication throughout these lands. This fact, together with the new commercial ties between North America and South America, make the opportunity for American missionaries in South America unique.

(e) Europe.

There are over four million six hundred thousand soldiers in military prisons in Europe. The American Y. M. C. A. has been able to gain entrance for work among these men in every warring country. In every camp of ten thousand men or more they find thousands of college graduates. The Y. M. C. A. has organized these military camps into schools with the college men teaching the others. Thus the men are being saved from the mental, moral and physical wreckage that has always been characteristic of military prisons as well as receiving valuable training. When we learn that Russia alone has over one and one-half millions of men receiving these ministries, we cannot calculate the good which will result when these men return to their homes all over Russia. They will not forget the kindness shown them by the American Christian workers.

4. Vision of America.

(a) Her Danger.

It was reported in high financial circles two months ago that America had made fifty billion dollars from this war. Will America gain the whole world and lose her own soul? It has been estimated that wealth in America is distributed as follows:

2 per cent of the people own 60 per cent of the wealth.
30 per cent of the people own 35 per cent of the wealth.
68 per cent of the people own 5 per cent of the wealth.

In Europe it is from that portion of the population which corresponds to our 68 per cent that own 5 per cent of the wealth, that three-fourths of the men who face death in the trenches are recruited. The question America must face is whether it is Christian to ask men to consent to this distribution of property when the bulk of those who are asked to face death to defend all the property have so meagre a share:

(b) Her Possibilities.

If, in addition to her present missionary force, America should send one missionary to every four hundred of her population there would then be one missionary to every four thousand unevangelized persons at present in the world. With that force it would be possible to evangelize the world in twenty to twenty-five years. Is this too great a sacrifice to propagate a Gospel for doing away with war, when England has already sent twelve men to every one hundred of her population to propagate war; and Holland is supporting eighteen refugees to every one hundred of her population?

Two hundred and fifty million dollars would be needed annually to support this added force of missionaries. This is one-half of one per cent of the fifty billion which America has already made out of the war. The war is costing two hundred and fifty millions every two and one-half days at the present time. When we learn that there are two thousand five hundred millionaires in the United States, does it not seem that America could quite easily finance a force sufficiently large for the early evangelization of the world?

There is hope in the fact that during the ten years history of the Laymen's Missionary Movement fourteen of the larger denominations have increased their membership 25 per cent, their contributions to home missions 40 per cent, and their contributions to foreign missions 70 per cent.

If America fails to take the present world challenge as her opportunity to evangelize the world and thereby lay the basis for the Christianization of international relationships there is reason to believe that China and India, with their seven hundred million population, will rise to power under the modern scientific movement, as Japan has so recently and quickly done and will create a yellow peril that will threaten the national life of America with her one hundred millions. America sympathizes with the allies in the present war because Germany broke her treaty with Belgium, yet America is today living in the relations of broken treaties with China and Japan. The Orient is a giant. Will we not do well to win the continued friendship of this giant during the day of his weakness, through Christian ministrations, that he may be our friend when the day of his power shall come? It is coming rapidly.

JESUS' TEST OF DISCIPLESHIP

(Editorial in The Christian Work).

It is with a profound sense of relief that one sometimes turns from the tests of Christian faith which have been set up by the churches, to the tests which Jesus himself imposed upon those who would enter the kingdom. We recently had occasion to examine the creed of a famous Church, to which creed, until recently, everyone joining that Church was supposed to subscribe. It is really a treatise on systematic theology—an able one, too, but quite as far from the words of Jesus as one could conveniently go. Neither was it greatly concerned with the facts of Christ. It was concerned with interpretation of those facts. But when one turns from the creeds and confessions to the gospels he finds himself in quite another atmosphere. Here is all simplicity, although all is greatness. Again and again he explicitly affirms the test of discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples—that ye have love one toward another." In the world, he is greatest who rules and lords it over others and gets the most for himself. But in Christ's kingdom, he is the greatest who serves, he is chief who lives in lowly ministry. The meek, lowly, merciful, pure man is blessed and enters his kingdom. "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect" is Jesus' ideal for the soul. The Father in heaven who loves, comforts, forgives and helps men realize this perfection is his gospel, his good news. It is all so simple that a child can grasp it, although it is as great as suns and seas and stars. And when he would sum it all up and give illustration, he turns to a little child. There is no more significant fact in all history. The greatest religion the world has known, the religion many of us think absolute and final, is focussed in a little child on a man's knee. Jesus sets the child on his knee, and as he strokes its hair says, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." To become a Christian is to become as a little child!

What did Jesus mean? Of course, he meant that one had to rid himself of all sham, hypocrisy, pride, self-conceit, self-righteousness, self-consciousness, and become before God as a little child. A child is guileless, innocent, single-minded, transparent as glass. Whatever else children may be, they are not hypocrites; they do not lead double lives; they do not pose. A child is not self-conscious, is never puffed up, conceited, proud, overestimating himself, thinking himself great. This is just what men are doing all the time. Jesus says the first step into his kingdom is to get rid of all this self-esteem, this vanity, this pride, this complexity of motive, this duplicity, and become in God's eyes again as a little, guileless, teachable child.

Jesus must also have been thinking of the faith element in childhood, for faith was the fundamental article of his philosophy of life. And faith is the foundation of the child's life. He unconsciously rests his life on faith in his parents, in men and women everywhere, in the general goodness of the world. This faith is so absolute that it is unconscious, as most great truths are. Jesus says that this simple, childlike faith in the heavenly Father—absolute trust in his providence, so that one can go out and do his work in the world as the little child does his work and play, believing that the Father will feed one as the child knows his parents will feed him—this is the first great article of faith in the Christian's creed. To the child the world is good and moves out into goodness. It is not an easy faith to keep, especially in these days. But Jesus kept it and those who can keep it are the happy folk. Beware the day when, through disillusionment, one becomes blase, sceptical of life's goodness, and old.

One of the most outstanding traits of the child is his zest for living, the eagerness with which he greets the day. New every morning is the world, and brighter and fresher than it was yesterday. Life is an alluring thing. Each day holds out more promise than any day that has ever been. There is no living in the past, no thought that life has yielded its best. The child's golden age is never behind it; it is always in tomorrow. Jesus knew that this general attitude toward life was absolutely necessary to any rich, full, advancing life. That it was not only the only joy that lasted, but was the one thing that kept the world young and sweet. Such men are the salt of the earth, the light of the world. What a joy it was to know Munger, Smiley, Collyer, Cuyler, Hale—men who kept this childlike zest of living to the end; men who at seventy and eighty were as interested in the moving world and taking as much part in it as those of thirty and forty!

There are many other traits of childhood which one might mention which were undoubtedly in Christ's mind at this time. The child is eager to learn, full of curiosity, which, kept through later life, becomes eagerness for knowledge. The child is always creating something. Did one ever know a child who was not building castles with his blocks, whole towns and walled cities when on the beach, tunnels and railroads out of scraps of wood and iron? This creative instinct persists in some men, and they are the world's benefactors. Most of us lose it and live half-lives. But one thing more Jesus must surely have been thinking about when he put the little child upon his knee and said, "Here is the real Christian." The child believes in brotherhood—real brotherhood. He does not talk it, as we do, but he lives it as we do not. There is no trace of race prejudice in the child. He plays with Italian and Japanese children, with rich and poor, dirty and clean, and they are all one to him. Race prejudice, class distinctions, national animosities are all educated into the child. It is the parents who make of the children haters of their brothers. If all the parents could be killed off and the children left to grow up uninstructed by them, there would probably not be a vestige of ill feeling left between Germans and French, Japanese and Americans. A great Frenchman said to us on the eve of the European war: "This hatred between Germans and French is all a cultivated, artificial, imparted thing. I have watched German and French children playing together in Alsace on the border line, and they were all unconscious of any hatreds whatever. But as soon as they are old enough to understand anything, the governments and the parents of both nations begin systematic endeavor to instil hatred of their neighbors in their breasts." Now neither race nor nationality had any interest for Jesus. He knew they were artificial things and provocative of strife. He wanted his disciples to rise above all these things into the kingdom, into the brotherhood of all aliens, and it is just there that the child lives.

THE CHURCH AND THE CHURCH SCHOOL

By IRVING KING

The editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND has asked me for a brief article. As a teacher, I am perhaps most interested in the educational activities of the church than in some of the other phases of its work. I am therefore tempted to add to an ancient series of articles on some aspects of religious education in the home and the Sunday School which I contributed to THE AMERICAN FRIEND twelve or thirteen years ago. The intervening years have given opportunity for further observation and reflection on the problems involved and there presented.

It is impossible to overestimate the importance of educational activities to the welfare of the church. And yet one may have grave doubts as to whether the church, either individually or collectively, adequately appreciates this aspect of its work. Let me illustrate this by some recent observations. The superintendent of a good-sized Sunday School told me recently that in the two years of his incumbency the officials of the church had never asked him for any sort of report upon the work of the Sunday School, nor had these officers of the church, as far as he was aware, in their business meetings taken any cognizance of this school or shown the slightest concern in its work. Whether this instance is extreme I shall not pretend to say, but I fear there are other congregations which show the same sort of indifference to the church school when they consider matters of business and the general polity of the church.

The church referred to above not only does not contribute anything from its treasury for the promotion of religious education among the children and youth of the community, but this spring the suggestion has been made that the Sunday School both pay its own expenses, make its usual contributions to missions, and also contribute from one hundred to two hundred dollars toward the work of the church of which it is an appendage! To the minds of many the relationship here suggested is radically wrong. Such a Sunday School as this is not one of the recognized avenues of religious activity of the church. It is rather an external organization that is to be so managed as to be a financial asset to the church. If, however, the continued efficiency of the church, not to mention its very continuation as a living organization, is dependent upon the effective religious training of its children, this church should be investing its funds in the Sunday School rather than be accepting support from it. The church should be paying a large part of the running expenses of the school and should constantly be inquiring into how it may develop new phases of religious training through the school or how it may increase the efficiency of its present efforts.

Such an arrangement will require an adjustment of the funds of the Sunday School. These may be used either for the support of some particular mission work approved by the church, or, perhaps, better still, be turned as a whole into the church treasury. This latter method is feasible only if the church appreciates its full duty to the school and is doing all in its power to enhance its efficiency, irrespective of what the school itself is able to contribute.

Among other things which a large and able church might well do for its school would be to replace the volunteer, untrained and somewhat fluctuating teaching body with trained and paid teachers.

Is anyone shocked at the idea of paid Sunday School teachers? Of such I would inquire: Is the service and the end not sufficiently important to be worth paying for? It is common in most communities to enlist the services of some of the public school teachers. Of all people, the teachers of the public schools need a complete rest from the children on the Sabbath. But if their help is absolutely essential, why should they not be encouraged to give their best efforts to it by a slight compensation? We may talk all we want to about the beauty of free-will service, but the stern fact confronts the church that, until it puts the teaching of its children upon the same sensible and decent basis that it puts its pastoral service for the adults, that teaching is not apt to be managed very effectively.

No such plans as the above are considered in the church of which I have been writing. For it the Sunday School is a side issue, a place for voluntary and unrecognized religious service. Some of this service is entirely unskilled and in some cases a few earnest men and women, after much, unguided experimenting, have developed into really skilled and efficient teachers.

It is not strange that any church whose Sunday School is somewhat of a side issue should be correspondingly indifferent or uncomprehending of some of the school's most difficult problems. The most difficult of these problems, that of an adequate supply of trained teachers, has just been referred to. May a word further be added? At present, many of the most important classes in many schools, classes of children and of youths at crucial epochs of development, are put into the hands of good-natured and well-meaning young men and women, some of them barely out of childhood themselves, persons quite untrained and quite unacquainted with the problems of religious education. Often they know very little of the Bible and put forth little effort to know more about it. One of the most unhappy features of classes under such teachers is lack of proper control or discipline. Such teachers often do not know how to manage children who get unruly and I am inclined to think that an unruly class in a Sunday School is learning much that is bad and little that is good.

Theoretically the teachers of children's classes should be fathers and mothers who are fitted for that service by a genuine religious experience and a suitable training for that specific work. Practically such parents are hard to find, or if found are unwilling to undertake such a responsibility because they know what it means. Moreover, there is probably some truth in the oft-repeated assertion that American parents cannot or do not exercise adequate control over their children. At least it has been found in the Sunday School to which I have referred that an intelligent, middle-aged mother who tried a very troublesome class of boys of about twelve years of age, of whom her own son was one of the worst, failed miserably after some months of effort to do anything with them. But in spite of these cases of lamentable failure of all too many parents to control their children, I believe it is to the consecrated, intelligent fathers and mothers that church should look for some of its best teachers. This is a form of religious service that the church which is actively interested in its Sunday School will present to the parents. The question of discipline is a most important one, requiring separate discussion, and into it I shall not here attempt to enter.

"THE FAMILY OF LOVE"

(An open letter)

By M. CATHARINE ALBRIGHT

"When I am with our Beloved, in the enjoyment of Him, I enjoy thee and the rest of the family of love, of which He is the head, yet hath become the servant of all."—George Fox to William Caton, from Launceston jail.

It has been my privilege for some weeks past to move about among Friends in the Eastern States and also to make a flying visit to the Middle West and get into touch with at least a few of the Friends there. Now that I have returned to the homeland it seems only fitting that I should send back a few lines of loving gratitude for all the wealth of kindness received and for the ready response to the tale I had to tell. And with this message of thanks I would couple a strong appeal that the members of "the family of love" in America would continue to bear upon their hearts their fellow-members in this warring country.

To return to England at this time is like coming back to a beloved household on which has fallen some great shadow or which has sustained some great loss. Certainly the shadow and the loss were both there already months ago, but one feels them more after an absence in happier scenes. Also the fact remains that the shadow has "deepened down" in the weeks that have elapsed, especially over the members of our own Society and others who share their point of view and line of action. Changes and gaps there are many. This one and that one has gone to France, to Holland, etc.; this one and the other is preparing to go; this one is missing also, though he may be near at hand, for prison walls conceal him; another is still with us but any day he may disappear and join his comrades in bonds. The ordinary First-day meeting is a "meeting for sufferings." Friends come there indeed gladly; there is even a feeling of eagerness and anticipation, but there is also a new feeling of solemnity, of sorrow, of tenderness, of depth, a new anxiety to feel out for and to find "the everlasting arms," "the underlying unity."

There is no question but that the gathered company is a loyal part of "the family of love." Their first privilege and duty is "to remember those that are in bonds as bound with them," to remember also in prayer those that are in danger or pain and those that are bearing heavy burdens of rule and responsibility. We are reminded of our own members whose places are empty and who need our special love. Then we are led on into wider spaces and live over again something of the experience of the recent Yearly Meeting which sought and also, to some extent at any rate, found an "underlying unity." In great humility and need hearts were opened out to see a vision of the great purposes of God and of the possibility of a unity in Him, above and below all differences of thought and action. To seek His will and the power to fulfill it, this is the great Quest which calls us to go forward, humbly, unitedly, prayerfully. It comes to us at this time with renewed meaning when it is borne on the lips of a widowed mother, who has one of her sons in prison for conscience sake and the other feeling it his duty to enlist. We are drawn out of ourselves into fellowship at such times and yet there is a new solemnity in the question, "What wouldst Thou have me to do?"

As we separate, there is a new sense of privilege in all the common intercourse of heart with heart that still remains to us and a new joy in the young life and in the little children who have hardly yet realized the unknown future which it will be theirs to shape. The time of social intercourse is precious, for there is much to be told and learned of the happenings to Friends and others in the Tribunals, the court-martials and the prisons and much has to be planned for in the coming week. Some of the Friends are already appointed "Quaker chaplains," authorized by the military authorities to act as spiritual advisors to such of the "conscientious objectors" as desire their ministrations: some are only visiting occasionally with permission to hold meetings for worship on First day in this or that prison, some are busy watching the proceedings of the law courts and following up the legal issues. Day by day the burden becomes more weighty, but day by day also the vision becomes clearer of the spiritual issues for which it is worth while to work and suffer, to live and to die, and day by day the bonds become closer among those who are striving for these spiritual ideals.

We knew something before the war of what George Fox meant when he spoke of "the family of love," but we know more now and we shall know more and more as the months go by. Already the bonds of this family have widened over here and our fellowship embraces many more than those who actually call themselves by our name. But may we not also say that the thousands who call themselves by this same name on your side of the Atlantic are also one with us in family love at this time and are prepared to hold out to us the hand of sympathy and to bear us on their hearts in the one all-embracing love?

THE NEW YORK CONSCRIPTION LAWS.

Ellison R. Rurdy has the following interesting article in the Wilmington (Ohio) Journal-Republican of June 16:

Those who have been carried away by the cry for "preparedness" boomed by munitions men and professional militarists, by moving picture shows, preparedness parades and other appeals to the emotions, often say, "We are for preparedness and plenty of it, but we are against militarism." Those who tell us that there is no danger whatever of militarism in this country, are furnished with a sample copy, advanced proof, in the recent bills passed in New York State.

The following editorial in the Independent comments on these bills.

Conscription.

"Has the State of New York gone stark crazy? Her Legislature has passed and Governor Charles S. Whitman has signed five bills that require, among other things, all men between eighteen and forty-five to be enrolled as members of the Militia Reserve, beginning August 1, and all schoolboys between sixteen and nineteen to drill not more than three hours each week and go to summer military camps under the direction of the officers of the National Guard, and all school children over eight—girls as well as boys—to "receive as part of the prescribed course of instruction such physical training as the regents, after conference with the military training commission, may determine during periods which shall average at least twenty minutes in each school day."

These laws mean conscription in time of peace. They should be forthwith repealed. The American people believe in preparedness—sane preparedness—but this goes to the very brink of the precipice of militarism."

The Poughkeepsie Eagle-News in reporting New York Yearly Meeting of Friends recently held in Poughkeepsie says:

Startling Headlines.

Hand bills distributed to the members of the meeting in the evening bore startling headlines which informed "real patriots" that the matter was "urgent," that Quakerism had been "outlawed" and that "Prussian militarism has conquered American Democracy in New York State." The statements in the hand bill continued:

"May 15, the male citizens of the Empire State created a Military Dictator and surrendered themselves and their sons unconditionally to him.

"The Strivers Act requires the Governor to order an enrollment as soon as practicable after August 1, 1916, of all males between eighteen and forty-five as members of the Militia Reserve. Empowers the Governor to subject all males so enrolled 'to such training, exercise, drill, instruction, discipline, and government, as the Governor may prescribe. Empowers the Governor to draft at any time, either in peace or war, any men so enrolled, into the National Guard or Naval Reserve, or for active duty 'in case of insurrection, invasion, tumult, riot, or breach of the peace or imminent danger thereof.' Provides that men so drafted who do not appear within twenty-four hours 'shall be taken to be deserters and dealt with as prescribed in the articles of war of the United States.'"

In black-faced type the assertion was made:

"This means conscription in time of peace. In case of a strike, for instance, the Governor can draft the strikers and subject them to military law if they refuse to break their own strike."

There was next a quotation from a statement by Major General O'Ryan, made last week, and the question was asked, "Who is Major General O'Ryan to think that he can dictate the conscription of free citizens?"

Of the Welsh act, giving a military commission power to prescribe special physical training, the statement was made: "Your child's physical training is entrusted—not to an authority on education, not to an authority on health—but to an authority on killing." Other statements of similiar tenor were contained in the bill. The final one was: "Governor Whitman beat King George by ten days in signing a compulsion bill. England hesitated to conscript her men, even in time of war. Citizens of a free Republic, will you stand for conscription in time of peace?"

This is no dream. This is not a pacifist nightmare. This is the first crop from the seed-sowing of the alarmist. ELLISON R. PURDY.

WITH THE CHILDREN

THE BEST PLACE

It's fine to get back home at night,
When we've been gone all day.
The minute dad turns on the light,
We boys begin to play.
And Rover's fairly wild with joy—
He nearly eats me up!
He knows it really takes a boy
To 'preciate a pup.

I look at all my playthings, too;
My aeroplane and gun
And train of cars—they all seem new
And splendid every one.
My mother's busy as you please,
When we've been gone somewhere;
But father reads and takes his ease,
Stretched out in his great chair.

I tell you home's the very best
Of any place I know to rest;
And though it's fun to go away
Sometimes, still, home's the place to stay!

WHY THE TEA-KETTLE BOILED OVER

"Just hear the tea-kettle," said a little iron frying-pan to its friend, the stove. "Did you ever hear such a noise?"

"No," answered the stove, angrily, "I never did. What is the matter with you, you noisy tea-kettle?"

"Why," bubbled the tea-kettle, "I am trying to let the cook know that I ought to be taken off. I am boiling as hard as I can, and if she doesn't come quickly and take me off I am afraid I shall boil all over you, and then the cook will have to black you again."

"I don't know why you need to boil over on me," answered the stove. "You do that almost every day, and I don't like it, I'd have you know."

"Well," replied the tea-kettle, "I don't want to boil over, but I can't help it. The cook fills me too full. She doesn't seem to know that hot water needs more room than cold water. So, as she fills me full of cold water, of course when the water begins to boil it comes out, and I can't help it. You should blame the cook, not me."

"Well, rattle away, then, as loudly as you please," said the stove. "Perhaps the cook will hear you if you make noise enough."

And sure enough she did hear, and came running in to take off the tea-kettle, saying: "There! I wish I knew what makes that tea-kettle always boil over." But the tea-kettle didn't say a single word more.—Selected.

Little Elizabeth's mother asked her on her return from the primary department of the Sunday School, what the teacher had told them. She replied: "Oh, there was a poor woman that didn't have any husband or any money, and was awful poor, and she went to church, and when they passed the contribution box she put in two mice; and that was the most that anybody put in."—Congregationalist.

AT GASPORT, NEW YORK.

A very interesting scene was witnessed at the Friends church here on the morning of June 25th, when at the close of the service, the pastor, George Hull, read the names of forty people, every one of whom came to the altar, were asked some very searching questions, all of which were answered promptly, when the pastor gave them the right hand of fellowship and welcomed them to membership in the church. The pastor's wife, Julie E. Hull, then handed to each an unopened rose bud and made some very fitting remarks as to how, under the right conditions, the sunshine would open and develop the bud into a full blown and beautiful rose. She then compared these new beginners to the undeveloped bud, and how by living under the right conditions, the Sun of Righteousness, allowed to shine in their hearts, would bring each of them to a fully developed and beautiful Christian life. A verse of "Blest be the tie that binds" was sung, and the congregation greeted the new members.

About one half of these additions to our membership were the result of the tabernacle campaign conducted by the Friends and the Congregational churches, with Evangelist George E. Burgess in charge. The rest were brought to a decision at the regular services of our church. There are several more to follow. Seven new members were received at the morning service on May 14th before the Tabernacle work began.

The Gasport meeting is the youngest in the Quarterly Meeting, but has the largest membership. The secret is we have no musty prejudices, or ancient customs which we must follow, but we aim to follow the foundation principle of Friends in being led by the Holy Spirit, and not by the custom of past generations.

We have good music and singing, never have a choir, though few churches of our size have as many good singers, but they are sitting with the audience and encourage others to sing, and under the leadership of John C. Hull (one of the pastor's sons), every selection has a very strong influence upon the sermon. Yes, we also have a good orchestra, not at all services, but usually have more instruments at the evening services.

During the tabernacle campaign of four weeks, the orchestra attracted considerable attention for its fine playing. The musical director, who has been in revival work for twelve years, said it was the finest orchestra he had ever had. It consisted of twelve to fourteen members, and three-fourths of them were members of the Friends church.

Our average attendance at the Mid-Week Prayer Meeting is about forty, with as many men as women, and nearly all take part in each meeting.

JOHN WESLEY STRIBLING.

John Wesley Stribling was born in Clay County, Mo., February 4, 1847, and died at Earlham, Iowa, June 24, 1916. The family moved to Dallas County, Iowa, in 1858, settling near Bear Creek. About 1876 he was converted under the preaching of Benjamin Hiatt and united with the Friends church. Soon afterward he began his public work in the ministry and was recorded by the church at Bear Creek in 1881.

He was the first pastor engaged by the Earlham meeting and has held pastorates at Bear Creek, Linden, Stuart, Burr Oak, Canby, Waukee, Wiscotta and West Branch in Iowa, and at Bethel meeting, Long Beach, California. He also spent several years in evangelistic work in Kansas, Arkansas and Texas. For several years he served as Evangelistic Superintendent of Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting, in which capacity he did much to bring the several congregations into their present condition of usefulness. His ability as a worker and his wisdom as a counselor were recognized and sought for on many important committees both in the Quarterly and Yearly Meeting.

On October 2, 1868, he was married to Emeline Horton. To this union were born seven children, six of whom survive him.

When asked if he had a parting message for the church and his old members he said: "I have nothing new to say. For thirty-seven years I have been trying to tell them how to live and prepare for the future, now I am entering that future. I have made my mistakes, but there is nothing in my way now. Jesus has made all things right."

Funeral services were held at the Friends church in Earlham in the presence of an immense congregation. Not only was the church filled, but fully two hundred others stood without the doors, a fitting demonstration of the usefulness and worth of the life that had passed. Richard Haworth, the pastor, conducted the services, and the sermon was preached by W. Jasper Hadley, pastor of the Friends church at Iowa Falls, while brief remarks were made by V. B. Demaree.

WAR VICTIMS' RELIEF

Since we last mentioned the names of new workers, the following have gone out. Mabel Neld, Agnes Simpson, and Matilda Metford to Samoens; Muriel O'Brien is helping at the Paris Office; Helen Levin has gone to Holland.

We hear from France that S. Margery Fry and Bernard J. Macalpine are hoping to make inquiries in the near future into the needs of the refugees in some of the large towns of northern France with a view to finding out where our help would be most useful.

Telegrams have been received from Russia saying that our workers have taken a small hospital at Busuluk, on a tributary of the Volga, and asking for the despatch of a small medical unit, with which request the Committee is hoping to comply.

From the monthly report from Holland we hear that at Nunspeet the women are trying their hands at making small embroidered frocks and overalls of various designs in addition to their usual work. It is felt that the evening work (social evenings, English classes and gymnastic lessons) should not be confined to our own workers, but should be open to others in the camp who have nowhere to go in the evenings. General Dryber, commandant of the camp, has given various facilities for this work, such as the use of a larger hall and classrooms, &c. The number of men employed has increased, being now 86 in all.

At Uden many of the refugees now go out to work in the fields, flax weeding being the particular employment at the moment. Only six girls from our workroom have gone. There are at present 190 women on the wage list, of these 30 are aged 16 or under, about 40 are grown up unmarried girls, and the remainder are older women.

A further contingent of 150 Serbian boys has arrived in England, accompanied by Hannah Bellows, Kathleen Courtney, Richard R. Ball, and Mr. Cooke Taylor of the Serbian Relief Fund. The Theological Colleges of Cheshunt and Westminster at Cambridge have been most kindly lent for their accommodation.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

THE STUDY CLASS.

5.—Meetings.

Meetings should be held at the time of the regular Christian Endeavor Prayer Meeting. It should meet as often as once a month. The oftener the class meets the easier it will be to sustain interest. The Monthly Christian Endeavor Missionary meeting could be turned into a study class. Then a class on Peace could meet once a month. A class on Quaker History, Community Betterment, or some other theme could meet the third Sunday and the regular Christian Endeavor Consecration meeting occupy the remaining Sunday. Another arrangement would be to hold the Peace Study Class for two or three Sundays in succession each month for three months, then change to Missions for a similar period of study following which Friends History, Community Service, or some other subject could be taken up.

Where the conventional Christian Endeavor prayer meeting is sufficing to hold the interest and attendance of young people, the Study Class should be employed at the monthly Missionary Meeting only.

YOUNG FRIENDS WORK IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

After a long and beautiful ride from Salem Oregon through the Shasta Mountains the Secretary arrived in Berkeley, California. After spending the forenoon in clerical work, he proceeded to hunt the church where a conference had been arranged for the evening of June twentieth. He was much more fortunate in finding this place than he had been a week before at Vancouver. One or two phone calls gave him information where to spend the night and to attend the meeting. The good friends, Rebecca and Addison Naylor, well-known to many traveling friends, were host and hostess. After a delightful time with these friends we went to meeting in Berkeley. Some of the Oakland Friends came over and about eight P. M. the meeting began. We had a good time together with the Lord's blessing over all that was done. The meeting was not large because many of the young people had gone home for their vacations. (This Meeting is attended by many students from the University of California). After a discussion about the Young Friends Movement we adjourned with a feeling of much encouragement at the outlook of Friends in America.

On the next day the Secretary with Robert C. Root visited the University grounds and then took the ferry to San Francisco where connections were made for San Jose that afternoon. It was more beautiful and cheaper to take a motor car for the journey so that arrangement was made. It was beautiful indeed, riding for hours through orchards of apricots, apples, pears, peaches and grapes. The macadam roads were as comfortable for automobile travel as one could wish. The farm houses, ranch houses, were beautiful too. They were frame structures for the most part and were covered with vines and climbing roses. San Jose is a large town and has some most beautiful residences. Many wealthy people from the east own homes here. The Friends Meeting House is a plain wooden building with one large room and a basement. It has a belfry and a pulpit as do most of the Meeting Houses in this section. About eight o'clock the meeting opened with singing a hymn and a few sentence prayers. By the time the speaker was ready to begin about 55 Friends had gathered. The secretary reviewed the work of the Young Friends Movement, its relation to the United Society of Christian Endeavor and what it purposes to accomplish for Young Friends. There was close attention for an hour and the Meeting broke up amid greetings and a warm spirit of good will towards the young people of the East.

Whatever may be said against the church for neglecting the social and community side of her work she is holding up a high standard of consecration. Those who are attracted to her usually consecrate everything they have. Many of these young people go as foreign missionaries, at tremendous sacrifice socially and financially. Others go into city and rural missionary work where the ordinary person would shrink from the undertaking. It can be said of these Friends in real truth, they give until it hurts. Some have been known to sell a piece of property that the Lord's work might not be hindered. The statement has been made that if Friends in Indiana Yearly Meeting would give as well as Oregon Friends do, there would be funds enough to adequately endow Earlham College, supply the Boards of the Five Years' Meeting with sufficient money and double her missionary gifts.

REFERENDUM OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES ON PREPAREDNESS

In the Initiative, Referendum and Recall Department of Equity (Philadelphia) for July is a report on the referendum vote recently taken on preparedness by the United States Chamber of Commerce together with some pertinent comments. The comments on the method used are especially deserving of notice:

"General publicity has been given to the referendum vote taken by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on various phases of the national preparedness campaign. The result appears to show that the business men in control of important financial affairs favor a larger standing army, an increased navy, industrial integration and universal military training.

"The largest vote was on the proposition for general preparedness. It resulted in 970 votes for the proposition and only 8 votes against it. The lowest vote was on universal military training, 889 in favor and 56 opposed; but even here the proportion was more than 15 to 1. Forty-three states were represented, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippines and the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris, France.

"In justifying the necessity for general preparedness the report of the committee on which the referendum was based stated that it was as futile to ask for what particular war the United States is to prepare as to ask a ship captain against what particular accident or storms his ship carries life boats. However, this would appear to be a very poor analogy and essentially misleading. For, in the case of the ship captain elemental forces are known to exist over which he has absolutely no control. But in the case of danger from foreign aggression everything may depend on the policy pursued by our own government.

"The proposition for co-operative industrial mobilization for the private manufacture of munitions, in case of war, seems to lay all stress on the manufacture of war tools, while nothing is said concerning steps to be taken toward preventing war through a fair foreign policy frankly made public, or by promoting an international organization of some kind to adjust international affairs, or by trying to organize an international police power capable of guaranteeing peace.

"In the proposal for a larger navy, there is a curiously amusing verbal twist, which exposes the essentially aggressive purpose of larger battle ships. The Chamber of Commerce report says that 'this recommendation was adopted on the ground that if attacked, the cheapest, most effective and safest defense of the country by the navy can only be obtained if it is strong enough to seek out and destroy the enemy at sea, and certainly at a distance from our shores sufficiently great to render invasion impracticable.' Thus we have the frank avowal of the essentially aggressive uses to which the big ships of the navy may be put, and in all probability will be, sooner or later.

"As to the matter of 'profit interest in war,' this referendum shows its strong bias in favor of the use of private plants, rather than government factories, to produce munitions. An effort is made to show that all possibility of 'making capital out of the country's necessary plans for defense will be removed. But in the same breath it is said that 'the pre-arranged agreements with manufacturers will be on a cost plus or other basis which, while doing justice to stockholders and owners, will be absolutely insufficient to create any interest in war.' This is positively ludicrous in its naive contradiction of statement. The heading is 'No Profit Interest In War.' But the agreements are to be on a 'cost plus' basis, it not being stated how much plus except to do justice to stockholders and owners. Who will decide how much profit is just? And, if men are giving their lives to their country why provide for any profit to stockholders? Why not put it strictly on a cost basis? That would be true co-operation.

"The truth is that this referendum on preparedness is an example of how such referendum should not be conducted. It is manifestly absurd to submit a proposition in such a way as to argue the advantage of the affirmative or negative side of it. If arguments on either side are to be presented, then both sides should be given a hearing and both should be sent apart from the ballot itself.

As a matter of fact, the public is frankly told (in a report sent to the newspapers by the national chamber on April 10) that the 700 commercial bodies, representing 300,000 business men of the country 'will be asked to vote for or against recommendations contained in the report of a special committee, of which Bascom Little, of Cleveland, is the chairman.' It is this report from which the recommendations we have referred to are taken.

"These committee recommendations were all positively favorable to the propositions submitted and were accompanied with the strongest possible arguments designed to sway the members to make an affirmative vote. No wonder the proposition carried by such big majorities.

"In all fairness, why should not opportunity have been given for a statement for the other side of the question, such statement to go right along with the committee recommendation? Only in that way can the referendum be used with fairness to all concerned. This method was recognized in the previous referendum of the National Chamber of Commerce on the proposals of the League to Enforce Peace, a pamphlet being sent with arguments pro and con. Why was this wise policy not followed in the present referendum on preparedness?"

TRACTOR DEMONSTRATION

Announcements are made that an important tractor demonstration will be given at Indianapolis, Indiana, during the week of August 28, in connection with the National Power Farming demonstration. Definite assurance has been given that a tractor which does more work at less expense and costing much less than any of the present machines will be shown exclusively at this exposition. It is of interest especially to the small farmers of the central west.

There is always the unknown quantity, always the equation we cannot solve. It would seem that it is not the will of God that we should in our toil for him feel ourselves masters of the situation. It must be enough to know that he is Master of it.—Percy C. Ainsworth.

MAKING THEIR BURDENS LIGHTER

Letters just received from Cuba show something of the relief and gratitude which the workers are feeling over the action of the Board in taking steps to acquire property for the Holguin School as described in The American Friend last week.

One, under date of July 12, writes, "Since writing, I have learned of the steps being taken to secure a building for the Holguin School. I am rejoiced at this prospect."

An earlier letter from Clarence McClean, the director of the school, contained these sentences, "I can hardly believe yet that it is true—it seems too good to be true. The location is ideal for our use, better than the house we have been occupying. It has a fine, big yard and the house, with some remodeling, will be very satisfactory for school purposes. It costs only half what they now ask for the property we have been occupying."

Forty-five hundred dollars are needed at once to complete the purchase and provide for the remodeling of this new property. The possession of this permanent home for the school will lighten the burden of our Cuba workers and exert a permanent force for the uplift of one of the newest, republics of Latin-America. The Board of Missions issues this call for funds, assured of the importance of the object and the ready response of Friends to a great need. Contributions and inquiries may be sent either to the treasurer of the Board or to one of the secretaries.

MISSIONARY WORK IN THE COLLEGES

(Under this heading we expect frequently to publish brief accounts of the missionary activities and interest in the various Friends colleges. The first of these appears below.—R. A. H.)

At Friends University.

The Student Volunteer Band is trying something a little different this year to create and increase the interest among the students of our school. We have a meeting once a week, taking an hour for our devotional and the study of different mission fields.

We have an open meeting once a month and invite students who are not Volunteers, but perhaps thinking of devoting their lives to this work. We make a special effort to have something that will appeal to and interest them. We have our prayer list and pray for those who seemingly are not interested, as well as those who are in the "Valley of Decision" and almost decided to volunteer. We believe the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much.

We are having a bulletin board made and on it put pictures of workers and natives on foreign fields, curios, or clippings on missions, hoping in this way some one will catch a new vision of missionary work.

Some of our members are in active service here in the city missions. We have nine in our Volunteer Band this year. All are students.

CARRIE HAYS.

FRIENDS WORK IN INDIA AND CHINA

(A letter from Edgar T. Hole which appeared in the Oriental News.)

Shanghai, China, Dec. 2, 1915.

Most of us have met some members of that class of society who apparently feel it their duty to acquaint their friends, neighbors and others with whatever afflictions, sorrows or diseases they may chance to have. I wish to join the ranks long enough to make known my malady—enlargement of the heart. When leaving the shores of Africa, on September 1st, enroute to America with my family, all appeared normal and well; but after a few weeks in India, visiting our own and other missions, the enlargement began in earnest.

I have read reports from India ever since the institution of our work there, but must confess surprise as well as delight at what we saw. One is led to wonder how so much has been accomplished with the modest equipment and without a man to look after the man's end of such a work. Certainly God's good hand has been upon our faithful women workers in that trying field. But the real heart-swelling facts are these, viz: there lies the great native state of Bundelkhand, about one hundred and twenty miles one way by nearly as many the other way. Its population is about one million unevangelized souls. The only Christian effort in the whole area is that of our Nowgong Mission, with an outpost at Harpalpur, under a native helper. The Friends' church is face to face with this wonderful opportunity and privilege. A large map in Nowgong shows just what villages have been visited with the gospel as our workers have itinerated year by year; but multiplied thousands have never heard the name of Jesus. Is not this enough to give one heart disease? What is our responsibility? And, is it a task to delegate to women only?

I wish that one thousand of our American Friends could meet on the spot and get the enlargement of heart and vision. I am sure it would mean the searching after and the finding of at least one vigorous and capable man and wife who would count it a joyous privilege to give themselves to this great open field. Those who started the work are strong in spirit but weak in body. Is not God's call upon some who are willing to take up the burden?

The idolatrous atmosphere of China has been no better than that of India for one whose heart is stirred. The old work so well known at Nanking moves along with the well organized precision characteristic of the experienced workers, although more help is needed in the teaching of the girls' schools. Pastor Gao is surely a jewel in Chinese dress—a true leader of the people—a man greatly loved by all classes. I told him that I wanted to purchase a Chinese cap. He promised to get it for me, but the one he brought was too large. He told me to try his own on. It fit exactly. To my great delight, he presented me with it, so I have promised, with God's help, to try to be as good as the former owner of the cap.

At Lu Ho the foreign and Chinese workers are full of evangelistic zeal. They are "sowing beside all waters," and have something to show for it. Here, again, a large area is up to the Friends' church to evangelize; a carefully prepared chart shows bright spots where individuals or families have become Christian in the outlying districts. Many become interested through hearing the gospel in the hospital chapel and wards, but return to their more or less distant homes to hear no more. For these, if some one could be had to carry on well organized follow-up work, in connection with his other evangelistic work over this large field, good returns could doubtless be had.

A visit to Gua Pu in company with Dr. George F. de Vol was most interesting and encouraging. This outpost has a fine little group of Christians. Sixty-eight bright, clean school boys and girls met us outside the village with hymns and flying banners. After the service we were led to a home where a splendid Chinese lunch was served by one of the church members. We are most thankful for the privilege of visiting India and China on our way home. I fear we do not fully realize what mines of soul wealth have been opened up by our workers in these lands. May they not only be kept supplied with men and means to hold present positions, but, in Christ's Name, to take the enemy's trenches.

We are leaving tomorrow for Japan where we plan to make a very short visit to our workers in Tokyo.

EDGAR T. HOLE.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING

California Yearly Meeting was held at Whittier, California, from June 26, to July 3. The large attendance this year was well sustained throughout the various sessions. We were favored with visiting ministers as follows: Esther Frame, of Wilmington; Joseph Sopher and wife and Lorena Terrell, of Iowa; Levi Cox, of Indiana; Susan Sisson, of Nebraska; Edward Woodward, of Nebraska; Benjamin Hiatt, of Indiana, and Thomas E. Jones of Indiana.

Septimus Marten was present with credentials from London Yearly Meeting, introducing him on behalf of the work of English Friends in the relief of suffering caused by the war.

John Chawner was again chosen for Presiding Clerk, completing with this Yearly Meeting twenty years of service in that position. At his request an assistant Presiding Clerk, in the person of Allen U. Tomlinson, was appointed for this year, with the expectation that he would continue in that office next year. Mabel H. Douglas was appointed Reading Clerk, and Susan H. Johnson, Recording Clerk, with Mary Lewis as assistant.

The reports from the Quarterly Meetings indicated that there is much active work being carried on in most of our meetings. In several meetings missionary work is being done among the Japanese and Mexicans resident in the community. The Yearly Meeting Board of Missions employs a Japanese pastor, Brother Takata, to carry the Gospel to his people, and also a Mexican pastor, Enrique Cobos, for his fellow-countrymen. The latter, during one session of the Yearly Meeting, expressed, with deep emotion, the conviction that, if only we all were filled with the Spirit of Jesus Christ, there would be no war between his country and ours.

The Yearly Meeting decided to employ some Friend as a General Secretary, with headquarters in Los Angeles, in an effort to conserve our membership and consolidate our work in this State. We also decided to appoint an Evangelistic Superintendent, John Shober Kimber being selected for that office.

The reports of the Board of Missions indicated that prosperous work is being done in Alaska and Central America (Guatemala and Honduras). The Women's Foreign Missionary Society decided to turn over the administration of their mission work among the Spanish to the Yearly Meeting's Board of Missions, thus putting all the regular missionary work of the Yearly Meeting under its own board. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will continue its work in missionary education, and its other lines of committee work and service in the cause of missions.

On Saturday evening, a large and enthusiastic gathering of young people met in the annual Christian Endeavor meeting and listened with keen interest to an address by Thomas Jones. His thoughtful and instructive message concerning the appeal of Jesus Christ to the educated young people of today was an inspiration to all. His addresses on several other occasions during the Yearly Meeting, as well as at the various local meetings, have been of real help and blessing to many.

The reports of the various departments showed that much work had been done in their lines of service. A new departure was the formation of a Bible School Board, consisting of the Superintendent of Bible Schools, with specialists on the various departments of the Bible School work. A forceful address on the importance of the Bible School was delivered by Dr. Francis, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Los Angeles, who, incidentally, paid a high tribute to Friends for their contribution to the spiritual life of the church at large.

The devotional meetings held each morning were well attended, the leadership at most of them being in the hands of the visiting ministers. Numerous cases of definite blessing were the result of these meetings. Each afternoon a special meeting was held for the children, at which illustrated talks were given. On one occasion children from Japan, Alaska and India; one being a child widow, were present to tell of, or illustrate the work in their native countries.

The meeting united with the request of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting in matters relating to the peace work of Friends.

Definite steps were taken to get our meetings to line up for the "Every-Member Canvass," so as to divide the financial responsibility among all our membership.

The statistical report showed a net gain of 101 members for the past year.

At the closing session many expressions of appreciation of the ministry, and of the felt presence of God, were given. Afterwards a frequent comment was that it had been the best Yearly Meeting we had ever had.

NEWS NOTES

Word has been received that David E. Sampson died unexpectedly on July 19 at his home in Winston-Salem, N. C.

LeRoy A. Hawks is closing his work as pastor of the Motor Friends church, Milo, Iowa, and desires to correspond with any meeting looking for a pastor.

In the account of a meeting at Clarksville, Ohio, given in The American Friend last week, the name of Jason Biddlecum should have been given as one of the speakers, instead of Homer G. Biddlecum.

Charles O. Whiteley, pastor of the meeting at Newberg, Oregon, for several years, has resigned his position with a view to accepting the superintendency of the Evangelistic and Church Extension work of Iowa Yearly Meeting.

THE IOWA PAGE

Penn College.

Friends everywhere will desire to know the progress that is being made in the Penn College Endowment Campaign. A brief review of the history of this campaign may be helpful. The college has been in straitened circumstances for some years, and this condition has been growing more acute until at last the board of trustees felt that the time had come to either remedy the condition or stop operating the institution. Therefore a campaign was authorized which began the 8th day of May for the purpose of accumulating $400,000.00. The first day of August was set as the day upon which the campaign should close, and all pledges are being taken with the understanding that none are binding unless the entire amount is pledged by that date.

On May 27th, came the great fire which destroyed the principal building. This increased the burden so that we are now seeking $100,000.00 additional to be used in the erection of buildings. We feel that we must call upon the Society of Friends everywhere, as well as all friends of that type of education for which Penn College stands and of which she has been such a splendid illustration for almost a half century, to assist us to the limit of their ability.

The sum we seek is so large, the time so short, the results of failure so appalling, and the picture of success so attractive, that these facts—together with the additional fact that no exceedingly large gifts can be expected from any one source—make it absolutely necessary that a multitude of smaller pledges be received.

The service Penn College has rendered for nearly a half century has not been wholly local. The entire Society of Friends has been helped by this service. A glance at the names of those who are serving in conspicuous places not only in foreign fields but at home will prove the truth of this statement. It will be helpful to Friends to consider the following list of names all of whom are graduates or old students of Penn College: Gilbert and Minnie Pickett Bowles; Alice G. Lewis; Sylvester and Mae Jones; Charles and Orpha Haworth; Wendell and Faye Farr; Alsina M. Andrews; Lora Arms; Ross A. Hadley; W. Carleton and Alice Wood; Clarence and Lily Pickett; Ora and Golda Carrell; Alex and Jeannette Purdy; Errol D. Peckham; Dr. W. O. Mendenhall; Dr. T. H. Coffin, and scores of others who are serving in places of importance in the Society of Friends. 17 per cent of the graduates of Penn College have entered Christian service as a life work, and the same per cent of those now in attendance have chosen to do the same. 98 per cent of the students who attend Penn College even for one year unite in the Christian life. The geographical location of Penn College makes it indispensable to American Quakerism.

In view of these facts, therefore, we are making as strong an appeal as possible for us to make to the membership of the Society of Friends in America asking that with liberality and promptness they make such pledges to this great enterprise as it is possible for them to make. Those giving will know that either their pledges will be a part of a sum sufficiently large to adequately finance Penn College or else they will not be asked to pay it. This is the biggest thing in a financial way that Quakerism in America ever undertook. Will it be success or failure? That will depend upon the number of individuals who respond and the extent of that response.

INDIANOLA SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Sunday, July 9th, was observed as annual Children's Day. After a short study period, a program of songs, exercises, and recitations was given by the children. This was followed by talks from Mr. Bogue and Mr. Ora W. Carrel, both of whom were present on behalf of the college campaign. Then, as the time was rather limited, Brother Moore omitted the regular sermon and dismissed the congregation after a few short remarks.

Class No. 7, an organized class of young women, has taken up the Teachers' Training work, studying the lessons at the regular Sunday School hour. They enjoy the study very much and are greatly interested in it. The Cradle Roll department reports six new members on the roll. The Home Department has a membership of thirty. Quarterlies for the next quarter have been distributed to all those who had no other means of studying the lessons.

The new officers took their place this month. Besides the regular officers, three new committees were appointed. These were the Temperance, the Peace, and the Missionary Committees. The whole Sunday School has shown deep interest in the Penn College Campaign. One class of little girls has given $1.60. The other classes are nearly all making plans for giving, but their pledges have not yet been definitely reported.

WEST BRANCH BIBLE SCHOOL.

The average attendance for the quarter of April, May and June has been over 100. This is the largest average attendance the school has ever had. The "Little Cross and Crown System" is being used, and about 35 are entitled to the button for the second quarter. The collection for the past quarter has been good.

The Beginners' Class has been divided and a Primary Department has been established, all of the members meeting with the main school in the closing exercises. Class maps for Paul's Missionary Journeys have been provided for the school. The Sunday School Times Question Quarterly is being tried in two classes.

A sand table has been put in for the use of the beginners. On the whole, the school is alive and doing good work.

PLEASE NOTE

Please send your S. S. items to Golda O. Ruan Carrell, Beacon, Iowa. What is your school doing? Have you observed Children's Day? Please report it, if you have. Send items of even the small happenings. It will help and encourage other schools to know what you are doing.

FIELD NOTES

Arnolds Park—Greenville Quarterly Meeting was held at Arnolds Park, Iowa, on July 7th and 8th. General Superintendent H. R. Keates was present and brought messages which were encouraging and helpful. A larger attendance than usual was encouraging, several of former days were present. John D. Mills, of Central City, Nebraska, and Mr. and Mrs. S. Parry of Cincinnati, Ohio, attended the meeting on Saturday.

The annual reports were read and showed encouraging gains and interest. This is the smallest Quarterly Meeting in Iowa Yearly Meeting but the reports show gains in interest and spiritual things. Greenville has made extensive improvements in church and parsonage. Arnolds Park meeting has almost doubled its membership and has a Bible school which has reached the 'Standard' but not its goal. H. R. Keates remained over the Sabbath, preaching both morning and evening to a well-filled and attentive house.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

AT CENTRAL CITY

The "Truth Seekers Class," of Central City Friends' Bible School turned their regular monthly meeting into an indoor picnic in honor of the eighty-fourth birthday of its oldest member, David Emry. The members of the class next to this in point of age were also invited guests. The gathering was held in the college dining-hall and after the program about forty-five friends sat down to a bountiful picnic supper. In the center of the table was placed a large birthday cake, decorated with eighty-four pink candles.

David and Amanda Emry were both born in Indiana, but removed to Iowa and then to Central City, Nebraska, where they purchased a home near the Nebraska Central College, so their three unmarried children might attend that school.

They celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary February 17, 1915, and at that time their descendants, including children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, numbered more than one hundred. With very few exceptions they are following the example which has been so worthily set them of service for the Lord Jesus Christ.

The program consisted of devotional exercises, followed by tender and loving remarks by some of those present and a response by Father Emry. A poem was then read which fittingly expressed the feeling of all present toward this dear old couple:

NEAR THE SUNSET GATE.

By ANNA W. ALLEN.

How blessed it is to be old;
And to sit near the sunset gate,
Ready to enter the portals,
But willing with patience to wait;
Knowing that safely garnered
Are all the sheaves of the years;
That ahead are the glad reunions;
And behind all the struggles and tears.

Oh, how the peace of their presence,
Like a vesper bell refrain,
Falls on our world—worn senses
And stills all their throbbing pain!
And the sight of the peace of their features,
With a heart's inner beauty alight,
Teaches us all a submission
That irradiates life's darkest night.

Dear Father, we pray for thy guidance
Till we, too, reach the turn of the road;
Oh, grant us the glory of helping
To lighten some wayfarer's load;
And when in the hush of the evening
We wait in the low sunset's gold,
May we know, like these whom we honor,
How blessed it is to be old.

Every place where God leads, there is your field.—Moody.

CHURCH AT WORK

Muncie, Indiana—At the recent annual meeting of the Muncie Monthly Meeting of Friends composed of Muncie and Cowan meetings, committees were named for the coming year. J. Elmer Rhea is clerk and Anna Doan Stephens is assistant clerk. Annual reports were received from all the committees. The total membership of the Monthly Meeting is 780, and $25,145.95 were used in the work for all purposes during the past year.

West Richmond, Indiana—The annual meeting of West Richmond Monthly Meeting was held on the evening of July 13. The usual bounteous supper was served by the ladies on the lawn at the meeting house grounds in connection with a social hour. The company then assembled in the auditorium, when more than a hundred persons responded to the annual roll call. During the regular monthly business session reports were read from all committees and new committees were appointed for the coming year. Two young ladies were received into membership from the Christian Endeavor Society, while two others were received as active members from the associate membership. The meeting is felt to be in a satisfactory condition. Work on the new meeting house is progressing satisfactorily and it will probably be ready for occupancy by the first of October.

Guilford College, N. C.—New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held here on July 8. The reports at the meeting on ministry and oversight indicated a good condition of spiritual activity. At the opening of the Quarterly Meeting the quartette from Cleveland, Ohio, sang "By the Way of the Cross." President Thomas Newlin, of Guilford College, offered prayer and David E. Sampson, of Winston-Salem, gave a brief discourse. Fred E. Smith, of Greensboro, preached a vigorous sermon on spirituality, discipleship and personal purity. The noon luncheon in the basement was abundant and satisfying. Julia S. White returned her minute granted her at last meeting to visit New England Yearly Meeting. She and her companion, Mary E. M. Davis, reported a satisfactory visit. Eli Reece gave a satisfactory account of his evangelistic service during the past year in Iowa, Kansas and elsewhere. At his request another minute for more extensive evangelistic work was granted him. Reports on peace from the various Monthly Meetings showed more than usual activity in this direction. This being the last Quarterly Meeting before Yearly Meeting reports from all committees were received. As a matter of special mention the Christian Endeavor Society has trebled its membership and holds second rank in the state. Quite a number have joined the church through the instrumentality of the Christian Endeavor Society. A request was presented that the older people attend the meetings of this organization. A brief memorial was read for Mary A. Peele and was directed to be forwarded to the permanent board. The request of Winston-Salem Monthly Meeting for one Quarterly Meeting to be held there permanently each year was approved and was referred to a committee to make the arrangements.

Newberg, Oregon—Arthur Jones, pastor of the Friends church in Kansas City, Mo., attended the services at Newberg on July 9 and spoke acceptably in the evening. In the morning, Robert H. Dann, son of Arthur Dann of England, told of the ambulance unit and other relief work in which English Friends are engaged and of the testing many are experiencing in that country. He has a brother and other relatives in this work. A collection of $65.00 was taken to be forwarded to the proper authorities.

New London, Indiana—New London Quarterly Meeting was held here on June 3 and 4. Enos Harvey, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present at all the sessions, and his messages were an inspiration to the church to move forward. On Saturday night the Quarterly Meeting C. E. Societies held an Endeavor rally. Chester Reagan, Superintendent of the Yearly Meeting C. E. work, and Mabel Quigg, Yearly Meeting Junior Superintendent, were present and gave helpful talks. On Sabbath afternoon the missionary society held a very interesting meeting, which was addressed by Enos Harvey.

Prof. W. O. Mendenhall, of Earlham College, was present at the Sunday night service on May 28 and gave an address to the young people. He took as his text, "The Master Has Come and Callesth for Thee." The theme of his address was right living and the service was very impressive.

Sabbath, July 9, was observed by the New London Friends as Earlham Day, originating with the pastor, J. I. Phillips. His thought and plan for the day was executed in a whole-hearted, enthusiastic way. The church was beautifully decorated with flags, flowers and Earlham colors. President Robert L. Kelly and Dr. Lawrence Hadley were present throughout the day. At the morning meeting President Kelly gave a very able sermon, taking for his theme "Christian Education." At the noon hour dinner was served in the grove near the church and a very enjoyable social hour was spent. The afternoon meeting was given over to the Earhamites, Chester Reagan presiding and the Earham students taking part in the music. Dr. Hadley gave an excellent address on Christian Preparative. At the evening session President Kelly gave a strong address, followed by a plea from the pastor for the young people to attend Earlham College. As a result several young people evidenced their decisions for our own college by taking their places on the platform, making a beautiful climax to this day of blessing to New London and the surrounding meetings.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON AUGUST 6.

Subject—The Greatest Thing in the World. (Temperance Lesson).

Lesson—I-Cor. 13.

Golden Text—Now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; and the greatest of these is love. I Cor. 13:13.

Few if any passages in the New Testament are of greater ethical value than the one which constitutes the text of this lesson. Few people make the realization of this ideal the supreme effort of their lives. It is the duty of every Christian to strive to live true to its possibilities and the duty of every teacher to stress it above every other phase of Christian doctrine. Let us note Paul's conception of the cardinal value of LOVE.

The Christian church has at one time or another emphasized certain things. Paul takes five of these and declares Love to be greater than any other one. 1. The gift of tongues, so greatly coveted by certain people, is but sounding brass in comparison. 2. Even the gift of prophecy, prophecy of a rare type, is as nothing compared with Love. 3. The working of miracles is less to be coveted as a gift than the possession of Love. 4. Beneficence, so greatly commended by all the great religious leaders and especially by the Jews and Christians is inferior to Love—because it is in its purest form based on Love. 5. Martyrdom, considered the highest expression of Christian faithfulness by many of the Christian fathers and the one last means by which sins of certain dye could be atoned for, is here placed secondary to Love. There is, after all comparison is made, nothing which may be considered a worthy rival of this great virtue—it is in a class by itself. Love is divine. God is LOVE.

Paul then undertakes to describe

Love. When he gets through he says there are three things which abide but the greatest one of these is Love. He says there are fifteen things notable about love. 1. It suffereth long. 2. It is kind. 3. It envieth not. 4. Vaunteth not itself. 5. It is not puffed up. 6. Does not behave itself unseemly. 7. Seeketh not its own. 8. Is not provoked. 9. Taketh not account of evil. 10. Rejoiceth not in unrighteousness. 11. Rejoiceth with the truth. 12. Bearer all things. 13. Believeth all things. 14. Hopeth all things. 15. Endureth all things. If we were to give serious study to the meaning of these various virtues in their relation to our own individual lives how many of us would find our love unalloyed? Failure to meet the test should not dishearten us. When the youth stands facing his future he sees a host of things that must be done. Does he give up in despair? No, indeed, he glories in the prospects and forthwith proceeds to annex as many of them as possible. So Christian take heart there is future glory for thee; glory in a divine commission to appropriate these virtues.

There is not sufficient space here to go into a detailed discussion of each of these points. We can only suggest that the student think of them in reference to the life of Jesus and see how wonderfully he fulfilled each of them. We may note however in passing that the word translated evil (9) does not mean sin here but rather mistreatment. Love then does not seek vengeance. It can forgive and forget.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

August 6.

Topic: "The Consecration of Friendship." Eccl. 4:9-10.

"Deliberate long before thou consecrate a friend; and when thy impartial judgment concludes him worthy of thy bosom, receive him joyfully and entertain him wisely; impart thy secrets boldly and mingle thy thoughts with his; he is thy very self and use him so; if thou firmly believe him faithful thou makest him so."

—F. Quarles.

"Every true friend is a glimpse of God."

Is your friend a Christian? Have you told him of the Best Friend?

Dr. Bushnell once said that if the Lord Jesus were going down the street and should see him on the other side, He would say, "There goes a friend of mine." We have taken Jesus to be our Friend, but are our relations with Him such that He could say we are friends of His?

J. R. Miller tells the story of Alexander as the wonderful proof of confidence in a friend. Once when the Grecian Emperor was ill, he was told in a letter that his physician intended to give him poison under the form of medicine. The physician came, poured out the potion, and gave it to him. Alexander looked his friend full in the face, drank the contents of the goblet, then handed him the letter. It was a beautiful trust.

Dr. Miller says: "Like confidence are we to have in the will of Christ. We are never to doubt his love nor his wisdom. Whatever he gives we are to accept with childlike trust, though it be something that we think may even slay us. There is no other full proof of unquestioning friendship."

"What is the secret of your life?" asked Mrs. Browning of Charles Kingsley; "Tell me, that I may make mine beautiful too." He replied, "I had a friend."

CORRESPONDENCE

July 17, 1916.

The American Friend,
Richmond, Indiana.
Gentlemen:

Herewith find New York Exchange in amount of $4.50 for which please continue the three subscriptions for another year to same addresses as given heretofore.

The writer was born and brought up under the teachings of the Religious Society of Friends, although living apart from the immediate influence of the Quaker Church for the past half century, and I still feel that I am a stockholder in the organization and desire a weekly report of its doings, its gains and losses, its new meetings, its missions and the movements of its members, and for the opportunity to read the excellent articles in your publication, I feel a hundred fold reimbursed for the small outlay.

If these few lines will induce some fond parent or doting friend who, with charity in his heart and money in his pocket, to subscribe for one or more copies to "a has been," it will doubly bless the receiver and the giver.

Very truly,

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

Under date of July 20, one of our prominent pastors writes us as follows:

"While I am writing, I wish to express my appreciation of The American Friend. It was good when it started under your editorship, but it has assuredly improved steadily. The editorials are worthy, able, and pertinent. The regular departments are a very valuable addition to an excellent paper. I am seeking to promote its circulation among our membership."

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.

Save, O Lord, and Bless Our Land

Christ, by heavenly hosts adored,
Gracious, mighty, sovereign Lord,
God of nations, King of kings,
Head of all created things,
By the Church with joy confessed,
God o'er all forever blest;
Pleading at thy throne we stand,
Save thy people, bless our land!

By thyself, the source of grace,
By thy headship of our race,
By thy coming from the skies,
By thine awful sacrifice,
By thy reign o'er all the earth
For its new and second birth;
In thy merits let us stand,
Save, O Lord, and bless our land!

From all public sin and shame,
From ambition's grasping aim,
From rebellion, war and death,
From the pestilential breath,
From dread famine's awful stroke,
From oppression's galling yoke,
From the judgments of thy hand,
Spare thy people, spare our land!

On our fields of grass and grain
Drop, O Lord, the kindly rain:
O'er our wide and goodly land
Crown the labors of each hand;
Let thy kind protection be
O'er our commerce on the sea:
Open, Lord, thy bounteous hand,
Bless thy people, bless our land!

What Will The Judgment Mean?

By MARY M. MACOMBER.

In the silence of the evening hour
When all is hushed and still,
Save the rushing of the mighty wind
Obeying His sweet will,

I seem to see the millions
As they stand before the throne
In that solemn, awful moment,
As He makes His judgments known.

Oh! my war-mad brother falter,
Think of what that day will be.
Pride and greed and selfish honor,
What will they mean to thee?

Will it signify my brother
That He'll say to all who fought,
"Bravely done, my valiant soldier,
My will first has been thy thought?"

Nay, my brother, though it grieve Him,
And His heart of love be torn,
Words like these will fall on only
Those who to Him have been borne.

Those who fought not for their country,
Those who fought not for their own,
But to those who sought His glory,
Who to him their deeds have sown.

Theirs has been a war, my brother,
Not of strife and sin and shame,
But a war to bring the sinner,
To our Lord through His dear name.

SPECIAL OFFER EXTENDED

The time for securing new subscriptions for The American Friend for six months at fifty cents each has been extended until September 1st. This has been done to accommodate some Young People's Societies which have been slow in getting their teams to work upon a canvass. In quite a number of meetings good lists of subscribers have been secured with only a little effort. It has been necessary, however, to make an actual canvass and solicit individuals personally. One meeting where it was thought that not very much could be done sent in a list of twenty.

We trust that all Young People's Societies and pastors generally where nothing has yet been done in the way of a canvass of the community will take advantage of this offer before September 1st. Hundreds of names can be added to our list if the proper effort is put forth. Not alone for its own sake, but for sake of the larger service which the paper can render the church. The American Friend should have a larger subscription list. In some of the Yearly Meetings Young People's Societies have pledged so many subscriptions to The American Friend, Indiana Yearly Meeting Endeavorers alone having pledged themselves to secure two hundred additional subscriptions. Now is the time to make good upon these pledges.

HELPING EUROPEAN SUFFERERS.

The American Friend has received and forwarded to Isaac Sharp of London, England, in recent weeks a little over $450.00 contributed from various sources for the relief of European sufferers. Some additional funds are on hand and will be forwarded in the near future. Some sums have also been received and forwarded for Armenian relief.

English Friends are engaged in relief work in so many different directions that it is absolutely necessary for American Friends to come to their assistance in a larger way than has yet been done. Taking care of aliens in England, doing work on the continent through the Ambulance Unit and in bringing relief to war victims, looking after the distressed in Serbia and Russia, all this is requiring a continuous outlay of funds that must be supplied somewhere.

The American Friend has received a further appeal from the Federal Council of Churches calling upon the various denominations to assist in relief work, especially in France, but we have a feeling that so far as the Society of Friends is concerned in America our contributions should be given for the present very largely toward the relief work which those of our denomination are carrying on so successfully on the other side of the water. The American Friend will be glad to receive and forward additional sums as they may be received from Friends throughout America from time to time. Send to office at Richmond, Ind.

HOW APPROACH THE BIBLE

Approaching his Bible with a student's equipment, the Christian should bring also a student's attitude. He desires to learn to progress in the way of life, and not to test or prove out certain preconceived theories of his own, or, indeed, those of others as humanly fallible as himself. The Bible is God's revelation of Himself to man, and through its pages each must in the last analysis trace for himself the divine lessons. An open mind, an honest will, and a reverent heart—these three lead to sovereign power in Bible study.—George J. Anderson.

A Greater Quakerism IX

It has been said that Friends lack that cohesive element of denominational spirit that is so essential in establishing the unity as well as the solidarity of a successful working organism. But spirit is not a thing to be taken on or abandoned at will. If we lack Quaker spirit, it is proof that we lack in organization, or in denominational purpose or in appreciation of the value of the purpose which may exist. The consciousness of a great mission is bound to produce a fraternity of spirit that begets universal loyalty of service. The esprit de corps will always exist and will always express itself, even in denominational life, when the membership is moved by a sense of duty in the performance of a mighty task.

There is nothing so conducive to church indolence as the inertia of commonplace practices or the lack of a commanding mission. A church that is willing to be small will generally remain small, and a church that is willing merely to exist will never realize the joy of vigorous service for the Master.

This is an age that has no place for the indolent or self-satisfied church. The whole world is groping for the light and Christianity must find an answer to the deepest heart searching questionings of the race. The faith of humanity for the next century will be the direct product of the service which the Christian church renders to this age. Not even in the days of Fox did Quakerism have a better opportunity to minister to a great need than it does today.

Some one has recently said: "Christianity has not been tried and found wanting; it has been found difficult and not tried." How else shall we account for this almost world-wide war, and for the dominating Spirit of evil so prevalent in the social, political and commercial world?

"One and All," the English organ of the National Adult School Union, in a recent issue, has set forth so aptly and so concretely some of the real tasks of the church, that we adopt its utterances herewith as our own in an appeal for Quakerism to stir itself in this behalf with an energy and consecration such as it has never known before:

"However the world-war may end, it will leave humanity exhausted, poverty-stricken, and wounded beyond measure. Perchance it may leave the hearts of men and women susceptible to the one Voice that has healing for their hurt, comfort for their sorrow, and a message to guide them into the way of peace. For certain it is that there is no other than the way of Christ for the people to tread if they desire a new world to follow this wreck of the old. But the Gospel of Love must be restated and proclaimed with convincing power. It must be lived rather than taught, and practiced rather than preached. And it is here that our movement is presented with its opportunity. The comparatively small band of us which remains in the settled ways of home and life is faced with the task of examining what the great Charter of Christianity means in modern life. * * *

"We must look at this task with new eyes, and prepare ourselves for it as we have never before prepared for any similar work. Have done with your fiddling 'half-hours' and your slavery to a cramping timetable! They were well enough in their day. But that day is dead and gone. How will you do in these great days with great issues before you? Will you set to work now to prepare for your task? Will you seek every means to invite all who may anyhow be persuaded to join you, in it? Will you make sure that no man or woman in your town or village or district is unaware of what you seek to do? Will you overcome your own prejudices and conceits as the way to overcoming those of others? Will you go into the highways and byways, the houses and workshops, the churches and the chapels, the clubs and the pubs., anywhere and everywhere where your fellows are to be found, in a resolute endeavor to gain recruits to the great idea that there is a solution to the problems of humanity, and that it is here at hand?"

Are there those who doubt that Christianity has an affirmative answer to such a program as this? Perhaps it will help some to remember the words of the writer to the Hebrews concerning a race of faithful, spiritual giants, "who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight armies of aliens. Women received their dead by a resurrection: and others were tortured, not accepting their deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection: and others had trial of mockings and scourgings, yea, more-over of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, they were tempted, they were slain with the sword: they went about in sheepskins, in goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, ill-treated (of whom the world was not worthy), wandering in deserts and mountains and caves, and the holes of the earth. And these all, having had witness borne to them through their faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing concerning us, that apart from us they should not be made perfect."

We have had occasion before to say in these columns that the task of the church is a world task. The story of the Good Samaritan, while always having local and personal application, is no less typical of that spirit of international good will which must ever stand as the ideal of a Christianized social order. It is the business of the church to save persons and thereby to reconstruct and transform human society, but in its final analysis, Christianity, operating through the church, must find its highest service in regenerating internationalism and putting the stamp of positive Christianity upon civilization everywhere. For the moral ideals of the gospel of Jesus are alone potent to meet the heart problems of the human family.

Speaking of "the Church and Internationalism," The Venturer for July most fittingly says:

"Now, if there is any agency in the world which ought to be capable of arousing and cultivating the international spirit, then the Christian Church is supremely such an agency, and the worst failure of so many that can be charged against the Church is its failure to discharge this essential function and responsibility. If the Church that professes a universal gospel does nothing to create the spirit of universality in practical life, then it is obviously somewhere and somehow faithless and disloyal.

"The genuine international spirit is the genuine Christian spirit; any real and serious grasp of the universality of the Christian faith and any understanding of fundamental Christian ethic must inevitably give the international spirit.

"Professors of Christian doctrine seem totally to forget that Christianity is a definite way of life, a morality, with its principles and standards different from those of any naturalistic or utilitarian system. The greatest sin of the Church is to have professed the name of Christ and at the same time accepted the morality of the world from moment to moment. Nor can there be any real doubt as to what the fundamental principles of the Christian ethic are; they stand out daylight clear for anyone who cares to look. They can be stated quite briefly: Christian morality depends on belief in the absolute value of the individual soul, on acceptance of the principle of brotherhood and the principle of love, and, above all, perhaps, on the constant reference of all the institutions, events, problems, and situations of this life and world to a "Kingdom of God," regarded as eternal, universal, alone absolutely real, and the true source and home of human spirits.

"It is inconceivable that, if these fundamentals of Christian ethic had been preached, taught, and emphasized by the Church as they should have been, the international spirit would have been lacking. Let any man plant these principles firmly in his mind and, using them as standards and guides, approach the problem of the right relations between nations, and it will be strange indeed if the true international mind and spirit do not grow up within him. Assuredly if statesmen and diplomatists faced an international situation with this set of principles in mind as supreme, their proceedings would be unique and the results of their deliberations remarkable."

Who better than Friends, with their ideals of good will and world-wide human brotherhood and with their protests against international strife and hatred, can set themselves to the supreme task of offering the program of Jesus as the most practical solvent for all the ills of humanity, personal, social, industrial, political and international? They who admit the necessity for war under certain circumstances are not in position to plan a civilization in which war is a foreign and discordant element that must be discarded by the Christian state. They who applaud the glories of the battlefield are not the ones who can offer solace and bind up the wounds of nations that are being torn by bloody strife.

Christianity must get the ear and the confidence of the world statesmen and diplomatists, if wars are to be avoided in the future, but the church that sanctions war is not the body to preach peace to such as these. Only the church that is willing to practice its ideals can gain an audience when the supreme needs of humanity are to be met.

The doors are wide open for the Society of Friends to practice loyalty to its own ideals as the solution of great world problems in this dark hour, and sad to say, there will be all too few competitors in the attempt. Have American Friends not missed an opportunity, in that with only two or three exceptions, we have allowed our English Friends to bear the brunt of personal humanitarian service upon the battle fields and in the prison and refugee camps of Europe? It will not suffice to say that this is not our war. The crime of it to be sure belongs to Europe, but the needs and the distresses which it has imposed are of world-wide concern.

If there were today a hundred Friends from America, ministering to the sick and the wounded, the destitute and the dying, in France, in Belgium, in Germany, in Austria, in Russia, in Serbia, working side by side with our English Friends with the common purpose of extending Christian sympathy and bringing humanitarian relief, the existence of Quakerism as a world-wide force in deeds of mercy, and the probability of its continuance as an element of good will to be reckoned with henceforth in all the courts of the world would be guaranteed without the shadow of dispute. Is it not time that the members of the Society of Friends were taking counsel together about the larger things in life, to which our faith and ideals are calling us peculiarly as apostles of a new day for the human family? For this is part of the meaning of our vision of a greater Quakerism, to which we are being called by the highest obligations of duty.

The whole world has become the critic of the European civilization that has permitted its higher standards of life to be shattered by the shock of the bloodiest and costliest war in history. But what shall we say of our American civilization that has linked arms with the saloon, and, for the sake of revenue, has thrown open our homes and our children to the greatest destroyer in history?

The Bread of Life

By LINDLEY D. CLARK.

(Read John 6: 27-29, 33-36, 47-58, 63. I Cor. 10: 1-4. Luke 22: 15-20.)

Those of us who have been present when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered in other churches recognize these portions of Scripture as those used in connection with that observance, and may ask why we who do not observe this order of service should consider them together in this way. Yet as they set forth Scripture truth, we must give them their proper place or be open to the charge of rejecting a part of the counsel of God. So it becomes us to declare that we do not reject but accept,—that what to every follower of our Lord is truest and most essential in this Scripture is most fully believed by us as a Church, and if anything it is the outward form and not the inward essence. And even in this we do not judge any; to his own Master he standeth or falleth: yea; he shall be made to stand if only there is that saving faith in Him to whom all may come, and who will in no wise cast out.

We find in history that the outward observance has been and still is a matter of division and controversy, a fruitful source of strife, giving rise to persecutions and even wars. Yet to many it has been and still is felt to be a channel of blessing, and for all those who thus worship and testify of their love to God, their oneness with Christ, and their fellowship one with another, no Friend has a word of condemnation. We only say that to us we believe that the word has come that the outward ordinance is not essential, and that it may lead some to lean on a false prop; that having the Spirit we are not concerned about the substance which is of no avail of itself, and is significant, if at all, only as a symbol of the thing already possessed.

And we see how far short of a real communion the outward ceremonial is when one great body of the Protestant Church can not commune with another because of the alleged imperfection of another ordinance,—that of baptism. Still another great and esteemed body of Protestants can commune only in their own churches because only there can be found the proper ordination of him who is to administer the bread and the cup; while all Protestants are eating and drinking fruitlessly, in the judgment of the Roman Catholic Church, because they are not in and of the one true Church and Body of Christ.

Yet we know, and none of these deny,—at least those who are of the Protestant faith,—that in all communions, every one "that feareth God and worketh righteousness is acceptable to Him," and that all who believe are brethren in our common sonship of God and brotherhood of Christ.

And if we pause to ask how the benefits of the eating and drinking are received, we find Catholicism saying that with the consecration by the priest of proper ordination the bread becomes the very body and the wine the very blood of Jesus our Savior, to such a degree that He exists in completeness of personality in every crumb of the bread and in every drop of the wine; and so fully has this been affirmed that it has been held that the bread, being the body, was a complete representation of the flesh and the blood, so that a partaking of the bread alone was a complete sacrament, and the cup has thus been withheld from the laity, and regarded as the prerogative of the priesthood alone.

Again, instead of this trans-substantiation, or perfect transformation of substance, there is the view of an existence along with or under the form of the materials, which do not however become of other substance than they were. And yet again are those who see only symbolism and a mnemonic or reminding value in the elements. In the first, the unbeliever may partake of the very body of Christ, because the change is made by the consecration and not by the faith of the recipient; while in the others, only the faithful are partakers of the sacrament.

But it is not enough to find difficulties; for even though it would be a fair contention to hold that if our Lord were establishing an essential observance He would surely make plain His will as to its method,—He who so definitely established the ordinances of Judaism, and gave to Moses the pattern on the Mount,—still if it is a command to be obeyed, even with scrupulous distinction that others may fail to see, our conscience will impel us to take our stand whether with the many or the few. So that our concern is not really to know whether it is a simple and clear command; but, Is it a command? As we read "It is written," we read also, "Again it is written;" so that no word stands alone, but we compare Scripture with Scripture to find what is indeed the teaching of the written word, not fixing on a phrase here or a word there, and losing the essence and meaning of the whole in our pursuit of a particular.

The one desire of all is to attain to the will of God in renewal of life, in sustenance, and in perfecting. It was the declared purpose of our Lord to give life and to give it abundantly; and He announces as His method that mutual abiding depicted in John 15: 4; "Abide in Me and I in you." This is the true communion and intimacy of life. Having this, nothing else matters. We may ask what we will and it shall be granted. These wonderful words of John 6 to which attention was called at the beginning, were spoken a full year before the last Passover; yet here we find the fullest expression of Christ's teaching as to the Bread of Life; and Paul affirms that the Fathers in the Wilderness partook of the Spiritual Rock that followed them, "and that Rock was Christ." So, that communion does not depend upon the sacraments. Jesus had sought to turn their minds from material things to spiritual; "My flesh and My blood are the true meat and the true drink;" yet "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I have spoken unto you, they are Spirit and they are Life."

As they sat about the table at that last Passover, after having sought through three years of fellowship to direct their minds to the purpose and method of His coming, He seizes once again on the figure of that April day a year ago. The hours of their companionship were few. The hand of the betrayer was with his Lord's in the dish. To these men of Jewish faith and tradition, the Passover pointed backward to the deliverance from Egypt, even while they sang with a gleam of forward-looking hope; "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord," looking with Jeremiah (31:31) for the "new covenant," which God was to make with the House of Israel. Already our Redeemer realized the body broken and the blood shed, and as the bread is broken and the wine poured out, He lays hold of the type of the past as a symbol of the time that is at hand. The rapid course of events was to lead to the smiting of the Shepherd, and the sheep would be scattered. Yet the eating together when "My body" and "My blood" were partaken of might stand in memory as a bond to unite the disciples to one another and to Him. Therefore "Do this in remembrance of Me," He says. Egypt is past; here is a new dispensation, a world deliverance just at hand; so He seeks to supplant the lamb of Egypt's hurried feast by the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

That the outward partaking was not of itself effective as a means of grace appears with all too tragic certainty from the immediate treachery of Judas, even though the cup was blessed by Him whose life was blessing beyond all that the world has seen. That such outward observance was not essential to the receiving of the Holy Spirit and salvation in its fulness appears from the filling with the Spirit at Pentecost; and if we think of these recipients as having eaten with the disciples, then at least we must say that those of Caesarea upon whom the Holy Spirit fell in the house of Cornelius were Spirit-filled believers prior to the administration of any ordinance; since He came "on them even as on us at the beginning."

And since the sacrament did not save Judas when it was blessed by Him who is the Prince of Life, how shall we ever ascribe to it a function of salvation? As Peter, having baptized Simon Magus, presently turned on him and declared him to be in the "gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity," his heart "not right with the Lord."

So then neither of these principal ordinances of our sister churches is efficient in and of itself; and like the Supper, the ordinance of Baptism is the occasion of wide differences of opinion among those practicing it. Immerse, say some, using a single or three-fold immersion, some with a backward movement, and others face downward; others practice attusion or pouring, while a third group is satisfied with the sprinkling of a few drops. Some declare baptism essential to salvation while others make it a simple rite of fellowship and symbol of the grace received at conversion; those who insist on immersion say that the sprinkling is a mere concession to a superstitious view of a necessity of baptism for salvation; whereas, since this necessity does not exist, there is no excuse for the adoption of a mere form that does not mean baptism,—the burial with Christ, followed by a rising with Him.

Then for some the water must be limited in amount and be consecrated or blessed, while for others a running stream or the open sea is essential; others accept a pool, a baptistery, a font, a basin. For some the act is a single simple rite, with others a highly developed ritual, making the widest departures and involving much that would have been impossible for the rugged Baptizer in the Jordan, or the wayfaring Philip and his Ethiopian convert, or for Paul and the Philippian jailer. And neither with such or any other outward baptism did Jesus ever baptize any; but He promised the baptism of the Holy Spirit and His gift to all who desire Him; and "Faithful is He that hath promised, who also will do it."

These observances then stand only as shadows and types, and are partaken of unworthily and to condemnation unless the partaker be already in communion with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by the baptism of the Holy Spirit and His indwelling through the Word.

But what shall we say of the words of Paul, who tells of having received from the Lord the narrative of the events of this last Passover evening, and tells the Corinthian Christians that as often as they eat and drink they do show forth the Lord's death till He come? It is only in Luke's Gospel and this letter of Paul that the words, "This do in remembrance of Me," are to be found. The common sources open to the earlier Gospels either did not have these words, or their writers did not take them over. Luke gathered his account from whatever sources his careful and painstaking research could discover; and the likeness of his words to Paul's suggests that they either used a common source or that one of them had it from the other. The latter idea is adopted by a number of commentators, from the earliest time to the present, who think of Luke as having learned through Paul of this account, as of other incidents of which Paul had obtained knowledge in his contact with the brethren. So here we may think of but one source and a common expression, and not two,—that Paul did indeed receive it of the Lord, but as a partner in the riches of those who knew Jesus in the flesh, whose duty and privilege it was to "Go, preach," the divine economy being unviolated by a miraculous revelation where it is the place of the human agent to do His will.

"This do in remembrance of Me." Think again of the need of shifting the thought from a remembrance of Egypt to a regard of the passing events so soon to stand in the memory of that little group as the last hours of fellowship before the Crucifixion, and we will see how earnest was the purpose and how deep the need of our Lord to use the present opportunity to fix the impression once for all.

A new Covenant was being established. The old ceremonial days were at an end. Yet Judaism was not dead; doubtless these believers would only gradually let go of its forms and types; so, says Paul, the teaching of our Lord as to the Passover is this,—that "as oft as ye drink, let it be in remembrance of Me." It is the Lord's death that is the availing sacrifice,—not the offering of the Paschal lamb; and in the eating and drinking now, and as oft as ye do it,—not commanding that it be done, but as oft as ye do it,—let it be a manifestation, a commemoration, of the true sacrifice,—until He come. Then when they might find that all outward things had passed away, and all become new in Christ, they would know themselves living witnesses and temples of God, not needing to go through with a rite that Moses had taught, but worshipping in Spirit and Truth, as the Master taught. For, says Paul again, "The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." And "If ye died with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why as though living in the world do ye subject yourselves to ordinances?" For the dispensation of ordinances He hath taken out of the way, "having nailed it to the Cross."

Another consideration arises if we would make Jesus' conduct at the Passover a binding thing for the Christian Church for all time, and that is as to the washing of feet. No penalty was declared if one of those present failed to drink of the cup, though he said, "Drink ye all of it;" and Mark adds: "And they all drank of it." But to Peter He said as to the washing of the feet: "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me." And then recurring to this action afterward,—as He did not to the Supper,—He said, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example, that ye also should do as I have done to you." How shall we insist that an inference in the one case is binding, while we reject the formal instruction in the other?

But if we see in this washing of the feet an expression, an illustration, of the meaning of the words, "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister;" and of the words, "Let him that is chief become as he that doth serve;" then may we also see in this designation of the bread and the cup an effort of our Lord to show His disciples in that supreme moment of their companionship that the type of the centuries was now to find its antitype, and that instead of dwelling on the distant past, they were in this evening's communion to gather a view of the great sacrifice of which they were so soon to be the sole understanding witnesses, proclaiming it as the ground of the remission of the sins of the whole world.

"As the Father hath sent Me, so send I you," He tells them. "Go, preach, making disciples of all nations;" but "Tarry ye in Jerusalem until endued with power from on high." How His desires went out to this little band, sole repository of the supreme revelation of the Father's love, now in the end of the ages made known to a few of the common people of Judea and Galilee. But they are not to be left alone; another Comforter is promised; and He Himself is to come again. And only as they receive Him, abide in Him, are baptized with the Holy Spirit, know and live in the "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism" can the work be done,—the salvation of the world, the winning of the lost to our Lord and His Christ.

For this work, communion we must have, eating the flesh and drinking the blood; baptism we must receive, being filled with the Spirit, whose temple we are; but the method of their administration, and the times and the occasions we leave to Him whose we come to be when we accept Him, having received power to become sons of God; whose cup we also drink; and with whose baptism we also are baptized; not by the hand of man, or by any intermediary, but through and by Him who said "I will pour out My Spirit upon all flesh." "I will come in and sup with him and he with Me."

THE LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE

By L. L. HOBBS.

I note with interest Charles F. Dole's thoughtful paper in the last American Friend, and observe his fear that Friends who give support to the League to Enforce Peace are doing so at the risk of compromising the teaching of the Society of Friends on the subject of war. This fear does not seem to me to be well founded. Nor do I see anything depressing or alarming in the paper by Allen D. Hole which appeared Fourth month 27th. On the contrary, I was pleased to see the different phases of the subject presented in some detail and with the liberal spirit shown towards people who are trying to find what is the right attitude to assume respecting the movement known as "The League to Enforce Peace." William Penn's scheme for the Peace of Europe could not be called unfriendly; and there is nothing in the League to Enforce Peace more forceful than Penn's proposition.

It is hardly necessary I should think to take space or time to show how the League to Enforce Peace is not a war league, but is designed to force nations that are in the league in case of differences to take time to deliberate by applying to courts of arbitration in certain cases, and in others to a committee of conciliation and recommendation. It might just as well be called a League to Enforce delay and deliberation. Of course there is a bare possibility that a nation although a signatory to the league would be so lost to its duty as a member of the league and so utterly astray as to its own protection, as to fly to arms without allowing investigation, and thus bring upon itself the absolute certainty of the hostility of all the other members of the league.

If we grant, as we must, that there is a door open for resort to force, the purpose of the force is not to engage in war, but to prevent war, and properly comes under the designation of prevention of war. Whether nations may combine to enforce peace among themselves may be changed into other questions, viz., Is the organization of the people of the earth into groups as states and nations necessary for civilization and the highest development and happiness of mankind; or, can the supreme welfare of the race be best brought about by individualism and the resultant isolation and anarchy? Is a group or state or nation of more or less value than an individual? Or is it thought necessary to wait until every member of society consents to peace before we can have peace?

I think the settlement of international disputes by arbitral justice should be brought about by international law as soon as possible; and the law to be effective will have to be enforced in much the same way as the law of prohibition of the liquor traffic is enforced today in North Carolina. The ideal of prohibition floating about in men's minds would not close a saloon. Neither will the mere sentiment of peace enforce itself among the peoples of the earth. We must have the sentiment enacted into law, and the law must be enforced.

DRUNKENNESS

By SAMUEL G. DIXON, M. D. LL. D.

(Commissioner of Health of Pennsylvania in "Spunk," a paper published by the patients in the Penna. State Sanatoria, for the treatment of tuberculosis. Sent us for publication by Dr. John J. Mulloney, Ass't Chief Medical Inspector of Pennsylvania.)

Man's getting drunk is to be likened unto the opening of the draft doors under the fire-box of a locomotive and generating a high steam pressure, opening the throttle and letting everything go until the machine is on a mad race through town and country, crushing whatever comes in the way, let it be man or beast, or maybe it will smash itself to a helpless mass.

If the tracks are clear the machine may run until its fire box, the stomach, burns out, or a steam pipe, a blood vessel, bursts or a valve gives way and the locomotive or the human body becomes a useless wreck and a burden in the way.

In the case of the locomotive the suffering is confined to the living beings it runs down, but in man not only the beings he injures or destroys but he himself suffers after he has irreparably injured his physical body and mental powers. He may lose an arm, cripple his stomach, blood vessels or mind, and become a charge on his family or the community.

In the case of the locomotive it is only a piece of uncontrolled inanimate machinery, but in man it often means setting to run amuck a piece of the most inventive animal life ever recorded in history. When drunk he may spend his last cent on foolish things and leave a hungry family at his home. He may kill his best friend, violate a trust, throw a bomb, send a great passenger ship to the bottom of the sea, or even incite a war of Nations.

A drunken man is the most dangerous demoralizing factor in civilized life. The wild beast of the forest is a play-thing in comparison. He sets all laws at naught and becomes an instrument of the devil. Man crazed by any kind of mental over-exertion or drunkenness, like a rabid beast, is a menace to every one with whom he comes in contact.

The wild dash of the mind and body during the stage of over-stimulation may be fascinating to the individual but, when the inevitable reaction comes, death may ensue or sometimes that which is worse, returning consciousness bring a realization of a horrible crime committed never to be undone. At least body and mind are weakened and less able to control the insane desire to exhilarate again and again until untimely death ends a life that might have been a boon to humanity in some useful path over which its race might have been run.

Some temperaments become sloth-like and are oblivious to the past and reckless as to what is to come. In such the harm to them and others comes through neglected duties.

Drunkenness is over-stimulation that destroys normal conditions, it may even be occasioned by the psychology of a crowd. There are various stimulants that will make one drunk.

AGAIN THE QUAKERS

(Under the above title the Berlin Tageblatt of April 28 publishes the following article, the translation of which by Philip W. Furnas has been sent us by Paul J. Furnas.)

Dr. Elizabeth Rotten writes to us:

"Perhaps, in addition to the article about the work of the Quakers published in your morning edition of April 26th, your esteemed journal will permit us space for a short allusion to the related work being quietly but actively carried on in Germany, opportunity to speak about which more widely has, up to the present time, been granted almost alone in your columns.

"The activity of the Society for the Information and help of Germans in Foreign countries and Foreigners in Germany is related to that of the Quakers, because in Germany too, after the out-break of the war, a small group of people felt the inner command to serve all those oppressed fellowmen who belong to a nation at the present time hostile, who had found a second home, and a place to carry on their education or business among us, related also for the reason that by the good offices of neutrals sanctioned by the authorities and entirely outside of all politics, fine threads of mutual helpfulness, exercised from purely human motives, are ceaselessly vibrating between us and the Quakers, who have given to their more beautiful name—that of Friends, who recognize no enemy—a new and profound meaning. Upon our request they helped a German boy who could not return with his mother to remain in school without paying tuition and later to find escort to Germany; they bring families and persons without friends who have given out no news of themselves for a long time into connection with their relatives. They form a living bond between those interned and their families at home when the latter complain that the camp letters do not satisfy them, and upon our application the Friends visit them and write in detail about them.

"By their activity they raise some 20,000 marks ($5,000) each month in their own country, securing this not alone among Quakers, and they assure us that no means of persuasion aids them more in the task than a statement of our work for foreigners in Germany which is being carried on in the same spirit. Our task is smaller but broad enough, for citizens of almost all of the nations at war,—among them many women and children of German birth,—whom both external and internal bonds detain in our country, find counsel and help at our hands.

"Men and women of known and unknown names have united to give moral and financial support to this work of practical Christian Helpfulness. But there is a pressing need for new Friends, new enthusiasm, and more money in order to deal effectively with only the most burning need and to give new impetus to our work by proclaiming throughout the country the work of the Quakers for our sufferers. On that account let everyone who feels our spirit open his hands to us or think of some means of help. Information may be obtained by word or letter at our office, Berlin, Number 24 Mondbijouplatz 31.

"The Society for Information and Help has united with a large number of German Benevolent Societies. To the Board of Directors belong among others, Professor Baumgarten, Kiel; Professor Dr. Blaschko; Frau Minna Cauer; Staatssekretar a. D. Dernbarg, Winkel.; Geh. Oberregierungsrat Dr. Kaufmann; Präsident des Reichsversicherungsamtes, Fürstbischoflicher Delegat Propst Dr. Kleineidam; Professor Dr. Felix Liebermann; Geh. Regierungsrat Professor Dr. Morf; Professor D. Martin Stade."

DO WE REALLY TRUST GOD?

How often we take things to God and take them back again! Then we wonder why our troubles in connection with them do not cease. Perhaps if we should try the plan of really leaving with God the things that we take to Him, we should find our life a wondrous surprise of freedom, and joy, and power, and victory. Dr. Maltbie B. Babcock once said. "What we can take to God we can trust to God." That puts it very simply; and anyone can do this who will. Moreover, as Doctor Babcock reminds us, we are not limited in what we can take to God, for "in everything... let your requests be made known unto God." This sweeping invitation just guarantees our entire life. Have we yet dared to take it at its full meaning—to really trust God?

WITH THE CHILDREN

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE

We'll begin with a box, and the plural is boxes;
But the plural of ox should be oxen, not oxes.
Then one fowl is goose, but two are called geese;
Yet the plural of mouse should never be meese.
You may find a lone mouse or a whole nest of mice;
But the plural of house is houses, not hices.
If the plural of man is always called men,
Why shouldn't the plural of pan be called pen?
The cow in the plural may be cows or kine,
But a cow if repeated is never called kine;
And the plural of vow is vows, not vine.
And if I speak of a foot and you show me your feet,
And I give you a boot, would a pair be called beet?
If the singular's this and the plural is these,
Should the plural of kiss be nicknamed keese?
Then one may be that, and three would be those,
Yet hat in the plural would never be hose,
And the plural of cat is cats, not cose.
We speak of a brother and also of brethren;
But though we say mother, we never say methren.
The masculine pronouns are he, his, and him;
But imagine the feminine, she, shis, and shim.
So the English, I think, you all will agree,
Is the most wonderful language you ever did see.

In the Wrong Place

Little Josephine gathered up her doll and playthings one day and told her mother that she was going to visit her best friend, a dear old lady who dearly loved to see her. The mother only had time to call after her: "Be quiet, and don't forget what you should say when you leave!"

"No, mother," came a voice from the other side of the street, as the little figure with doll's legs hanging from the arms ran up to a big front door, and on tiptoe reached up to the big brass knocker.

The friend opened the door, and little Josephine, anxious to do her mother's bidding, stepped in, and said: "Good afternoon, Mrs. Adams! I have had a very pleasant visit, thank you." Then her mind was free, and Josephine and her hostess had a delightful time.—Youth's Companion.

WHAT COULD IT HAVE BEEN?

A little four-year-old girl was enjoying her first visit in the country; and while playing near a brook, made the acquaintance of a specimen of the fauna of the region which she could not name. After carefully observing it for some time, she ran into the house, exclaiming: "Oh, grandma, I saw something so funny down there! It puts its hands and its feet in its pockets and swallowed its head. What is it?"—Harper's Magazine.

THE HIGHER LIFE

Trust In God

Life's bitter trials, earth's despair,
The darkest sorrows crush me not;
To Thee my weight of woe I bear,
Great God, Thou guardian of my lot,
My bosom finds in Thee alone
Its grandest strength, its sweetest balm;
And, sheltered by Thy mighty throne,
I conquer, I am brave and calm.

I know Thy mercy changeth pain
To joy and blessedness and peace;
All worldly loss is holy gain—
A rapture that can never cease.
With thanks I taste Thy bounteous store,
Though oft my cross may heavy be;
I, like a little child, adore,
For Thou, my Father, leadest me.

Bright hope sustains and comforts all
Who seek Thee, Lord, in faithfulness;
Not cruel death can them appal,
Nor make their mystic transports less.
O Father, I shall ever praise
Thy wisdom, Thy salvation great;
With voice eternal as Thy days
Proclaim Thou art compassionate.

—Hymns of Denmark.

Enthusiastic Service

Since it requires the conversion of a dozen or a score of souls to excite any special interest in a church, and since the Lord tells us that "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth," it is evident that the angels are more enthusiastic over the world's salvation than we are. They no doubt have a clearer conception of the value of a soul than we have, and this is one thing that we should cultivate, if we would be characterized by that earnest enthusiasm which is worthy of the cause to which we have been called. The angels also have a wider view of the world and its need, and this is a subject which we should study more thoroughly. The most enthusiastic workers in the local church are those who are most deeply interested in Foreign Missions and best informed concerning the needs of men throughout the world. But more significant still, the angels have a closer view of Christ. This is the principal secret of their enthusiastic joy. If we live close to Christ our service will be enthusiastic.—Church Advocate.

The Spirit and the Book.

In a testimony meeting a few years ago an old lady, relating her experience, said: "I am reading the Bible for the eighth time, but to me it is a new Book." We received her into the church a few months previous at the age of sixty-eight, but for most of that time she had been a student of the Word of God. She was an intelligent woman and had found intellectual pleasure in reading the Bible but had no appreciation of its spiritual power and beauty. To her its real meaning had no value and no appeal. But having been regenerated by the Spirit and entered upon the Christian life, it was no longer Moses and David and Isaiah and John and Paul, and the host of them—for those disappeared like figures in a dissolving view—but God's Word. The Prophets, the Psalms, the Gospels, the Epistles—all became luminant, glowing, transfigured. Behind all were meanings, Divine, hidden in the passages, which can only be revealed by the Spirit. Apart from the Spirit the Bible is no more than any other book, and it is only through the Spirit's presence that the Bible becomes the Word of God.—Northern Christian Advocate.

THE HOUR BEAUTIFUL

By RHODA JANE DICKINSON.

Why should communion with Christ be the most beautiful part of the day?

Because I open the door to receive my best Friend, who has been standing without, waiting to enter.

Because his presence at once makes my "better self" supreme, for I can appear nothing save what I am, for I know that—

He knows me far better than I know myself.

Understands me as no one of my friends.

Pardons every wrong I have committed in every thought, word, or deed.

Encourages me in every desire to do that which is pure, beautiful, and good.

Makes me forget the wrong and injuries done me, for he puts the spirit of love in my heart.

How can I help being happy when I know that God, my Friend, my Father, my Saviour, is only love? That he cares so much he loves even me?

THE PRESENCE OF GOD IN PUBLIC WORSHIP

The supreme achievement of public worship is the realization of God in the midst of the congregation. When this is accomplished the most wonderful things come to pass; the great truths of religion become vividly real, the sorrowful are comforted, belief becomes easy, weary bodies are rested, sinners turn to God, every one is refreshed and strengthened from heaven.

And the assurance from our Lord himself is that where two or three are met in his name, there is he in the midst of them; not will be, but is. We have but to assume this truth, to act upon it, to see that our motives are pure, in order to realize the divine Presence in every service of worship.

The two or three, or the many of a greater fellowship, coming humbly and loyally in the name of Christ, have it also in their power to bring this realization of God to the entire congregation, so that the most indifferent shall depart from the house of God with subdued and purified hearts, when the service is ended.—Worth M. Tippy.

A PRAYER FOR THE FAMILY

Lord, behold our family here assembled. We thank Thee for the place in which we dwell, for the love that unites us, for the peace accorded us this day, for the hope with which we expect the morrow; for the health, the work, the food and the bright skies that make our lives delightful; for our friends in all parts of the earth. Purge out of every heart the lurking grudge. Give us grace and strength to forbear and to persevere. Offenders, give us the grace to accept and forgive offenders. Forgetful ourselves, help us to bear cheerfully the forgetfulness of others. Give us courage and faith and the quiet mind. Spare us to our friends, soften us to our enemies. Bless us, if it may be, in all our innocent endeavors. If it may not, give us strength to encounter that which is to come, that we be brave in peril, constant in tribulation, temperate in wrath. We beseech of thee this help and mercy for Christ's sake.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

THE PRIZE OF PRAYER

"Life is like the summer's day; and in the first fresh morning we do not realize the noonday heat, and at noon we do not think of the shadows lengthening across the plain, and of the setting sun, and of the advancing night. Yet, to each and all, the sunset comes at last, and who have made most of the day are not unlikely to reflect most bitterly how little they have made of it. Whatever else they may look back upon with thankfulness or with sorrow, it is certain that they will regret no omissions of duty more keenly than neglect of prayer; that they will prize no hours more than those which have been passed, whether in private or in public, before that throne of justice and of grace upon which they hope to gaze throughout eternity."—Canon Liddon.

REWARDS OF PRAYER

In prayer we come nearest God. We realize His presence. Our wills come into harmony with His will. We almost see His face and hear His voice. And we carry away this consciousness of God to go with us through the day.

Prayer is the school in which we learn the mind of God. We not only speak to Him, but He speaks to us. Prayer should be as much listening as talking. What a privilege thus to enroll ourselves as pupils in the school of the greatest Teacher!

Prayer gives us confidence and courage. It places at our side the all-powerful One. It takes our burdens from our shoulders and places them upon Him. It puts weapons in our hands. It clothes us with armor which cannot be pierced.—Amos R. Wells, in Christian Endeavor World.

ONE LOOK FROM THE FACE OF JESUS

Peter did not turn first and look upon Jesus, but when he caught the gaze of his Master and saw the loving, longing look of mercy, compassion and pity, he was so overwhelmed that the tears of penitence flowed like a flood. Peter did not desire to see his Master, whom he had denied and forsaken; he just cast one more glance at the passing throng leading Jesus across the open court, when suddenly the glory of Jesus' face shone upon him. It must have been a look of rebuke as well as of love. Perhaps it was the wrath and love of the Lamb of God mingled in piteous pleading.

Peter first came to himself; then he came to Jesus, sobbing alone in that sacred hour of repentance. One look from Christ, like a lightning flash, can reveal the soul to itself by the horrors of remorse, shame and a torturing conscience. Jesus is terrible in His gentleness in order to save. He need not speak a word—only look!—E. W. Caswell.

SOUL VALUES

"He that winneth souls is wise" (Prov. II:30). It is said that Daniel Webster once took off his hat to a little boy. When asked why he did so, he replied, "I did so when I thought of the wonderful possibilities wrapped up in that little brain and upon what it would unfold in its generation." Is it not a loftier deed to win a soul for Jesus than a world for self? A celebrated writer when dying, said to his wife, "In thy face, I have seen eternity." So it was with the dying Greek, who, seeing love mantling the face of his beloved, exclaimed, "We shall meet again, Clemanthe." The soul of man, a part of God and going back to God, is of infinite value.

If we could see eternity in every face, immortality imaged upon every soul, would we not seek with greater enthusiasm to gather these precious gems for Christ's crown? Seek as pearl divers do for the precious pearls?

A feeling of diffidence, delicacy, embarrassment and fear of giving offense, keeps many a Christian from the wisdom of soul-winning. Wilton Merle Smith, while a student in college, made a resolution to win one every day for Christ. On the first day, evening came without keeping his promise. Becoming desperate, he hurried up three flights of stairs to the room of a student friend. "What's the matter, Billy?" said the student. "I have come to ask you why you don't become a Christian." The young man, bursting into tears, cried out, "I have been waiting several hours for you to come and ask me that question."—Edwin Whittier Caswell.

OBEDIENCE TO CHRIST

The disciple must carry his Master's teaching into all spheres, not only into his private life, but also into his business and his politics. It is in our own lives that we have the nearest and freest field for acting as disciples of Christ. Those only rightly obey Christ who believe on Him, who acknowledge Him as Master because they trust Him as Saviour.—P. J. MacLagan.

Die when we may, I want it said of me by those who knew me best, that I always plucked a thistle, and planted a flower when I thought a flower would grow.—Abraham Lincoln.

SARAH LINDLEY AND HER MEXICAN COMPANIONS.

When it became necessary for the missionaries at Matehuala, Mexico, to leave the field, Sarah Lindley was accompanied by two Mexican girls, who also went with her to Banés, Cuba, when she temporarily undertook the work at the latter station two years ago. These two young women, Josefa Sanchez and Luisa Guijarro, previous to their removal to Cuba, spent a year in Earlham College and, therefore, have many friends in this country. A late report from Raymond Holding tells of the recent movements of Miss Lindley and her Mexican friends.

"About the middle of June, our force of workers was reduced by three. Miss Sarah Lindley and Josefa Sanchez left for their respective homes, Miss Lindley going to Elizabethtown, Indiana, and Miss Sanchez to Matehuala, Mexico. Luisa Guijarro, the other Mexican teacher, was married soon after school was out, after having completed two years of school work here. The marriage of Miss Guijarro to Herman Nieto, which took place on the night of June 16th, was simple, but very attractive. It took place at the beautiful home of the groom's brother. The parlor was appropriately decorated. The ceremony was such as is usually used among Friends. Mr. Nieto is one of the most successful merchants of Banés and a faithful attender upon the Banés meeting.

WITH YOUNG FRIENDS AT CEDAR LAKE.

Three strong mission classes this year at the Young Friends Conference to be held at Cedar Lake, Indiana, August 4th to 13th, will give an opportunity for information and inspiration which a great many of us have long been wanting. The class on Mexico will be led by W. Irving Kelsey, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, for twelve years a missionary in the southern republic. The text to be used in this class, "Mexico Today," by Winton, is the book which the Young Friends Board and the Board of Missions are recommending for use in Friends study classes next year. This class at Cedar Lake will, therefore, be of special value to those who may be called upon later for study class leadership.

Miss Sato, a Japanese lady, will be in charge of the class on "Japan." Those who know Miss Sato say she is a most interesting and inspiring speaker, who has a thorough knowledge of Japan and a passionate longing for the spread of Christianity among her people. Her class is sure to be a popular one.

The third mission class at Cedar Lake will deal rather with the missionary ideal and missionary methods than with any particular field. The leader, Charles E. Tebbetts, general secretary of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, has had a wide experience in conference work and as a speaker and leader, not only among Friends, but in various interdenominational movements. The topic to be followed in the class is "The Program of Jesus in the Church Today." The book, "The Sunday School Teacher and the Program of Jesus," by Trull and Stowell, will be used in part as a text.

"If you want to know about foreign missions, ask our young people," has been a saying in one of our sister denominations. How soon may this same thing be truly said among Friends?

EARTHQUAKE ON MAY ELEVEN

Alta H. Hoyt has recently written to Friends in this country of a recent earthquake of unusual violence. "On May 11th," she says, "we had the hardest earthquake that any of the missionaries at Kaimosi have ever felt in Africa. It came about 7:45 in the morning, while we were having breakfast, a much later breakfast than usual. There was a very deep rumble, followed by the trembling, which was more like a wave or heave. It was enough to make all of our faces turn pale. It caused quite a little sensation among the natives also and it was especially interesting to me to talk with them about it. The old men believe that it was caused, as they all are, by the spirits of the dead fighting with each other. They call an earthquake 'death,' and consider it an omen that sickness or trouble is coming. That evening, in all the districts about us, they sacrificed sheep to appease the spirits and the next day they set apart as a day of rest, as is their custom. However, many went ahead and worked, especially the younger people, and when we asked them why they worked, they would reply, 'We do not believe as we once did. Since the white people came here and taught us about God, we know He rules the world.'"

BOYS OF HAPPY GROVE NEED MORE ROOM.

When the splendid new building for the boys' department of the Happy Grove School was first occupied, in January, 1915, the basement, which is almost entirely above the ground, was not finished off. Since that time, only the first and second floors have been used. The school now finds itself seriously cramped in its present quarters. This school was the first boys' school on the island to furnish industrial training. For the sake, therefore, of its influence upon the development of education in Jamaica, the Mission feels it is of the utmost importance to provide generously for the requirements of this school. A recent letter from Wendell G. Farr, the superintendent of the school, speaks of the immediate need for more room. "The building is on a hillside, so that with some excavating it will be possible to make a full basement. This is the space planned for the industrial classes and bath-rooms. The boys and I have dug out the easier part, about one-sixth, and part of this is cemented. We very much need the rest of the space. The tailoring class has to work in the dining room; and the woodworking classes, eleven boys, have the cemented space in the basement, about 10 by 18 feet, for their work. We have the running water at the building, but no place as yet to put in a bath-room. The boys can do some of the digging, but much of the earth to be removed is hard grit and there is some stone, which is beyond their strength. Judging from the work already done, I have estimated that the excavating and materials for floors, walls, doors, etc., would cost about $250; then there would be pipes and shower heads and valves for bath-room. The boys in the manual training classes could do most of the work of putting in floors, partitions, etc." A total expenditure of about $350 would supply the need to which Wendell Farr refers, besides making it possible to put in the necessary drains and do some painting which is much needed.

AT PORT ANTONIO.

Morning prayers at the mission home in Port Antonio is a cosmopolitan gathering. Children from the day school across the road, under a native teacher, come in at 8:30 with the result that, as Mary White says: "In our morning devotions we have at least four Chinese, five East Indians, and a number of black children, beside our own household."

EASTERN AVENUE, LYNN, MA S.

We have received the following account of Eastern Avenue Friends' Meeting, Lynn, Massachusetts. A large photograph of the members appeared on these pages three weeks ago. This account is embodied in a letter that is being sent to interested Friends as follows:

Dear Friend:

Two years ago Tom A. Sykes came to East Lynn, to engage in pastoral work, at the Eastern Avenue Friends' Meeting. Prior to that time the attendance at the services and Bible School had been quite small, and the outlook, with no pastor or resident minister and with the lack of financial support, was so discouraging that there seemed to be no alternative but to suspend. Under his ministry and leadership, with the assistance of other workers who have co-operated with him, a steady and healthy growth has been experienced.

The enclosed picture, from a photograph taken in the month of May and published in The American Friend, three weeks ago is a group made up of members of the school and congregation.

To accommodate the growing school, which now numbers 160, more room and better equipment are necessary. To this end an appeal is being made for a subscription towards raising a fund of $5,000, nearly one-half of which has already been subscribed. This is the estimated cost of making necessary repairs on the building, re-seating the assembly room, and providing additional accommodations for school and community purposes; a new heating plant must be installed in place of the old furnaces, now past service. The current expenses, including pastoral support, are met by weekly offerings, nearly all the members and regular attendants contributing.

The Church Extension Committee of the New England Yearly Meeting of Friends has given to the work its support, and to some extent has assisted financially. Our minister, Tom A. Sykes, and his efficient wife, are serving the church and the community most acceptably. The location is in a growing residential section of the city, in the midst of comfortable homes, of families, in most cases, with children. The possibilities for future growth and development are large, and we feel warranted in making every effort to provide the needed increase of facilities, without hindering the work by putting a burden on the people of small means who have recently become interested.

A contribution, or subscription, using the blank enclosed, will be greatly appreciated. Subscriptions may be made payable at a later date if preferred.

Having been Superintendent of the Bible School for the past two years, I have had an opportunity to observe, at close range, the excellent work that is being done in all the departments, and I heartily commend it to your favorable notice, and trust you will feel like responding.

Sincerely,

GEO. C. HERBERT,

CENTER QUARTERLY MEETING.

Center Quarterly Meeting, which is regularly held at the Friends church at Wilmington, Ohio, will be held in Old Center meeting house on August 5 and 6. The history of Center meeting dates back more than a century and the house which was erected in 1805 is conceded to be the first place for worship built in Clinton County. It is believed that the first house was without door or floor. In December 1803 James Murray deeded fifteen acres of land to the Trustees of the Society of Friends on Todds' Fork." A Monthly Meeting was established at Center in 1807. Soon after this another and larger log house containing two rooms was built.

The first Quarterly Meeting at Center was held March 13, 1826. The present brick building was completed in 1828. The house is 50x80 feet and has two compartments as was customary in the construction of meeting houses at that time. A few years ago one end of the house was remodeled to meet the demands of the present day. The other end was left untouched, the old raised seats remaining intact.

The committee on arrangements appointed from the Quarterly Meeting has repaired the old part and reports everything in readiness for the meeting in August. Albert J. Brown of Indianapolis will preach the sermon on Saturday, after which there will be a basket dinner. In the afternoon the business of the Quarterly Meeting will be attended to. On Sabbath two sermons have been arranged, one before dinner and the other in the afternoon. Friends are eagerly looking forward to this meeting and expect a large gathering.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

The fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of D. W. and Amanda Bundy of Woodland, Idaho, will occur on August 28. It is hoped that their friends and relatives will remember them by letter or postal card greetings.

30 Minutes.

3.—Leader who has notified a half dozen members during the previous week, asks a few leading questions of those best prepared. As he awakens discussion he calls for the opinion of those who have not studied the lesson. The leader should ask so straight a question that an answer will be necessary. If this does not bring a response from the most timid, let the leader advance a radical theory which he is sure the one questioned will oppose, press the wrong side until the answer comes. Demand discussion from those least prepared. Keep the half dozen reserves for ready reference and to start off the discussion on each point. A paper on the theme can be presented during the meeting. A debate will add variety and zest.

4.—Close the meeting with a time of devotion. Vocal prayer, provided it is of the spirit, is very valuable in this part of the meeting.

YOUNG FRIENDS' WORK IN NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Practically all the meetings in this section are conducted by a pastor who wears a long coat and dresses in the clerical way. The meeting houses are equipped with pulpits, "Amen Corners," and Choir lofts. The meetings are programmed, usually by the pastor and are evangelistic in character. Pentecostal hymns are more often used than any other. There is a time of public testimony and prayer in most of the meetings, with the pastor officiating. He often urges someone to pray or testify. Here and there one finds a meeting where a "period of silence" is observed. This is usually less than five minutes long. Once or twice a year a special revival service is held during which time practically all the "Old Time Camp Meeting" methods are resorted to. People are brought to the altar for conversion if they are "of the world," and for renewal if "backsliders," or for sanctification if they pose as good Christians. All are therefore included and everyone is expected to have his "feet planted on Higher Ground" during the meetings.

As far as one can see the Friends' Meetings in this section are little different from the Methodist meetings and in fact little is said about denominational lines, with the exception that each meeting tries to gain all the members it can. There is a growing interest however on the part of Young Friends to study Quaker history. They want to know just what we stand for and as they find out they begin to ask that some of these things be practiced. Pastors who see this tendency are encouraging rather than discouraging it. It is a little difficult to know why at first, but we must believe that for the most part pastors are going to do what the congregation wants and they are quick to read the signs of the times. Many of them too have made a study of Quakerism and are trying to lead the congregation to it as rapidly as possible.

With natural surroundings that should be conducive to a love of the beautiful, with a pride in bringing the best to the northwest, with financial thrift and a spirit of adventure continually spelling progress, there is every indication that the church will see the opportunity she has in actually reshaping society, politics and morals. She will no doubt become less afraid that she will compromise her standards when she offers a social remedy or speaks on a political question. There are already signs of a change. Some pastors are reading books on such subjects as the rural church re-made, and the city uplift-

THE SOCIETY AT BROOKLYN

To young people's societies who are endeavoring to arouse enthusiasm in missions, the plan that was successfully carried out in the Brooklyn young people's meeting may be of interest.

The society was divided equally into two teams, each with a captain. On a certain Sunday in February it was announced that these two teams would have a contest to see which side could read the greater number of pages of missionary books in twelve weeks. Each twenty-five pages read by any person counted as one point for his or her team. It was agreed that the losing side should banquet the winners at the close of the contest and also that penny boxes should be kept by everyone. A list of suggested books was posted with a short characterization of each book and the number of points it counted, such as "China's New Day," "India Awakening," "Thinking Black" etc. and these books were placed in the hands of the team leaders to circulate.

Throughout the whole time the interest was kept up by a weekly report of the leaders as to which side was ahead, for the teams were so nearly matched that first one side was ahead and then the other.

At the end of the twelve weeks a final report was given. One team had 716 points, the other 773 points, making a total of 37,175 pages read by the two teams together. According to the agreement, the losing side "banqueted" the winners and all the young people of the meeting were invited. A young man who had been a missionary in Turkey and in China gave a very interesting talk on some of his own experiences. Several members outlined a program of education, finance and prayer for missions for the coming year.

At a later meeting the penny boxes were opened and $10.35 in pennies was added to the society's regular gift to Margaret Holme. The enthusiasm that was shown during the contest did not end with the banquet, for many became so interested in the subject that they are still reading mission books.

Not to believe in good and in its final and complete victory is simply not to believe in God himself.

EVERY YEARLY MEETING AT CEDAR LAKE THIS YEAR

It is exceedingly important that every Yearly Meeting be represented at the Cedar Lake Conference this year. This is because we are planning to discuss the young people's problem in the Society from the point of view of all the Yearly Meetings. We hope to effect a closer organization among the various Meetings, draw up a financial plan and outline a program for the coming year's work that will be both practical and challenging. No Yearly Meeting can afford to be left out of this conference.

It is as important from the Young Friends' point of view as the Men's Conference or the Five Years Meeting itself. Thus far the Young Friends Movement has been advertising its work, creating a sympathy between the different Yearly Meetings and suggesting plans for work. This has mostly been done from the head office without any organic support from the local Meetings.

The time has come when we must be welded together as a body of Young Friends from coast to coast. Our Yearly Meeting Organizations must have more authority in the Five Years Body and it should be more closely connected with its constituents. This should be effected this year, that the experiment may become a precedent by the next Five Years Meeting.

Does the Church believe in her young people? Let her see to it that the expenses of a delegate are paid to the Cedar Lake Conference. Don't put the responsibility of this on some one else, undertake it yourself. If you can't go, help send some one. Look after this matter at once, as the conference convenes August 4-13. Yearly Meeting presidents, Field Secretaries and chairmen of Young Friends Committees are especially urged to come.

THOMAS E. JONES.

God in ways past human understanding is shaping the world anew. His judgments are abroad in the earth. His servants can only bow their heads and wait for Him to show them how He would have them set to work to repair the evil and ruin which human sin has wrought. It is certain that in His heart there are purposes of healing and revival exceeding men's highest hopes.—International Review of Missions.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Topic—"True Beauty and how to get it." Prov. 31:10-31.

Not all faces are beautiful, but many lives are so beautiful that they transform the most homely face. We can all live a beautiful life. In the legend of the "Great Stone Face" Hawthorne tells us how a great soul was formed by constantly looking at an ideal head formed by rocks on the side of a mountain. Ernest, by keeping his eyes on that face had transformed his own. It is the secret of the development of the soul. Men should live so much in the Secret of His Presence that we can bear His Image on our face.

Shakespeare says: "God has given you one face and you make yourselves another." The mind can make beauty or ugliness at will. A beautiful character will make beauty and poetry out of the prosiest environment, bring sunshine into the darkest home, and develop beauty and grace amid the ugliest surroundings. Christ was a great lover of the beautiful, especially in nature. Did He not say, "Consider the lilies of the field, they toil not, neither do they spin; yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these"? Every star that twinkles in the sky, every flower, bids us look behind it for its source, points us to the great Author of the beautiful.

"The vision that you hold in your mind, the ideal that is enthroned in your heart—this you will build your life by, this you will become." It is the quality of mind, of ideals, and not mere things, that make a man.

Whatever our vocation, we should resolve that we will not strangle all that is finest and noblest in us for the sake of the dollar, but that we will put beauty into our life at every opportunity.

"Beauty of character, charm of manner, attractiveness and graciousness of expression, a godlike bearing, are our birthrights. Yet how ugly, stiff, coarse and harsh in appearance and bearing many of us are! No one can afford to disregard his good looks or personal appearance. But if we wish to beautify the inner, for every thought and every motion shapes the delicate tracings of our face for ugliness or beauty. Inharmonious and destructive attitudes of mind will warp and mar the most beautiful features."

WHAT OTHERS SAY

The following sentences concerning The American Friend are culled from recent letters:

"I often think about thy splendid efforts for The American Friend and appreciate them."

I cannot do without The American Friend. I count the days each week until it comes."

"We greatly enjoy reading The American Friend."

As I know more of men I expect less of them and am ready to call a man a good man on easier terms than formerly.

CHURCH AT WORK

Amboy, Indiana—Wabash Quarterly Meeting, held at Amboy in June, was one of the best in many years. The attendance was larger than usual, and the following ministers from outside the limits of the Quarterly Meeting were present: Lemuel Middleton and wife, of Friendswood, Texas; Rufus King, of North Carolina; Ellis Wells, of Upland, Indiana, and Fred Tormohlen, of Van Wert, Ohio. All brought helpful messages. Fred Tormohlen spoke Saturday night, Sunday morning and Sunday night, bringing delightful and helpful messages each time. He served the Amboy meeting as pastor for two years and we are always glad to have him visit us.

Jonesboro, Indiana—All-day services were held at Jonesboro on July 23. It was made a home-coming day and there was a large attendance at all the services. Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, preached in the morning, President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, in the afternoon, while Truman C. Kenworthy, Superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting, was in charge of a union service at night, in which all churches of the town united. The occasion was utilized to raise the debt on the new church building, which was dedicated some weeks ago. It is a beautiful structure, well adapted to the needs of the meeting and cost altogether about $8,000. Outside of labor donated, the cost in money was $6,200, of which $2,000 remained unprovided for. Truman C. Kenworthy had charge of the financial program in the afternoon and the entire balance was easily raised. The success of the occasion, as well as the building of the new meeting house, was largely due to the splendid work of the pastor, Charles S. Dudley, who goes to another field next year. The meeting is looking forward with anticipation to the coming of the new pastor in the autumn, Charles R. Axton, of Kokomo.

Lynn, Indiana—The pastoral committee of the Friends church here has extended a call to Carl Miller to remain as pastor another year. He has done splendid work here during the past year and is wideawake to the needs of the church. The congregation has grown in numbers and spiritual interest under his care and we are praying God's blessing upon him during the coming year. Our prayer meetings are attended exceptionally well during these hot months. The young people are taking quite an interest in these meetings and this helps to keep up the interest among the older people.

Our Christian Endeavor is not very large, but is growing. Our Society is similar to many others in the finding of leaders, but a plan has been adopted which we hope will be accepted with much satisfaction. We are planning for a C. E. Rally soon and hope to have with us Thomas E. Kelly, from Canada, who is now working in the interests of Christian Endeavor in the limits of Indiana Yearly Meeting. A special collection is being sent to the Foreign Mission Board. The Sunday School is also progressing in many respects. The interest which our superintendent, John W. Carter, has shown for the last twelve years is remarkable and he has been re-elected unanimously to that position for another year. Union meetings are now being held and will continue through July and August. There is a good attendance at all these services.

Van Wert, Ohio—The pastoral committee of our meeting met on July 2 and considered the question of pastoral care for our meeting the coming year. It was the unanimous decision of our committee to retain the present pastor, Fred H. Tormohlen, another year. This action was presented to the congregation on the following Sabbath morning. A large congregation was present when the report was read and the meeting unanimously endorsed the action of the committee. The attendance and interest at our meetings have been much better and we are looking forward to greater blessings the coming year.

An old folks' service was held on July 16. This was felt to be one of the most helpful services to the meeting that has been held in recent years. Arrangements were made to bring in with automobiles all those who were not able to walk. The meeting was such a success that arrangements are now being made to hold a similar service in August.

West Richmond, Indiana—An interesting service was held at the West Richmond meeting on the morning of July 23. It was a service especially adapted to the young people and a large number of them were present. According to an arrangement made by the pastor, Charles E. Tebbetts, a number of young people read texts of scripture at the opening part of the meeting. The sermon was a sermon to young people and was devoted to the questions of the confession of sins, the confession of Christ and being witnesses for Him. At the close of the sermon four young girls were publicly welcomed from the C. E. into the active work of the church, two of these having come from the associate list, the other two having had no previous church affiliation, while four other girls, who were birthright members, came forward and gave public testimony of their desire to be known as active members of the church.

Whitewater, Richmond, Indiana.—This meeting has had a successful year. There has been a normal growth in the spiritual life and an intense desire on the part of all to honor their Savior and to bring others to a knowledge of the spiritual life. There has been a growth in numbers and attendance and the services have held up well during this summer weather. During the past year we have had no protracted meeting, but have had a constant revival at all the services with the result that there have been forty-eight conversions and renewals, with twenty-five additions to the church.

The C. E. Society is in good condition. The members will take up the efficiency chart work. The Society is a feeder to the church. The Sunday School is moving along nicely and prayer meetings are well attended. Many of the young people come to this service and are taking part. All departments of the meeting show a good growth both in efficiency and in the service rendered. We have bands of men appointed to go out two and two from the Big Brother class, while the women's class is doing a charitable work for the needy. This has been the secret of our success by the power of the in-dwelling Christ. To him be all the glory and praise. Orville E. Chance is pastor of the meeting and is doing excellent work.

South Glens Falls, N. Y.—This meeting was highly favored with the presence of the Cleveland Bible Institute Quartette on the evening of July 16. On the following evening they rendered their sacred concert, which was highly appreciated by all who heard them. The young men sang at the union open-air service in Glens Falls on Sabbath afternoon before a large gathering of people and many expressed their appreciation heartily. Any meeting that has the privilege of having this quartette can consider itself thrice blessed. The very presence of the boys is a benediction.

Dr. William H. Pritchard, who is the oldest son of Calvin W. Pritchard, well known to the older Friends throughout America, has been appointed to the superintendency of the Columbus, Ohio, State Hospital.

A Friends meeting has been organized at Santa Ana, California. Following a revival the attendance has increased from ten or twelve to twenty-five or thirty. Meetings are being held every Sabbath morning and evening.

An all day holiness meeting was held at the Highland Avenue Friends church at Columbus, Ohio, on July 19. Large audiences were present throughout the day and listened to Mr. Kirby, as he clearly and forcibly presented the doctrine of holiness.

Bunji Kida and family sailed from San Pedro for Seattle en route to Japan on July 6. They hope to open a Christian training school at Kobe, Japan, for the "picture brides" who come as strangers to America. They stopped at Berkeley over Sabbath, the 9th inst.—Pacific Friend.

A few weeks ago, Charles M. Woodman, who is spending the summer at his beautiful home at Shore Acres, Cape Elizabeth, Maine, was given a most pleasant surprise when almost the entire congregation from his meeting in Portland came out to spend the afternoon with him and his family. It was a most delightful occasion, and, before leaving, the members left in his possession a substantial sum of money in token of their appreciation of his services as pastor during these past years. He, with his family, will go to Richmond, Indiana, early in September to take up the pastoral work in West Richmond Monthly Meeting.

FRIENDS MISSIONARY ADVOCATE

The Friends Missionary Advocate for August is an Alaska number, and is brim full of valuable information about the work in that northern land. There are numerous illustrations and an extended article on "Friends Missions in Alaska" by B. S. Coppock of South Pasadena, California. There are two pages of extracts from letters of missionaries and a very readable article on "Esquimo Characteristics" by Wilson H. Cox of Long Beach, California. There is much other valuable material, all of which must be read to be appreciated.

The Advocate is an up to date magazine and is doing much to develop an increasing interest in mission work throughout the Five Years Meeting. Nearly every number is a special number devoted to a particular field and the reading of its pages month by month throughout the year is a missionary education in itself. Lenora M. Hobbs of Bloomington, Indiana, is editor, Eliza Armstrong Cox is editor emeritus and Olive Lindley is associate editor. Send your subscription of fifty cents per year to Ethel Kirk Calvert, Selma, Ohio.

LONDON YEARLY MEETING, 1916

The following extracts of Minutes accompany the Epistle by direction of the Yearly Meeting and are intended to be read in Meetings for worship:

38. In reviewing the present situation with special reference to the position created by the Military Service Acts, we have recognized how very varied are the forms which our advocacy of Peace and our witness for liberty of conscience may take.

While some feel it right to undertake some form of service deemed by the Tribunals to be of "national importance," others are led to refuse alternative service of any kind, maintaining that in their accustomed work, and in the spread of Peace principles, they are making their best offering to the nation. Appreciating this diversity of interpretation, we record our thankfulness for all who follow the truth as they are able to apprehend it."

We have listened to accounts of the treatment of some conscientious objectors. While we believe that these men are ready to suffer gladly for the truth and count it an honor to do so, we desire to express to them and their families our warm sympathy, and we ask Friends to do what they can to extend to them their support and spiritual encouragement.

We trust that their stand will be made widely known, and that it will go far to preserve that liberty of conscience, the present menace to which is so dark a stain upon our country.

43. We have realized as perhaps never before, that the duty before us now is to humble ourselves in the presence of God and to wait that He may reveal Himself. May we not believe that, as we thus wait, He whose foolishness is wiser and whose weakness is stronger than men, may make us partakers of His wisdom and strength. It is the time for man to be silent and for God to speak.

There is need to be patient, to possess our souls, to wait for the Divine Call. But this waiting is not to be aimless, hopeless waiting, but is to be vigilant and prayerful, in the belief that, in God's good time, guidance will come, and the next step will be made clear. And, as we thus wait, when the call is heard and the light is seen, even though they point to the path of pain and reproach, we shall be able to answer gladly and fearlessly to go forward.

89. Our attention has been drawn to the urgent need for seeing that the principles we enunciate in regard to war between nations are allowed to govern all our relationships in daily life. We need an applied Christianity which shall be supreme, and by which we shall order our lives instead of ordering them by the standard of custom or the dictates of personal convenience.

90. We urge Friends not to feel that our work is done. We must continue the quest. We must pray, think, study, wait, suffer. Day by day we must seek to re-consecrate ourselves to God, that so the life of Jesus Christ may be manifested, and His great reconciling work carried further and yet further among men.

This is our truest service.

It may be that some further duty may be laid upon one individual or another. If such a call be given, we hope that Friends will be quick to respond to it, and we recommend such Friends to appeal for the sympathy of their Monthly Meetings, using the avenue to service which is open to them in the system of liberation by Monthly Meetings.

139. In view of the Military Service Act, No. 3, which has just been passed, we re-affirm our entire opposition to Compulsory Military Service and our desire for the repeal of the Acts.

143. In bringing this Yearly Meeting to a close, we have again to acknowledge the good hand of our God upon us.

Last year, and in the adjourned Yearly Meeting in First Month, we examined in the light of recent events our ancient testimonies, especially that in regard to Peace, and were able to re-affirm them unhesitatingly.

This year we have tried to discover and be faithful to the implications of these testimonies.

It has at times seemed as though we were groping in the dark, as though there were no clear path for us to follow. But, as we watched and waited, guidance has come and we have been able to move forward. There is much more light to break forth for us. Let us be faithful to that which is given and tarry and pray, believing that it will grow ever brighter and brighter. As we thus place ourselves in God's hands waiting to receive, and ready to flash out His light, He may condescend to use us as His heralds, and give to us some word for the healing of the nations. Should He thus honor us—let us ever remember that the excellency of the power is of God, for of Him and through Him and to Him are all things, to whom be the glory for ever. Amen.

AT RAISIN VALLEY, MICHIGAN

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW

"The future religion of China will be a utilitarian one. It must have to do with life rather than with doctrine" is the opinion registered by Dr. John R. Hykes in the August number of The Homiletic Review. The Review has done a good service in securing this interview by Clayton Sedgewick Cooper, from the Secretary of the American Bible Society at Shanghai. Dr. Hykes is a veteran student of Chinese affairs and the questions he discusses are of deep interest to all who are concerned with the unfolding life of this remarkable country.

The department of Sermonic Literature is particularly strong and helpful. The contributions are by Rev. Andrew Gillies, Professor James Gilroy, D.D., Lyman Abbott, D.D., Rev. James Learmount, and Rev. Will Reason, M.A.

There is the usual number of brief outlines and helpful illustrations, followed by six pages of book reviews.

Published monthly by Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354-360 Fourth Avenue, New York. $3.00 a year.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON.

August 13.

Subject—The Grace of Giving.

Lesson—2 Corinthians 9.

Golden Text—In all things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20:35.

Paul was endeavoring to collect a considerable sum of money to be taken to Jerusalem to meet the growing financial needs there. It is probable too that he wanted to bind the two groups into a closer union by this token of interest on the part of the Gentile Christians. A number of churches had entered with zest into the undertaking, among them those of Achaia—the church at Corinth is the one to whom he was writing. The time for the actual collecting of the funds was at hand and Paul very much desired that all expectations be met. His message to them is a carefully worded request calculated to accomplish the end in view. It is a splendid example of tact and one which might be studied with great profit.

The collecting of funds for constructive undertakings is often a difficult problem. This is no new problem, it goes farther back than the New Testament period. A number of examples can be found in Old Testament history. There are a number of reasons for it. Self interests figure largely in the situation but often the people are not properly informed about the needs of a given cause, sometimes too the undertaking is beyond the resources of its supporters and burdens are assumed which are a hinderance to real progress. All undertakings should be carefully considered lest the venture bring shame and reproach.

Various methods of financing religious undertakings have been used. The giving of the tenth became the basis of the Hebrew system and was traced by their historians back to the time of Jacob. A New Testament passage suggests that on the first day of the week every man should lay by a sum in proportion as he has been prospered. Modern church methods have as a rule been based on still other methods. The result has been great confusion and disparity in giving. People as a rule give according to their interests in a cause. Soul stirring messages often secure record breaking offerings to be followed by periods of reaction. We seem to need a system which is free from fluctuation. This can best be brought about by a campaign of education. Every supporter of a cause should be fully informed of its needs and shown how he can give it his full and adequate support. For the church budget the duplex envelope system used in connection with the every member canvass visitation has worked wonders and is undoubtedly the best modern system.

The rewards of giving are uncertain. Some look for material gains as a result and are greatly disappointed. Others expect public praise and do not get it. A giver should understand that the cattle on a thousand hills are the Lord's—that all he possesses belongs to God and should be subject to God's call just as much as were the "talents" distributed by the Master to his servants subject to call on the Master's return. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. The rewards of cheerful giving are certain—a glad consciousness of rendering to God the returns of faithful service.

PRESIDENT OF WILMINGTON COLLEGE

The board of trustees of Wilmington College on July 21 elected J. Edwin Jay to the presidency of the college. The board and the friends of the institution are pleased to have President Jay retained as he has shown himself to be capable and has very acceptably discharged the duties of the office the past year.

The above news item has been sent to us by the secretary of the Wilmington College board of trustees and it will be pleasant news both to the friends of the college and to the friends of the newly elected head of that institution. The American Friend is glad to extend congratulations both to the college and to President Jay.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

The following letter was sent out July 8 from Cato Sells, U. S. Indian Commissioner, and is self-explanatory. To Superintendents and Other Employees of the Indian Service:

Your attention is invited to the following provision in the Indian Appropriation Act for this fiscal year, which is now a law and properly enforced will be very effective in protecting the Indians from intoxicating liquor:

"The provisions of sections twenty-one hundred and forty and twenty-one hundred and forty-one of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall also apply to beer and other intoxicating liquors named in the Act of January thirtieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven (Twenty-ninth Statutes at Large, page five hundred and six), and the possession by a person of intoxicating liquors in the country where the introduction is prohibited by treaty or Federal statute shall be prima facie evidence of unlawful introduction."

Your attention is further invited to the fact that under date of June 12, 1916, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of U. S. vs. Nice, overruled the Heff case (197 U. S. 488), and held that when lands are allotted and trust patent issued to Indians the Government does not lose its guardianship over them, and therefore, can prohibit the sale of liquor to them in violation of Federal laws.

This is an important decision. Copies thereof are being printed and as soon as available will be mailed for your information and guidance.

Very truly yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

BORN

Hadley—At Richmond, Indiana, July 22, 1916, to Ross A. and Mrs. Hadley, a daughter, Margaret Elizabeth.

DIED

Stevens—James Stevens died at his home, near Angola, N. Y., July 3, 1916, aged 86 years. He was a life-long Friend and one who hailed with joy the spirit of awakening which passed over the Friends' meetings in western New York about forty-four years ago, but the Conservative spirit in that locality was too strong, and the meeting died a peaceful death. He was then left with no place to worship among Friends, but he kept the faith and was always doing what he could to help the work of the Lord. For many years he was active in the Bible School and meeting, and maintained a school in his neighborhood until his strength failed. He is survived by the widow, one son, three daughters, twelve grandchildren and six great grandchildren. Funeral services were held at the home by George Hull, of Gasport, N. Y., and were largely attended.

Stout—Jane Stout, after months of failing health, died at her home near Bloomingdale, Indiana, July 22, 1916, aged 73 years. She was born in England and came with her father's family to America when about fourteen years old. Her husband, David Stout, died several years ago. A son and four daughters survive her. Impressive funeral services were held with George H. Moore and Mary E. Chapman in charge.

The Triumphant Ministry

HE triumphant ministry is set upon service, while the dragging ministry is set upon rewards and recognition. In all lines of life this is the subtle temptation. The power of sermons gets measured by the things people say about them afterwards. If people say they are good (and surely it ought to be said often, since it is so generally true), the minister goes his way encouraged. If nothing be said, it is only rarely that he can feel himself wholly sustained by the fact that he has ministered truth to souls. Yet there must be something of that element of superiority to popular recognition in the finally triumphant ministry. It cannot be buoyed up by the words of men. It must obey orders from a higher source. As "Timothy Kilbourn" says, "The triumphant ministry, is for those who have soldier stuff in them and who can endure."

Letting one's spirit drag for lack of promotion or reward is unworthy of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus in the ministry or out of it. Whether men praise or blame is secondary. Primary is the doing of the duty set. That done, there is triumph. Looking upon the ministry as men do today, how charged with the spirit of service it needs to be! The minister is wanted in emergencies which no other man can meet. For the physical sickness men call in the doctor, but the minister as well. In the greater troubles of the home life, when sorrows impend that are not physical, men call not the doctor, but the minister alone. When loved ones are dying many friends help, but the voice surest to be needed is that of the minister. In the hours of greatest joy, it is he whom men want. In perplexity of faith and decision, it is his counsel that men seek.

If the minister has come into lives as he may, what larger opportunity can any man wish than in his with the smallest flock? There is triumph just in being the kind of man whom men want. The minister's rewards, his recognition, should be generous, but no amount of reward could make a triumphant ministry. Depending upon it will make a dragging ministry instead. The triumph lies in the service itself.

A NEW GETHSEMANE

By HENRY GEKELER.

O Master, Thou art wounded by Thy friends,
If that they do to men is done to Thee!
And what if friend of Thee Thy friend shall smite?
This is the civil war of Christendom.
The hideous blot and scandal of our age:
Brother with brother is locked in mortal strife!

War-lust hath made a new Gethsemane
And there makes Christ to walk, with sorrow drunk:
He staggers neath his load, for every moan
He hears, the orphan's and the widow's tears
Run down His cheek, He reels, as from a blow,
At sight of mangled images of God—
There!—prone He falls beneath our weight of sin.
We Christian nations crown with crown of thorns
The Prince of Peace. With plans of war obsessed,
How dare we hope this war shall be the last?

Must this Gethsemane be yet again
Followed by darker Golgotha where Christ
Is crucified afresh and put to shame?—
Not by a Jewish mob, doing it knows not what,
Nor by a craven heathen judge who's more in love
With place than he loves justice, mercy, truth,—
But gibbeted and lifted up to scorn
In Christian lands, where still they say, "Lord, Lord!"

O, come, and let us watch this hour with Him!
We bring our little programs, neatly planned
For God to ratify,—and think it prayer,
Here in Christ's garden let us learn to say,
Ev'n though, to say it, we sweat blood with Him,
"Thy will, not mine, be done."

No peace shall come,
Except a wicked patch-work peace, a peace
Of shady shift and paltry compromise—
Give peace, not as the world gives peace, O Lord;
No peace shall come that's generous and large,
And whole as was Christ's coat, woven throughout
And without seam; no lasting peace can be,
So deep that we may call it peace of God:—
Until our kings, crowned and uncrowned, have learned
To say with all their heart, "Thy Kingdom come;"
Until our peoples, ruled and rulers both,
Practise selfabnegation rare, and mount,
As by a ladder, on their broken selfish plans,
Mount to the prayer heroic, "Thy will on earth be done!"
Thy will, Thy law, Thy character is Love;
And love, on earth, spells freedom, love spells peace.

CHARLES STELZLE ENTERS THE SERVICE OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

Rev. Charles Stelzle has been elected by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America as Field Secretary for special service.

Mr. Stelzle lived in New York's tenements for twenty years of his early life and worked at the trade of machinist, before preparing for the work of the ministry. His successful pastoral work in St. Louis and Minneapolis was among the poor. He has probably delivered the message of Christianity before more working men than any other man in America. Among his outstanding achievements in this interest was the development of the Labor Temple in New York. He has been identified with practically every great movement of the Church during the past fifteen years, and was one of the group of men who organized the Commission on the Church and Social Service of the Federal Council, whose statement of principles has become a classic not only among the churches but among the common people.

Mr. Stelzle brings to the common service of the churches of the Federal Council unique talent and wide experience, and his work for the present will be in the fields of the economic phases of the liquor problem, and the church and labor, with other activities undertaken in connection with the Federal Council Commissions on the Church and Social Service, Federated Movements and Temperance. He began his service on July 1, and his office will be with the Federal Council in the United Charities Building, New York.

TWO GREAT SUNDAY SCHOOL PLEADERS

At the recent Methodist General Conference at Saratoga, Bishop M. C. Harris of Japan and Bishop J. C. Hartzell of Africa retired from active service.

Bishop Harris is to return to Japan to spend his years in promoting a cordial relationship between Japan and America, founded upon a better understanding between these countries. Having been decorated by the Emperor because of his service as a religious leader, he will have the opportunity to develop a better understanding and appreciation of Christianity through his approach to the leadership of Japan. He plans to give a large portion of his time and influence to make the World's Sunday School Convention, which will be held in Tokyo following the war, the most important world gathering ever held, because of its historical, strategical and uniting value following the greatest war in history.

Bishop Hartzell, as Chairman of the Committee on Sunday School Work Among the Moslems, representing the World's Sunday School Association, is planning as soon as the way shall open, a visitation of Moslem centers to broaden out the Sunday School work begun by the Moslem Sunday School Committee in Cairo, and to arrange for its extension to such Moslem populations as are found in Java, India and the Philippines.

If the most inviting pathway to the saving and readjustment of the world is through the winning and training of its childhood and youth, these two great leaders are to be congratulated upon having chosen these most fruitful lines of service.

A Greater Quakerism

X

For ten weeks we have been endeavoring to impress the value of a greater Quakerism upon our readers. In accordance with the theory that the constant dripping of the water wears away the stone, we have elected to keep pounding away in one direction for a time, in the hope that Quakerism as a whole might begin to feel the stirrings of a new life, and might experience that rebirth of spiritual power which is so essential, if we are to do our share in meeting the demands which a questioning world is making upon the Church of this generation. It is our conviction that Quakerism is big with the promise of a larger life, if only it can be directed effectively out of the valley of an abnormal quietism and a somewhat unnatural exclusiveness.

With entire consistency we may accept the advice of an editorial writer in The Continent recently: "Let there be an end to talk about the Church holding its own. Let the talk be of conquest, of making it possible for evil to hold its own. Let new men and older ones lay plans for actual victory, dropping talk about changed conditions which furnish excuse for less efficiency. The gospel that won its way in former days is adequate for later times."

Quakerism is weak in its planning, and therefore has no consciousness of a great denominational objective. We should say that it is surfeited with the spirit of a democracy that has developed an abnormal individualism, to the exclusion of that co-operative and sympathetic team work that is the prime essential in the growth of a worthy movement. We seem to have lost the gift of prophecy because we have left no place for the far-visioned seer in our ranks. We frown upon leadership in a communion where all the members are priests unto God, with the result that Quakerism is an aggregation of personalities rather than a corporate union of saints, bound together in the consciousness of a common call to the performance of a mighty task.

The Society of Friends cannot justify its continued existence beyond the delivery of a message that is for all men, the interpretation of the teachings of Jesus as a practical program for the whole of human life and the rendering of a sacrificial service which, by its very unselfishness, will grip the attention and win the sympathy of men everywhere who are conscious of a great need. Quakerism will fail as a religious force of consequence, if its chief aim is to serve its own membership by ministering to a particular quality of life and practice. Not as a club but as a working body of believers will the Society of Friends find its field of greatest usefulness.

First of all, Friends should set out unitedly to practice the precepts of the discipline and of the pulpit. Not alone as teachers, but as exemplars of truth will Friends excel, for upon this all else depends. If we are to preach a literal gospel that is potential for every life and all of life, we must practice it as a rule of daily conduct. If we are to proclaim peace, we must avoid strife; if we are to become apostles of holiness, we must live holy lives; if we are to ignore ceremonialism, we must receive the Holy Ghost and seek for the substance of the spiritual life which the outward rites typify. Such an attainment should become the subject of counsel and prayer on the part of the whole body, that in a corporate sense we may bear witness to the vital things in the Christian life.

We should then strive for a greater efficiency in service. The better equipment and training of our ministers is an essential part of the problem of a greater Quakerism, for no church can minister to the varied needs of human society that does not have efficient and adequately equipped messengers. If Friends are to occupy a larger field in the work of the whole church, we must not only set higher standards for our ministry, but we must provide the system by which our preachers can be assured of better educational training.

There can be no greater Quakerism without a proper concern for the welfare and help of our young people. The Young Friends Movement should not be left to its own development. That has been the bane of our existence thus far. We have simply told the young people that they are free to do whatever they can in the way of self-preparation for active service in the church. The care and training of our youth must become a vital part of the concern of the Church as a whole, for therein lie greater possibilities for a greater Quakerism than in any other direction.

It seems quite clear that the Society of Friends, generally speaking, has too much machinery, and such as we have is not properly fitted together. We need to turn our attention to the simplification of our working organism, taking care that the work of the Five Years' Meeting is properly co-ordinated with the corresponding work of our Yearly Meetings.

If we are to succeed, we must plan to serve our communities well. Every local meeting should plan its local work in concrete terms each year, and should then endeavor to rally the whole local membership in support of the program. Generally speaking there is too great a gulf between the meeting and the community. By the varied means of personal service every individual unit of the community should be reached with an impelling appeal for association with the people of God. If we cannot win our own communities, we will be little able to command the confidence of the world.

We have heretofore stressed the importance of a well-directed Church extension movement. We cannot afford to turn aside from the many open doors, and our consecration must include the financial equipment necessary for such an endeavor. The call is loud and imperative in many directions, and there are many cities where Friends need to be getting a foothold, if we are to prepare ourselves for greatest usefulness. A week ago we suggested the desirability of American Friends being represented in a larger way in the relief work now being carried on by English Friends. In no better way can our branch of the Church be assured of the confidence and esteem of the whole world, at a time when the whole world is ready to place right values upon disinterested Christian service.

The problem of a greater Quakerism is a problem from which we cannot afford to turn aside. Its alternative is a dwindling Quakerism that is distressingly discouraging to young and old, and belies the high character of our faith and testimony as a body of Christian discipleship. With prayer and the re-dedication of all our powers, let us turn hopefully to face the problem.

The Pot of Oil

II Kings 4:1-7

By CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

The widow's pot of oil teaches not only a lesson of human trust in divine providence, but also a lesson of divine opportunity. To allow the Divine Spirit to use us is often as necessary for us to learn as how to depend upon God in our need. This woman's need, seen in her destitution, in her debt, and in the threat that hung over her, is God's great chance. Human need is always the divine opportunity did we but realize it. "My strength is made perfect in weakness" was as true in Elisha's day as in the time of Paul; it is also pertinent to very much of Christian experience today. God does not do for us what He wants to do, because we are too self-sufficient. We have a self-confidence, but not a God-confidence.

Think first of the lack of appreciation which most of us have for the little and the common. If we had great talents we would expect God to use them. We do not look for Him to use or expect Him to want the little that we possess. Elisha asked this woman what she had in her house, and her answer reveals just how she felt. "Thy handmaid hath not anything in the house," then, as if it were not worth mentioning, she added, "save a pot of oil." We are all prone to overlook these single pots of oil. A dozen pots of oil would have been of some account, but the single pot is too small to mention, too insignificant, too trivial. We make synonymous the words small and insignificant, common and trivial. We think more readily in terms of the telescope than in terms of the microscope. Stars are more often on our tongues as illustrations of divine providence than germ cells.

The scholars are telling us, however, that the same painstaking infinite care is applying unchangeable laws to the germ cells with as much foresight and accuracy as is evinced in the sustaining of the earth in its orbit or in keeping the north star in place. He who makes a nation in a day sees a sparrow fall to the ground, and concerns himself with our pulse beats and our heart aches. He would teach us the value, yes, the infinite value, of small pots of oil. Or to change the figure, the bit of love, the morsel of patience, the bud of kindness and the tiny bit of sympathy are seeds waiting for the sowing in some place where there is need of a plant, a flower, a tree, a harvest. Sow them and let them grow.

A further consideration of this incident leads us to see that the beginnings of the divine operation in the human heart are dependent upon finding a point of contact. The woman's pot of oil proved to be the channel of the divine power along which it moved to bring the thing she needed. Man is too prone to seek for the divine manifestations in great and unusual things which we normally do not possess. The sun, in the spring, is seeking for those points of contact with the earth where its power can call from the earth its hidden resources of beauty, nourishment and sustenance. There it finds in the tiny and countless seeds of the plants and flowers. Through them the hidden potentialities of the soil are brought into the sphere of man's use. So in every human life the Great Spirit above is seeking for moods, feelings and psychological conditions and aspirations as points of contact by which He may link the divine life with the human life and multiply the pot of oil a thousandfold.

Again, we shall note that the Heavenly Father makes use of the small gift if it is presented and not hidden. The man with the single talent had the same relative opportunity as the man with the five talents, but when he rolled up his talent in a napkin and hid it in the ground he lost his chance of being a successful man. Thus are we continually missing the great revelations of God. To hide the little is to lose the much. To hold back the pot of oil is to miss the blessing the blesser would give. We do not know God because we give him so few points of contact.

Finally, let us observe that the limit of the divine outpouring is measured always by human capacity. As long as this widow had vessels into which the oil could be poured there was oil to pour. As long as there is room for a drop in the cup there is always a drop to fill the place. As long as there is room for the grace of God in the heart there is always a store of grace to be had. The greater the human need the greater opportunity there is for God to manifest his grace. The person who refuses to let God use his little gift not only cuts himself off from the blessing which he himself might have, but he also deprives a Heavenly Father of the joy He is always seeking, the pouring out upon his children of the hidden oil of his grace kept in the infinite reservoirs of heavenly love.

The real poverty of our lives is the poverty of receiving receptacles rather than the poverty of resources. The pipe that runs to my house from the great lake which supplies the city's water may become obstructed or be too small for the amount of water I need, and then my supply runs short. The lake is not running dry because the tap supplies only a dripping of water. The trouble is with the tap. Its capacity is too small. God is not poor because we become spiritual paupers. It is not the fault of the spiritual larder if I do not get enough to eat. The trouble lies in my powers of spiritual assimilation and digestion.

This whole consideration comes down to the simple statement that human capacity is divine opportunity. What we need, then, is to give God a chance. No vessel in the house of the widow was too small to receive its share of the prophetic oil. No human capacity is too insignificant to be withheld from the infilling of the divine outpouring. Another way of saying this same thing is to insist that for ourselves and for all the business ability, the social gift, the kindly spirit, the moral sense, and the human talent for any and everything are vessels which may and ought to become receptacles of the oil of divine revelation and grace. Thus shall immediate need be met and the future shall be provided with its requisite measure of divine power.

A PEOPLE AWAKENING

By M. CATHERINE ALBRIGHT.

Among all the breaking down and breaking up that is taking place today in Europe, it is curious to turn to the other side of the picture and note some of the strange, new links that are being forged. Very interesting reports have been received by Friends in London of the reception given to some of their number in a distant province on the eastern border of Russia. A party of four enquirers went out in April to see what the condition of the refugees was in that country and to ascertain if there was any special direction in which the Society of Friends could render help. Everywhere welcoming hands were held out to them and, from Petrograd and Moscow, they were passed on from one to another till their goal was reached and they found themselves just where they desired to be.

This goal is the province of Samara, as large as France, Belgium and Holland put together, drained by the river Volga; a great fertile land, but just now under the heavy burden of a vast influx of refugees, who have drifted all across Russia and finally scattered themselves, or been scattered, among the towns and villages of this primitive part of the world.

"As a submarine volcanic eruption hurls a tidal wave, so the war, last autumn, burst beneath the peoples of ten provinces and, loosening them from the land where they had been rooted for generations, flung them eastward in a vast, surging wave of refugees. There are not many roads in Russia but there is a great highway running northeast from Poland to Moscow. Halfway it branches southward to Kief. In August, September and October last year, this road became a human river, flowing into the center of Russia—a countless multitude of men and women, children and frail old people, horses, cattle and carts filled with cherished possessions and every sort of chattel. As it flowed on, the people became poorer day by day, the weather became colder, many of the refugees became so exhausted that they could go no further. Typhoid, bronchitis, pneumonia broke out, dysentery raged among the people and scarlatina attacked the children. And still, careless of individual suffering, the river of refugees flowed on. Part of the stream set southward towards Kief, the other part by circuitous railway routes flowed round Moscow and spread and lost itself in the eastern provinces. Thousands of the exiles went southward to the inhospitable mountains of Turkestan or were transported by train into Siberia; some even reached the sea at Vladivostock. The war changed the valient, striving personality of the Russian peasant into a beggar without hope, mere human driftwood."

It is in the eastern province of Samara that Friends are now coming face to face with the problem of this accumulated misery. The following is the description of the people among whom some part of this human driftwood has at last come to rest: "It is Asia in Europe which we found, a people beginning, only beginning, to peer through the mist that is about them and for good or for bad beginning to see. There is curiosity here and hope and a great wholesome wonder still unsatisfied. There is a powerful spirit of sweetness and love in these folk: their minds have been left uncomplicated by the incoming civilization of the west. They are waiting for some one to give them the first message from the new world. The messengers may be men of commerce or industry, they may be the writers of books, they may be politicians, but they may be the relief workers of the Society of Friends. * * * The life of the people here is a very strange one. Their land is exceedingly rich, so that manuring and the finer arts of agriculture are not practised.

"It is in the sowing time and at the season of reaping that all the work of the year is concentrated. All summer little is done but wood cutting and if a man has a gap in his fence he may take from spring till autumn to repair it. In the winter his house is deep in snow and he has no business to attend to but the burning of his wood and the feeding of his beasts if he has any. Thus the long, white days have made him very patient and long-suffering. He knows many tales and songs and things to pass the time. He has a great family. He has probably seen a railway train, his wife very likely not. In many places a motor car had never before been seen. Once stones were thrown at us.

"The driver said, 'They mean nothing. It is only that they do not understand'."

But now, what of the refugees who have found their way among this primitive people? The special district in which Friends propose to work contains 42,000 normal population, to which are now added 3,400 refugees. For the latter, the Russian government makes a small allowance for food and a special committee endeavors to provide the bare necessities of clothing. Boots are almost unprocureable. But for the ordinary inhabitants and refugees alike, medical help is the most urgent. Whole districts are left without any at the present time, the usual arrangements for hospitals, etc., having been given upon an account of the war.

To meet this urgent need, a relief party of three doctors, several nurses and expert relief organizers are going out at once. It will be a difficult task that awaits them. They will have to take their own stores. They will have to work through a foreign language. But there is an open door. The Friends who are already there report with regards to the refugees that, "even our talking to them through an interpreter cheered them wonderfully. Their faces cleared and the smiles came when they were given a word of comfort." It is to lighten the darkness for them, to prevent the spread of disease in their crowded quarters, to help in the distribution of clothing, to set in motion the forces of hope that Friends have gone out. It is a wonderful new link that is being forged and we ask "all who bear the name of Friends" to assist in the carrying forth of this message of good will.

USE OF THE TERM QUAKER

It is not often that we publish articles in these columns that are unsigned. The following unsigned article from some one at Canon City, Colorado, is so typical of several letters which have been received at the office of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that we give it space and then follow it with a statement from Congressman Henry Watson, of Pennsylvania.

It will be seen from the statement of Mr. Watson that Friends, even in the early days, the days of George Fox, used the term Quaker as applied to themselves, and from that early time to the present it is the term by which Friends are generally known among other people. It may be said also that the large number of books written by Friends in which the term Quaker is used both in the titles and in the books, negative the suggestion that the term is merely a nickname. Reference to it in our book of discipline, to distinguish the name of Friends, makes it clear that even Friends officially have not been averse to the use of the name.

Our correspondent misses the whole point of the effort to get legislation at Washington preventing the commercial use of the name. It is the commercial use of the name by other people, especially by whiskey, beer and cigarette people, that is offensive, and not the use by Friends themselves, who ought to be guaranteed the exclusive use of the name. The following is the letter by our unknown correspondent:

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

In reading a recent number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, I was impressed with the frequent and indifferent use of the terms "Quaker" and "Quakerism." "Quaker," as is well known, is not and never has been the recognized name of the religious sect, otherwise known as The Society of Friends. Originally the term Quakers was one of contempt and derision applied to the modest followers of George Fox and William Penn. The eccentricities of customs and modes of worship, have, during subsequent years, been greatly modified in fact, and in the eyes of the world, the term Quaker has lost every trace of traditional significance, particularly that of scorn or contempt; even more, it suggests to the world the conscientious motives, the exemplary spirit of martyrdom and the highest ideals embodied in the doctrines of the denomination.

With many of us there is no thought or spirit of resentment to the common reference to Quakerism, only a mere pride in not being called something we are not. But the thought which impressed me most was the prevalence of its use and adoption and recognition by the church itself, not in any official capacity, but by prominent leaders in public discourses and contributed articles to the church organ. The publication referred to above, heads with an article, "A Greater Quakerism." In another, reference is made to The Present Day Message of Quakerism," etc., etc.

If members of The Society of Friends are averse to being called Quakers, or having the term Quakerism represent to the world their ideals and principles, then in all consistency, the recognition of the term must first be discarded by them. It may be a hopeless task. But can Friends expect the world to drop a nickname so universally adopted by Friends themselves?

Canon City, Colo.

The following statement by Congressman Henry W. Watson is copied from the Congressional Record by the Philadelphia Friend of July 27th, and relates to the bill pending in Congress designed to prohibit the commercial use of a denominational name or the name by which a denomination is commonly called. After saying he is for the bill, he then quotes the bill in its entirety, after which he makes the following comment:

"The Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, of which there are about 130,000 in the United States, asks Congress through this measure to prevent the name of their church, as well as other religious orders, from being registered as a trade-mark in the interchange of commerce.

"Everyone reverences his place of worship with the highest inspiration which he is capable of receiving. The association of the church—through which we invoke the Divine blessings, and plead for strength in times of sorrow and death and for mercy when we sin—with commercialism, is repugnant to the sacred feelings of the human soul.

"The Quakers rightfully maintain that the public should be restrained from indicating a grade of whisky, a brand of food, or a quality of a textile by the name of any religious sect. The church is a holy institution, and is sacred to those who are baptized therein, and it should be so held by the State. It was contended in the hearings that the word 'Quaker' is one of derision, and not the name of a religious sect. The Society of Friends was founded by George Fox in 1630, and it has been a continuous organization since that period. Fox constantly applied the name Quaker to his association. In one publication he mentions 'The Progress of Quakerism in Monmouthshire.' In another, entitled 'A Chief Upholder of the Quaker Sect,' he states that the Quakers are not a sect but are 'In ye power of God before sects was.' He also wrote an essay on 'The Quaker Challenge to the Papists' and 'The Quaker Testimony Concerning Magistracy,' in which appears the following sentence: 'All you that call yourselves Christians who have been so angry, Independents, Presbyterians, we have not forgot your anger against the Quakers.' The Journal of George Fox, by Norman Penny, records:

"When George Fox breathed his last in the house of Henry Gouldney, the good Gracechurch Street merchant, the Quaker Society, which he started on its voyage, amidst the storm of persecution, had already passed into quieter waters.

"The toleration act gave relief to the Quakers by permitting 'this harmless sect to hold their assemblies in peace.' William Penn affiliated himself with the Quakers, and Janney, in his Life of Penn, states:

"William Penn, the only son of the famous admiral, much to the annoyance of his family, had embraced the principles of George Fox, the founder of the sect of Quakers.

"Penn appealed to King James to use his influence to procure some remission of the persecution of the Quakers. In 1772 the people called Quakers petitioned Parliament that they be permitted to affirm when an oath was required of them. Whittier, who was a member of The Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, wrote many poems in which the word 'Quaker' appeared. One is entitled 'The Quaker of the Olden Times;' another, 'The Quaker Alumni,' four lines of which are as follows:

"The Word which the reason of Plato discerned;
The truth, as whose symbol the Mithra-fire burned;
The soul of the world which the Stoic but guessed,
In the Light Universal the Quaker confessed!

"The above facts seem to be self-evident proof that The Society of Friends have been and are commonly called Quakers in all parts of the world where they are universally known. These people always maintained the right of religious liberty and expression, and for these reasons were imprisoned and persecuted. They greatly helped, through their perseverance, to establish that liberty which all religious associations now enjoy. William Penn brought these Quaker principles to America and upheld them in his province of Pennsylvania. This Society, commonly called Quakers, did as much, if not more, than any other people to bring about the condition which caused Congress to add the first amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees to the 'citizens of the United States freedom of religion, of speech and the right of petition.'

"The members of the Society of Friends having testified that their Christian sect is commonly called Quakers, they should have the legal protection of the name of their Society, that it may not be used as a trade-mark in the course of commerce."

THE FAMILY CIRCLE

A GOOD SAMARITAN

I remember the first good Samaritan I ever saw. I had been in this world three or four years when my father died a bankrupt and the creditors came and swept away about everything we had. My widowed mother had a cow and a few things and it was a hard struggle to keep the wolf from the door. My brother went to Greenfield and secured work in a store for his board and went to school. It was so lonely there that he wanted me to get a place so as to be with him. One cold day in November my brother came home and said he had a place for me. I said that I wouldn't go; but, after it was talked over, they decided that I should go. I didn't want my brothers to know that I hadn't the courage to go, but that night was a long one.

The next morning we started. We went up on the hill and had a last sight of the old house. We sat down there and cried. I thought that would be the last time I should ever see that old home. I cried all the way down to Greenfield. There my brother introduced me to an old man, who was so old he couldn't milk his cows and do the chores, so I was to do his errands, milk his cows and go to school. I looked at the old man and saw that he was cross. I took a good look at the wife and thought she was crosser than the old man. I stayed there an hour and it seemed like a week. I went around then to my brother and said:

"I am going home."

"What are you going home for?"

"I am homesick."

"Oh, well, you will get over it in a few days."

"I never will," I said. "I don't want to."

He said: "You will get lost if you start for home now; it is getting dark."

I was frightened then, as I was only about ten years old, and I said, "I will go at day-break tomorrow morning."

He took me to a shop window, where they had some jack knives and other things and tried to divert my mind. What did I care for those old jack knives? I wanted to get back home to my mother and brothers; it seemed as if my heart was breaking.

All at once my brother said: "Dwight, there comes a man that will give you a cent."

"How do you know he will?" I asked.

"Oh, he gives every boy that comes to town a cent."

I brushed away the tears, for I would not have him see me crying, and I got right in the middle of the sidewalk, where he couldn't help but see me, and kept my eyes right upon him. I remember how that old man looked as he came tottering down the sidewalk. Oh, such a bright, cheerful, sunny face he had! When he came opposite to where I was he stopped, took my hat off, put his hand on my head and said to my brother:

"This is a new boy in town, isn't he?"

"Yes, sir, he is; just came in today."

I watched to see if he would put his hand in his pocket. I was thinking of that cent. He began to talk to me so kindly that I forgot all about it. He told me that God had an only Son, and He sent Him down here and wicked men killed him, and he said He died for me. He only talked about five minutes, but he took me captive. After he had given me this little talk, he put his hand in his pocket and took out a brand new cent—a copper that looked just like gold. He gave me that; I thought it was gold, and didn't I hold it tight!

I don't know what became of that cent; I have always regretted that I didn't keep it; but I can feel the pressure of the old man's hand on my head today. I can hear those kind words ringing yet. I never shall forget that act. He put the money at usury; that cent has cost me a great many dollars. I have never walked up the streets of this country or the old country, but down into my pocket goes my hand and I take out some money and give it to every forlorn, miserable child I see.

Do you want to be like Christ? Go and find someone who has fallen, and get your arm under him and lift him up toward heaven. The Lord will bless you in the very act. May God help us to go and do like the good Samaritan!—D. L. Moody.

'CHINESE WOMEN AS BIBLE CLASS LEADERS

The women of China, following in the steps of their American sisters, are training for leadership in the Adult Bible Class work of their country. During the past year, five Bible Training Conferences have been held in China as an outgrowth of the evangelistic forward movement inaugurated by Dr. Mott and Dr. Eddy. It is interesting to note that no women were in attendance at the first two of these conferences, which were held in Kuling and Moukden; while the last three, held in Swatow, Canton and Foochow, were all attended by women. Now, two Bible Conferences, one in Kuling and one in North China, are being held especially for women. American methods of Sunday-school organization are taught in these conferences, as these methods are found to be especially adapted to the Chinese. The women, who are trained in these conferences, will, in their turn, organize classes which will be centers of service for other women.

Careful "follow-up" work is planned for each of these Bible conferences. The Swatow Conference will have eleven "follow-up" meetings, the Canton Conference, fourteen, while the Foochow Sunday School Union, with the various Chinese Sunday school secretaries employed by the several denominations, will be able efficiently to follow up the good conference held there.

WITH THE CHILDREN

CHILDREN CAN SERVE THE MASTER

Children's hands and children's feet,
Children's little voices sweet,
Children's eyes and children's ears,
All can serve the Master.

Hands can labor every day,
Feet run swiftly to obey,
Voices softly speak and sing,
So can serve the Master.

Eyes can see the things to do,
Ears can listen, helping, too,
Hearts can love and whisper low,
So can serve the Master.

THE FERN'S STORY

Susan was on her way to school one day early in the spring. As she passed through a hollow that was damp and shady in summer she saw a queer fuzzy-looking plant. It was so queer and she was so much interested in it that as she passed the place each day she paused long enough to see how it was developing.

Gradually it uncoiled, grew much taller, and in a few days began to send out little leaves on each side. Then Susan began to see the development of the plant into the fern she knew so well.

Other little stalks, similar to the first one, peeped through the ground, and by the end of a month there were tall, full developed branches, or fronds, others just peeping from the earth, and various sizes between.

"I must give it up; you are really a fern, and I want you to tell me the story of your life," said Susan to the plant at the end of the month.

"That I will," replied the fern. "To begin with, look on the under side of the tallest branch and tell me what you see there."

"The whole surface is covered with little brown specks," said Susan.

"It was in such a little speck as that my life began, several years ago. There were probably a hundred others just like me, and we were all packed in as closely as could be. I think they called us spores or seeds.

"One day, after we had become as large as we could in this little round box, it opened with a snap and scattered us in all directions. I fell here and sank down through the leaves into the soft, mellow earth.

"I was really frightened then. I thought I would have to lie here and decay.

"Finally I went to sleep and slept for a long time. When I awakened, a tiny green stalk had begun to push out from my side, and up toward the light, and a lot of fine little roots began to take hold of the soil. I hardly recognized myself in this new form, and waited to see what change would come next.

"I didn't have to wait long, for the earth was warm and moist, and I took on some new form almost every day. Soon, instead of one, there were half a dozen little branches, just as you see them today, only very much smaller.

"Do you see that cluster over below that rock; and this other one just above the little bush? Scrape away the leaves and a little soil and tell me what you find."

"Oh, here is a long root reaching from you to the other ferns, and joining you together," exclaimed Susan.

"Not exactly a root, little girl, but an underground stem.

"You see, so many branches grew up here that we became crowded. Then I sent out the long stems, just under the ground, hunting for a vacant place where we could send up shoots to form new clusters. In that way we can creep along and occupy new ground without having to wait for new plants to grow from spores. This gives us two ways of spreading, and is quite an advantage over other plants that must depend on seeds alone.

"In a few months the air lost its warmth and I quit growing; I didn't understand it. One night all my leaves were coated over with little white crystals. The mellow soil became solid, and I went to sleep for the second time, and slept all winter.

"When I was awakened by the warm sunshine all my leaves were gone and I at once began producing others, just as you have seen during the last few weeks. And this is my story."—A. S. Neale, in The Child's Hour.

WILLIE'S TRADE

Willie had a yellow dog that was a perfect nuisance, but so devoted was the boy to him that he could not be persuaded to have him killed. One day when his father had been unusually annoyed by the antics of the dog, he called Willie in from play and said:

"My boy, I'll give you ten dollars if you'll get rid of that dog."

Willie's face expressed great amazement at the thought of so much money belonging to him. He looked at the dog and finally told his father he would give him his decision the next day.

The following day Willie sought his father, and said:

"I've got rid of Max, father."

"I'm more than glad, Willie," said the father. "Here's your money; you earned it. How did you get rid of him?"

"Why," answered Willie, as he put the money in his pocket, "I traded him to Bill Morgan for two yellow pups."—Ex.

A DAFFODIL'S SERMON

"O Daffy-down-dilly, the air is so chilly,

How can you keep warm, you bright little thing?"

"O, is it so chilly?" said Daffy-down-dilly;

"I thought it was warm, for you know it is spring.

If I should once shiver, the lilies would quiver;

The birds then would see us, and they would not sing.

My heart is not chilly," said Daffy-down-dilly,

"And that is the reason I think it is spring."

Peace Association of Friends

THE PEACE TESTIMONY OF FRIENDS AND THE LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

By WILBUR K. THOMAS.

An organization called THE LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE is claiming the attention and support of many people who stand for Peace. The prestige of the names of the men heading the League and the fact that it has a great amount of money at its disposal, enabling it to place literature and organizers in almost any community, calls for a frank consideration of the League's proposals and a comparison with the historic testimony of the Quakers in regard to war.

Proposals of the League to Enforce Peace

"We believe it to be desirable for the United States to join a league of nations binding the signatories to the following.

"First: All justiciable questions arising between the signatory powers, not settled by negotiation, shall, subject to the limitations of treaties, be submitted to a judicial tribunal for hearing and judgment, both upon the merits and upon any issue as to its jurisdiction of the question.

"Second: All other questions arising between the signatories and not settled by negotiation, shall be submitted to a council of conciliation for hearing, consideration and recommendation.

"Third: The signatory powers shall jointly use forthwith both their economic and military forces against any one of their number that goes to war, or commits acts of hostility, against another of the signatories before any question arising shall be submitted as provided in the foregoing.

"Fourth: Conferences between the signatory powers shall be held from time to time to formulate and codify rules of international law, which, unless some signatory shall signify its dissent within a stated period, shall thereafter govern in the decisions of the Judicial Tribunal mentioned in Article One."

Considerations

This scheme, then, provides that (1) all justiciable questions shall be submitted to an international tribunal; (2) all non-justiciable questions shall be submitted "to an international council of conciliation, which shall recommend a fair and amicable solution;"* (3) in case any member of the League goes to war without first having submitted its questions to either of the above, the other members shall make war on that state; and, (4) "the signatory powers shall endeavor to codify and improve the rules of international law."*

There can be no question about the first, second and fourth proposals. Peace people have advocated for years that all questions between nations should be submitted to some kind of a court of arbitration. Of the third point, President Lowell rightly says, "The kernel of the proposal, the feature in which it differs from other plans, lies in the third point, obliging all the members of the league to declare war on any member violating the pact of peace." To be more specific, the members of the league pledge themselves to use military force (Pres. Lowell makes it clear that this is not a police force, P. 10*), not to enforce the decrees of the court, but to punish any member of the League that does not submit its differences to an international court before going to war. No definition of this military force is in print. Something of what it would mean to the United States can be gained from a further quotation (p. 17*).

"To join such a league would mean, no doubt, a larger force of men trained for arms in this country, more munitions of war on hand, and better means of producing them rapidly; for, although it may be assumed that the members of the league would never be actually called upon to carry out their promise to fight, they ought to have a potential force for the purpose. But in any case this country ought not to be so little prepared for an emergency as it is today, and it would require to be less fully armed if it joined a league pledged to protect its members against attack (note in the preceding paragraph that the members pledge themselves to make war only on the nation that does not submit its case to the court before going to war.—Author) than if it stood alone and unprotected. In fact, the tendency of such a league, by procuring at least delay before the outbreak of hostilities, would be to lessen the need of preparation for immediate war, and thus have a more potent effect in reducing armaments than any formal treaties, whether made voluntarily or under compulsion."

The hopelessness of the cause is further expressed by Pres. Lowell, "No sensible man expects to abolish war altogether."*

The Peace Testimony of Friends

The Peace testimony of the Society of Friends is best summed up in the words of the Richmond Declaration of Faith, now printed with the Discipline in each Yearly Meeting of the Five Years Meeting group and attested to by writers of our own and other denominations as embodying the principles of the Society. It reads:

"We feel bound explicitly to avow our unshaken persuasion that all war is utterly incompatible with the plain precepts of our divine Lord and Lawgiver, and the whole spirit of His Gospel, and that no plea of necessity or policy, however urgent or peculiar, can avail to release either individuals or nations from the paramount allegiance which they owe to Him who hath said, "Love your enemies." In enjoining this love and the forgiveness of injuries, He who has brought us to Himself has not prescribed for man precepts which are incapable of being carried into practice or of which the practice is to be postponed until all shall be persuaded to act upon them. . . .

"We would, in humility, but in faithfulness to our Lord, express our firm persuasion that all the exigencies of civil government and social order may be met under the banner of the Prince of Peace, in strict conformity with his commands."

Summary

The spirit of the Friends Declaration of Faith and the spirit of the League to Enforce Peace are incompatible. They represent the atmosphere of two different worlds. One is the expression of faith and trust and in fellowship with the Eternal God; the other expresses the lack of such faith and the belief that peace can be maintained upon the earth only by fear and "the superior power of superior numbers. "According to your faith be it done unto you." Matt. 9:29.

[Many people are supporting the League to Enforce Peace because they believe that the world cannot be made good all at once and that the League offers the NEXT STEP. In a succeeding article, I propose to discuss this question.]

THE HIGHER LIFE

PETER'S LOAN

Lend me thy boat, the Master kindly said
To Simon, wearied with unfruitful toil.
He lent it gladly, asking but the smile
Of Him who had not where to lay His head.
But Jesus knows our need of daily bread,
And will be no man's debtor. If awhile
He uses Simon's boat, in kingly style
He will repay—a hundred-fold instead.
And Peter's Lord, as yesterday the same
Walking, though now unseen, among His own,
Still condescends to ask from each a loan.
O humble toiler, when He calls thy name,
Lend Him thy all. The Master ne'er forgets
Discouraged fisherman or empty nets.—Sel.

OUR DAYS ARE IN GOD'S HANDS

Do not worry, do not worry, but do your work well. Do not borrow trouble. "Fret not thyself." We are to walk by faith, and faith implies the gloaming. God takes His own time, because all time is His own. Jesus was never in a hurry. In His life there is determination, but never haste. We have not passed this way heretofore, but He has, and He knows every turn of the road. He knows the end from the beginning. So let us trust. The step from here to over there we all must take. It is a step into the unknown. We are to be always expecting something beautiful and gracious. Happy the man who can say with the sundial that Hazlitt saw in Italy: "I take record of only the hours of sunshine." Remember, if clear vision had been better for us, we should have it; but clear vision is not ours, and so it can not be best for us. And meantime the trip is fascinatingly interesting. The night may be dark, but the morning will be cloudless.—Rev. Malcolm J. McLeod.

LOOK ON THE BRIGHT SIDE

Christianity looks evermore on the bright side of things. It is for this reason that the religion of Christ is cheerful religion. It is pre-eminently hopeful. This is why hope is held out to the most degraded, to the vilest and most wretched. It says to such: "Be of good cheer; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow."

See how some cheery souls look at their troubles. On one occasion when some friends were condoling with an old man regarding the many troubles of his long and checkered pilgrimage, he remarked: "What you say is too true. I have been surrounded with troubles all my life long; but there is a curious thing about them—nine-tenths of them never happened!" Another genial spirit said: "Some people are always finding fault with nature for putting thorns on roses. I always thank her for having put roses on thorns." The same writer further says: "I remember asking a poor man who had certainly very few outward comforts, and who had much bodily infirmity and pain, 'Do you weary much?' 'No, sir, I never weary,' was the prompt reply. 'Happy as ever?' I asked. 'Aye, sir, and aye, the longer the happier,' was again the sweet response." These are all instances of true faith.—Ex.

THE PERFECT FRIENDSHIP

Some one has said that a friend is the one "who is the first to come in when all the world goes out." That is a beautiful thought, isn't it? But are you sure that you have a friend anywhere on earth who would stand by you when all the world turned its back on you? Think over all your friends and loved ones, is there any one whose friendship is so perfect as that? You like to call yourself a friend, but would you be the first to go in to any one when all the rest of the world went out? You know that you have always had to overlook many things in the very best of your friends, but would your own love and friendship stand such a test as that?

Is there any one whose friendship is thus perfect? Yea, verily, there is one, and his heart is so large that there is room for us all, and he is so humble that none need fear to come to him. His is the perfect friendship. We have nothing to overlook, and he will take us by the hand and lead us onward, no matter how much we have sinned against that perfect friendship. Why don't we enjoy this wonderful blessing to its fullest? —Helen Argyle.

TRUE VALUE

I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, except in its relation to the kingdom of Christ. If anything I have will advance the interests of that kingdom it shall be given up or kept, as by keeping or giving it I shall most promote the glory of Him to whom I owe all my hopes, both of time and eternity. May grace be given me to adhere to this!—David Livingstone.

I have been driven many times to my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day.—Abraham Lincoln.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

GAINS AT ORANGE BAY

In a number of special gospel meetings held during the latter part of July, Alma Swift and her native helpers found clear evidence of the effectiveness of the quiet work which had been done at that station during the past year. A letter written on July 22nd, tells of the deep concern which the church members have shown over the condition of their fellow townsmen. When this letter was written, the meetings were still to continue for several days. Already there had been evidence of conversions and persons were attending who had never before been known to enter a religious service.

MISSION SAWMILL

The Milling Department of the Africa Mission, under the care of Fred Hoyt, has been unusually busy for many months past. Over a year ago, a disease called "rinderpest" swept through the herd of oxen belonging to the Mission, causing the death of considerably more than half of them. This loss seriously hindered various lines of industrial work. In spite of the lack of transport facilities, the work has gone ahead, though the income from this department is not nearly so great as it would be if it were equipped with a traction engine and freight van.

"Work is progressing very well under the circumstances," writes Fred Hoyt, under date of May 28. "Demands for lumber are far more than we are able to supply with our present transport outfit. We are buying some oxen but cannot tell when the sickness will take them. I hope you will soon be able to get that engine and hauling car. Please be sure not to get a cheap outfit, as it will cost as much to send it out as it will a good one. The one mentioned some time ago in our letter to the Committee will, we think, be the one for this country. The mill is doing very nicely now. Just at present I am doing some repairing and remodelling, but will soon be ready to begin sawing again. We are having lots of rain now, which makes logging very hard, and the same is true of transporting the lumber. We need a good wagon for this purpose, as the one we have has small iron wheels and pulls very hard in the mud." The traction outfit so urgently needed will probably cost about $3000 but the missionaries and the Africa Field Committee are convinced that it will be a good investment. There is constant demand for lumber—more, in fact, than the Mission can supply.

TELESFERA, THE ZEALOUS CUBAN HANDMAID

When Telesfera de la Cruz first came to our meeting she was groping for the light. From a child she had been a devout Roman Catholic, but she was unsatisfied and even troubled. Hoping to find peace she made a vow that she would attend mass nine times without missing a single one. To appreciate what this meant it must be understood that in order to fulfill her vow she had to walk six miles from her home and return each time mass was said in the Catholic Church.

On Sunday morning she was returning heart-heavy from the mass when she chanced to pass the Protestant Church and it occurred to her that here she might get help. Immediately a conflict arose in her mind. All her more than fifty years of Roman devotion rose up in protest against entering a Protestant Church, but her desire for light and peace won, and she entered the meeting then in progress. Her conversion did not take place immediately. It cost her a hard struggle, but the ray of light had entered her "encircling gloom." She never finished her nine masses in the Roman Church and when her conversion came she was out and out for her Saviour. Her heaviness was turned to gladness. No longer did the way seem long from her home to the church and every Sunday morning she would be found in her place in meeting and always ready in and out of meeting to give expression in words and in service to the joy she had found.

Sometime after this her family moved to a settlement on the Chaparra sugar estate. She was now too far away to attend the meetings, but by conversations with her neighbors and the use of tracts and Bibles she found an outlet for her faith. Whenever possible she returned to Gibara to renew her fellowship with the believers.

Three years ago I had occasion to hold a meeting in a country home some six miles from where she lived. Hearing of it that afternoon she at once prepared to go. Through cane fields and over ploughed ground she went, calling to her neighbors as she passed to join her and go to the meeting. In this out of the way place she was almost the only one who had before attended a Protestant service, and she felt a special responsibility in seeing that things were done "decently and in order." She was accustomed, of course, to an offering being taken in the meetings, hence at the close of the service she advanced to the front and gave a rousing testimony and placing a forty cent piece on the table invited the others to join her in an offering, which they did right heartily and over three dollars was collected to help with the expenses of my trip.

Last year I visited her home in company with Alberta Lopez, a young preacher. When we reached the house she was eating her breakfast which consisted of "cracklings" and plantains. She insisted on sharing them with us and her hospitality could not have been more sincere or more hearty if her table had been laden with the richest viands. That night we had a meeting in the crowded home of her son and the next night the more pretentious home of the head contractor was filled with eager listeners.

The last visit of Telesfera to Gibara was made in bodily weakness last March at the time of the Annual Conference of the native church. For months she had looked forward to meeting with her fellow believers at that time. Though unable to nourish her body as it should be, her soul was fed on the Bread from Heaven. Besides the bodily discomforts, her expenses in coming to the conference were over four dollars, but when the offering was made for the home mission work she rejoiced that she had a dollar to give for that, besides making another offering to the local church. Telesfera now lies on what is probably her last bed of suffering, stricken with that scourge of Cuba, tuberculosis. A message has just come from her which says: "I have hope that we will meet again, if not in this body, it will be in the resurrection of the just, for the Lord has promised it to those that believe in His blessed name."

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

ABOUT A ROUND-ROBBIN

Wilmington, Ohio, July 20, 1916.

My dear Round-Robbins:

I think that you must all know the nature of a "round-robin," so I shall not bother to explain, but hasten to tell what our Young Friends have been about. We have been very busy folks since the C. E. Convention in May, when Tom Jones gave us such a boost. It was then that we dropped the gentle hint that we wanted to be "invited out." So almost every Sunday since, a group of Young Friends has visited some meeting. We are usually invited to stay all day. In that case, we attend the regular meeting for worship in the morning, have dinner together, and then hold a Young Friends meeting in the afternoon. This makes an ideal fellowship possible in a social way as well as deeply spiritual.

There are already thirty young people who gladly assist in giving these conferences. They are so interested that very often we have new volunteers at the close of a meeting. While we are delighted and encouraged by such interest, we know that these conferences cannot do the constructive work so hoped for; but they are clearly beneficial in an initial way. We hope to continue them until at least the majority of the meetings have had a Young Friends Conference. Up to date, fourteen have been held.

Perhaps you would like to know what topics are discussed. I shall outline one or two of the most recent and successful. We find that the spice of several short speeches is more palatable than one or two lengthy talks. At New Vienna, our general topic was:

How Do Young Quakers Grow?

- 1—By Investigation...Clayton Terrell (The Quaker Study Class)
 - 2—By Expression...Bernice Hawkins (C. E. Possibilities)
 - 3—By Friendship.....Luther Warren (Methods, Peace Principles)
 - 4—By Self-sacrificing Service..... Esther Farquhar (Mission Study)
- (Climax) Address—The Challenge to Young Friends....."Tom" Kelly

Last Sunday we went over to Samantha, a small meeting about eighteen miles from Wilmington. There were eleven of us. The morning meeting was indeed worshipful. The afternoon session was largely attended in spite of the heat. Representatives from neighboring meetings furnished music. The theme was:

The Young Friends Movement: Past, Present, Future.

- 1—Looking Back, "The Quaker Hero" Clayton Terrell
 - 2—Doors Ajar....."Jake" McKay
 - 3—The Young Friends Movement Conference in Wilmington Yearly Meeting.....Lewie Moon
 - 4—Stowing the Hold...Luther Warren
- Address.....Frank Barrett

I think you've a notion of what is interesting our folks just now. We are going to have a great time at Yearly Meeting next month (August), but that is another story. I always look at this page first to see what the rest of you are doing. So here's greeting to you all and a sincere "God speed ye."

ROBINETTA WILMINGTON.

The largest per cent of enrollment was gained by Greenleaf, Idaho. We are very glad to present the Greenleaf Friends the Young Friends Pennant. These Friends also report that twenty-nine of their young people tithe their income.

We hesitate to give the above figures; as we feel sure they are inaccurate, and is only a hint at the actual work done along these three lines.

It would enable us to make our report more nearly correct, if you would send to us direct, just what has been done in your knowledge, giving us all the data required for such a report. Will you do this? Let us know details and actual figures about the three E's in the campaign, as was outlined in the April News-Bulletin. Thank you!

Do not allow work along these lines to stop. The campaign has only just begun. Keep on working and tell us what you are accomplishing.

We are told that in order to grow, we must GO. We can never get any where unless we go. Then, make sure you are RIGHT, then keep going right ON, never stopping for difficulties or discouragements. We cannot do this unless we keep WORKING. Did you ever ride a bicycle? The wheels would not turn if you did not work them, would they? Then let us unite our forces and do a more efficient service to the bringing in of the kingdom of God.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE STUDY CLASS

It is probably safe to say that the members of a religious body can never discharge their duty to it and to the world, without a serious effort to improve and make the best use of their minds. Especially is this the case in a body like the Society of Friends.

In every considerable congregation of Friends there ought to be a group, or groups, formed for the definite study of religious and social subjects, meeting periodically, at least through the winter months.

There is nothing narrow or sectarian in suggesting that the foundation of such systematic study should be the History and Principles of the Society of Friends. Rightly conducted, this study will take us far down below the walls that separate the sects into the underlying experience that is at the heart of Christianity, and will help us to be at once intelligent Christians and really convinced Friends.

There are at least four main branches of study which Friends ought to be helping one another to pursue: those of Quakerism, the Bible and religious history, Foreign Missions, and Social Questions.

MAKE YOUR SOCIETY EFFICIENT

First, get an Efficiency Chart, then use it. Let the executive committee or even a special efficiency committee have charge of it, to organize the work and raise the thermometer. If some suggestions do not seem worth while, try them any way and see if the society is not benefited.

Work this in connection with the Campaign for Millions. Help organize a new society, give more money to missions, get new members and see that all become church members, start a Tenth Legion and Quiet Hour Band, see that 10 per cent of the members take the Christian Endeavor World and that 100 per cent sign the Peace Union Pledge.

This plan is being used by our society. Each of the following points is given a certain number of credits, the number of each being proportionate to the difficulty in carrying it out: Signing the Quiet Hour Pledge, the Tenth Legion Pledge, becoming a Christian Endeavor Expert, subscribing for the Christian Endeavor World, attendance at the various Church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor services, signing the Peace Union Pledge, enrollment in the Young Friends Directory, bringing an outsider to Christian Endeavor, reading The American Friend each week and fifteen minutes of conscientious thought on the topic before the meetings. A card-board chart has been made and each week, each member marks up what he has done. About 500 credits can be attained. All who reach 350 in this Individual Efficiency Campaign, will receive a Christian Endeavor pin; and those who reach 250 are called Efficient Endeavorers. This campaign continues two months.

The West Richmond Endeavor Society held a Rally on July 2nd. The Efficiency Chart which had just been marked up to 100 per cent after four months work, was exhibited. Helen Hockett, the new president, presided. Edgar Mote of Richmond, Treasurer of Indiana Yearly Meeting C. E. Union, and Lillian E. Hayes, Office Secretary of the B. Y. F. A., were the speakers.

A letter was read from the incoming pastor, Charles Woodman, Portland, Maine. It was altogether an inspiring and successful meeting, with more than fifty present.

Try a rally in your society.—Francis Nicholson in Conference News.

On the following day the Secretary took the train for San Francisco, ferried across the bay to the Santa Fe terminal and took the train for Denair. In the rush for connections, he lost his suitcase and had much trouble in getting it expressed on to Los Angeles. (If in a hurry, beware of Baggage Transfer Companies.) The five-hour ride through the wheat fields of California was most interesting, but very hot. It seemed strange to see threshing taking place on June 22nd. And doubly interesting were the large combined reapers and threshers. The wheat and barley did not look very heavy, but there was much grain in each head, so the yield was good.

Denair is located in the midst of this wide valley and is a country town. There are two churches here, the Friends and Disciples of Christ. Although the churches do not have a great deal in common, the Christian Endeavorers hold a Union Meeting. They are very active, too. When I arrived I found that Paul C. Brown, the Field Secretary of California, was holding a three-days' evangelistic meeting for the Endeavorers. He kindly took the Young Friends Secretary in and we had a splendid meeting together.

I spoke for about fifteen minutes on life consecration and the big task of following Christ. Brown followed in a forty-minute address on Prayer Consecration and Action. After this meeting a conference with the Endeavorers was held, showing the relation of the Young Friends work to the State and United Society C. E. Plans. We had a very profitable evening, everyone felt. Over 300 were present.

About ten o'clock the next day I went down the valley to Lindsay. We passed Mt. Mitchell, which looked very refreshing with its snow-covered peak, while we were sweltering in the raisin valley of California. About five o'clock we arrived in Lindsay, which is an orange town of three or four thousand inhabitants. It is situated at the foot hills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, has an abundance of water and most fertile soil. Here I saw for the first time oranges growing on the trees. Lemons were also in abundance.

The Friends' Meeting House here is built like a California bungalow. It has a low, flat roof, a large auditorium, a Sunday School and Endeavor room, and a basement. An audience of twenty people met to hear about the Young Friends Movement and the place of this local Meeting in it. After the address a short discussion followed and some books on Quakerism and Missions were sold.

It is a great satisfaction to see how eager Young Friends are to hear that their denomination is actually taking enough interest in her young people to send her secretary out to look them up and then to follow them afterwards. Lindsay Meeting is in a position to grow and become a strong work for Friends. They now have a keen young pastor, but he is going away and another must be found. It is necessary to find a man of vision and deep consecration for this work.

The next stop was at Los Angeles, but as this belongs to the Central Quarterly Meetings, it will be discussed later.

THOMAS E. JONES.

"SAVE JIMMIE"

A notice in a recent issue of The American Friend of the death by drowning of James and William Kelsey of Oskaloosa, Iowa, has been supplemented by several personal letters giving details, which give grounds for reflection and inspiration. When James lost his footing on the treacherous bottom of Skunk river, he grasped a playmate who, not being able to swim, with difficulty wrenched himself from the frantic grasp. But William, who also could not swim, without a moment's thought of his own danger, with one cry of "Save Jimmie! Save Jimmie!" dashed to the same fate.

The last words of that twelve-year-old boy keep ringing in my ears like a summons to renewed zeal in the work of saving my brother men. It may be that some one says, "Yes, it was splendid, but it was only brotherly." In that it WAS brotherly, it was so splendid in a world where there is all too little brotherliness.

There are so many "Jimmies" all about us. I see so many of them at just James' age of fourteen going about with cigarettes in their mouths and giving other evidence of their feet slipping into the shifting sands of sin, and there are so few to hear and heed the cry, "Save Jimmie." The Elder Brother has come to our rescue. He has taken our feet from the mire and clay and placed them upon a rock through the human instrumentality of some one that had the brotherly spirit.

That heart-cry of "Save Jimmie" may be inarticulate, but it should reach each one of us. Ask yourself today, "Am I lifting a finger to 'Save Jimmie' or am I heedlessly letting boys and girls all about me lose their footing in the treacherous sands of sin?"

The "Jimmies" may be in our own homes or in our neighbors'. We may have them in our Sunday School classes, in the school-room, office or workshop. We are every one in touch with them and if we are doing nothing to "Save Jimmie," may God have mercy upon our poor, cold and selfish souls.

The prayer of my heart is that that brother's heart-cry, the last from his lips, may be responded to by many who read this and that we may at once set ourselves to the task of "saving Jimmie."

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

THE EXTENSION PASTOR

The great problem in several of the Quarterly meetings in Nebraska Yearly Meeting is, and long has been, how to take possession of the great open field which lies before us, and which is not only ready for us, but is demanding that we bestir ourselves and occupy the vineyard.

At the recent Quarterly Meeting, which was held at Deer Trail, Colorado, a meeting which has four different outposts, begging Friends to come in with their preaching and their teaching, Denver Quarterly Meeting took a very advanced step, one which it is believed will at least make a beginning in the solution of this problem. It was decided to employ a man to act as extension pastor, who shall be paid for his services by contributions from each of the six Monthly Meetings in the Quarter and by what financial aid the outposts themselves can render, which will probably be considerable in time.

He will work under the supervision of the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, Kirby V. Bowen, and his duties will be to hold special meetings of an evangelistic character and to render such pastoral care as he can in each place. As there are ten or a dozen such points within the limits of this Quarter, it will not be easy for him to do much in each place, but a consecrated man will accomplish much and this is surely a long stride in the right direction.

Ira B. Hoskinson, a minister, was present at the Quarterly Meeting and consented to take up this work at once. As he is a man with much experience, there is no question that definite results will be forthcoming in a short time.

DENVER QUARTERLY MEETING

Denver Quarterly Meeting was held at Deer Trail, Colorado, July 21-23. This was the second time the Quarterly Meeting has been held in this place and the wisdom in taking it there has been again demonstrated. Thomas E. Jones was present and rendered good service, especially with the young people. Ira B. Hoskinson, of California, was present with a minute, as was John Bond and wife, of Stafford, Kansas. These, with the local pastors of the Quarter, gave themselves enthusiastically to the work of the Master in the various sessions as the way opened. Eighteen made the ninety-mile trip from Boulder to Deer Trail in autos. Denver was not represented.

During each of the seven sessions of the meeting, the spirit of the Savior was present, showing itself again and again in the burden for souls, in the desire for the higher life and in the positive evangelistic efforts which were often made. Several were at the altar, and the general satisfaction which was evident at the close was only the natural outcome of the perfect unity and good feeling which had prevailed from the very start. The action whereby an extension pastor was chosen to look after the outpost work of the Quarter was perhaps the most important single event.

FIELD NOTE

Boulder—The Boulder meeting is in the midst of a campaign for building funds and a hearty response is being received, not only from the members, but from the people generally of the city.

IN SOUTH DAKOTA

Mt. Vernon Quarterly Meeting of the Friends Church was held at Aurora, "Stickney P. O.," June 24-25, 1916. A good delegation was present from Harmony Monthly Meeting. We were very glad to have our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, Theo. Foxworthy, and Mrs. Foxworthy with us from Plainview, Nebraska. A. J. Lamm, our Yearly Meeting evangelist, of Fremont, Nebraska, was present and began revival meetings at the close of Quarterly Meeting.

We had good reports of the Yearly Meeting by the delegates who attended, Mrs. C. W. Hanson and Eddie Hanson, also by Mr. and Mrs. Foxworthy. Visiting ministers were blessed in preaching the Gospel message. Mrs. Foxworthy's message Sabbath morning was especially to the children; when the altar call was given, ten of the children went forward and gave their hearts to God. We were greatly blessed at every session of the Quarterly Meeting and all were unanimous in saying it was the best one held in a number of years. Pray for the work in South Dakota.

A. J. Lamm held a two-weeks' revival meeting at Aurora just following the Quarterly Meeting. He preached the word with great power, resulting in about forty definitely blessed, of which twenty-five or more were conversions. Thirteen joined the church and others expect to join later. The pastor, P. D. Guyer, ably assisted in the revival; the special music each evening was a blessing.

P. D. Guyer, of Paonia, Colorado, accepted the call and has removed with his family to Stickney, South Dakota, and taken up the work at the Aurora Friends Meeting. We gladly welcome them and are praying that God's richest blessings will rest on the work here; there is such a wide field for work.

DAVID E. SAMPSON

David E. Sampson, the pastor of Friends Church at Winston-Salem, N. C., passed away suddenly on the afternoon of July 19th. He had been out on his usual duties, calling on the sick or the sorrowing, and was sitting on his porch contemplating his afternoon's work when he spoke of not feeling well. Before a physician could be summoned by telephone, David Sampson had passed away. I enclose clipping from the Winston Journal, as below.

MARY C. WOODY.

A Champion of Righteousness

We pause to pay tribute to a choice spirit and noble character, just called from service among us to the higher life. A faithful, unselfish servant of his fellow men and a prophet of the brighter day was David E. Sampson. Though physically blind for many years, mentally, spiritually and morally his sight was never dimmed. The vision of the "new earth" was ever before him and toward that fine goal of the Christian soul he strived persistently. For nearly half a century as a minister of the Gospel of Christ he pointed men to the "new heaven," but he never forgot that they were living in an old world that is full of poverty, disease and injustice.

He was a champion of righteousness not only for the sake of saving men's souls for a home in heaven, but also for the sake of saving their lives to make better homes in the world. It was his burning desire to make the community in which he lived a little better place for children to grow up in and a little happier place for men and women to live in that contributed most to David Sampson's success in establishing here the Friends' church, of which he was pastor until his death on last Wednesday afternoon.

Until the end of time the seed which he planted will bear fruit. He did not live to see the coming of the "new earth" for which he looked, but he did live to contribute something fundamental and enduring to the forces that ultimately will bring the perfect day of truth and light and justice.

SHIPING HOUSEHOLD GOODS TO SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. Any party wishing to join in a car load of household goods from Indiana to southern California about October 1st. Address, Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Ind.

CHURCH AT WORK

Long Beach, Calif.—At Pasadena Quarterly Meeting held at Bethel Friends Church, Long Beach, July 21st, Charles and Lenna Lescault of Los Angeles, were granted a minute for general evangelistic work among Friends as way may open. They expect to attend Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings. They closed their work at Los Angeles on August 1st and were expecting to start east on the following day, stopping for a few days at Cherokee, Oklahoma. They will be glad to correspond with churches wishing evangelistic help. They can now be addressed at Cherokee, Oklahoma.

Dayton, Ohio—Friends at Dayton have sold their meeting house property and are now holding services at the Young Women's League, 24 West 4th Street. A committee is at work seeking a new location for the erection of a church building. Alpheus Trueblood and wife have consented to remain as pastors for another year. They started last week on a month's vacation, expecting to visit at different points in New England.

South Marion, Indiana—The Sunday School at Second Friends Church in South Marion is a Front Line School, having all the departments and paying special attention to the teacher training department. Sixteen months ago it graduated a class of fourteen. On July 16th another class of twelve graduates held their commencement exercises at the Second Friends Church. Dewitt Foster, the presiding pastor, delivered a most excellent address which was both instructive and elevating. Mrs. Foster, teacher of the class, presented the diplomas in an effective and commendable manner. Each of the members of the class desires to become more efficient in work for the Master, as their motto is, "Study to show thyself approved unto God." The class expresses sincere gratitude and grateful appreciation to Mrs. Foster for her excellent teaching.

Traverse City, Michigan—The greatest revival movement ever known in Grand Traverse region was the series of tabernacle meetings conducted by the Stephens Evangelistic party, beginning on May 8 and continuing over a period of six weeks. Mr. Stephens was assisted by a gifted corps of workers, Miss Leora Bogue of Fairmount, Indiana, the "Little Friend", being the soloist of the party. The number of conversions was estimated to be considerably above sixteen hundred. Much of the success of the campaign was due to the harmony and unity with which the pastors of the city took hold. Herschel Folger, pastor of the Friends meeting, was one who worked with untiring zeal and energy. Aside from his many other obligations, he accepted the place of official reporter during the campaign. We feel unspeakably grateful to our Father for the wonderful change he has wrought in our city and especially in our own church through this revival campaign. Mr. Stephens used various methods to secure and hold the interest of the people, among them being a Sunday School parade. The Friends Sunday School was awarded first prize, credit being given largely to the decorating and the artistic ability of Mr. Folger displayed in the school banner.

Children's Day was observed here on June 25th. The committee in charge proved its talent both in the decorations and the training of the children. The program was pleasing, well conducted, and was worthy of praise in every respect. June 27th marked a most pleasant event—the reception of the new members into the church. The Pastoral Committee assisted by a Reception Committee had charge of this affair which was a decided success in every particular. There was a good attendance, a good program, good refreshments and a general good feeling of fellowship. At the close of the program, T. P. Redding, clerk of the Monthly Meeting, welcomed the new members into the church.

Traverse Quarterly Meeting was held here July 14-16, with a good attendance of delegates from Manton, Long Lake, and Arthur Centre. It was an added pleasure to have with us at this time Gervas Carey and family of Wichita, Kansas. We also felt greatly blessed in having with us the Yearly Meeting Superintendent, Truman C. Kenworthy, whose two sermons on Sunday were food for the soul and touched and tendered the hearts of his congregation. Our annual Sunday School picnic was held on July 25th on the shores of our beautiful Grand Traverse Bay. The day was ideal and the crowd of picnickers thoroughly enjoyed themselves in rowing, bathing, playing tennis or in more quiet amusements. A bounteous dinner was spread in the grove.

Mount Airy, N. C.—M. Davis Bran-son resigned his pastorate here on June 1st and went with his bride to his new field of labor at Yorktown Heights, N. Y. They also attended the summer term at White's Bible School in New York City. He and his mother, who took an active part in the church work, are greatly missed. We were fortunate, however, in receiving for the summer months Miles Reece and wife who are teachers in Brevard Institute, Brevard, N. C. They will return to their school work on September 1st. Henry McKinley of West Elkton, Ohio, has been secured as pastor for the coming year. The church prayer meeting has increased in attendance and interest, and cottage prayer meetings are held on Thursday evenings.

Surrey Quarterly Meeting was held in Mount Airy, July 21-23. While the attendance from out of town was somewhat hindered on account of the copious rains, the Spirit was manifest throughout the sessions. Fleming Martin of Dobson preached on Saturday and Ellen Minthorn Marshall of White Plains preached on Sunday. Gray haired men were present who had been her students in the reconstruction days at old Westfield. Three of our young people expect to enter Guilford College in the autumn.

INDIAN REPORT FOR JUNE

To the Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs.

Dear Friends:

From our various reports you will see we have had a very rainy month, and the rain in many cases was accompanied with severe electrical storms. Much grain and hay have been damaged,—some lost altogether. Not having the opportunity to visit our Missions as we should have liked, and having some money sent us to use to best advantage, we sent our Missionaries the Book of Acts, penny addition, for distribution among the children. We are also sending them some other missionary and purity literature which they can use to advantage.

We very much deplore the military activities that are going on at present, making Oklahoma the pathway to the scene of conflict in Mexico.

C. E. DEPARTMENT

Indianola sends the following interesting news: "We had a splendid and unusual missionary program in our C. E. Prayer Meeting on Sunday evening, July 9. The program, with Miss Watland as leader, was taken from a printed leaflet program on 'The King's Highway', by Helen Barrett Montgomery. It was entitled, 'An Evening with Some Builders of the King's Highway.' Imagination and interest were aroused by announcing each speaker as if he were the original missionary instead of a substitute. The hymns were chosen for their missionary appeal. The program is as follows:

Opening song—"Dear to the Heart of the Shepherd."

Song—"Who Will Follow Jesus?"

Song—"I'll go Where you Want me to Go."

Reading—"The Epic of the Road (Introduction in the 'King's Highway') by the leader.

Scripture Reading—A Thrilling Prophecy as Visioned by men of Old. The Prayer of the Builders, (Lord's Prayer in Unison.)

First Speaker—Young Woman of Egypt, the first graduate of the Girls' School, (Costumed.)

Map of India, showing chief missions and explanation, by leader.

Dialogue between Indian Missionary and Native Village Herdsmen in Costume (without introduction.) It illustrated the great mass movements and the need of more missionaries and teachers.

Voice sings "Rescue the Perishing" (first voice and chorus.)

Second Speaker—A Man-sized Job, Mr. Sam Higginbottom.

Third Speaker—The building of the Highway in Japan.

Intercession in behalf of Builders in Remote Stretches of the King's Highway. (by members of the audience.)

Benediction.

This program was enthusiastically received by the large crowd in attendance. Interest was aroused by the unusualness of the program, the use of dialogue and costume.

VICTORY FOR PENN

Again Quakerism has manifested the fact that it possesses remarkable vitality. The biggest financial enterprise ever undertaken, in proportion to the constituents, has just been brought to a complete success. Just before midnight, Tuesday, August 1, the final subscription toward the four hundred thousand fund for Penn College was received. Those who began this campaign and who were most intimately associated with it had many periods during its progress when it seemed unaccomplishable, but from the very first until the last nothing was neglected which gave the remotest promise, and from a multitude of sources the aggregate amount was finally secured.

One could scarcely believe at certain times that an institution that had come into such a situation as had Penn College could be rehabilitated, but the outcome is a proof beyond doubt that there is a tremendous appreciation for the small college which affords Christian education, as it is also a proof of the splendid loyalty of those who have had the benefits of such education. Friends everywhere, therefore, may be assured by this victory that their educational chain, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is unbroken, and that still facilitates for that type of preparation for life which society needs may be afforded to the youth of our Society. If this enterprise had failed it would have been the first step downward for the entire Society, which would have ended finally in destruction or would have been regained at some future time by a greater effort than it has required to retrieve the present situation.

It is a time therefore for Friends everywhere to lift thankful voices to the Giver of all good and perfect gifts for this most wonderful and necessary victory.

Iowa Yearly Meeting is to be congratulated upon the splendid way in which she has rallied to the support of her college. In fact every constituency of the institution did most royally. Oskaloosa, which had been asked to give $150,000, overreached the mark by several thousand. The county, outside of Oskaloosa, did not come up to expectations, but that was partly occasioned by the impossibility of a thorough canvass on account of the shortness of the time. But the Yearly Meeting, taken as a whole, gave as liberally as was expected. That portion of the field, however, of the Society of Friends, from which assistance was most highly appreciated, was that outside the territory of Iowa Yearly Meeting. Friends, both in the east and in the west, were most generous in their gifts and helpful in their service. A brief trip through the east, followed by one in the west, resulted in such gifts, without which the enterprise would have failed, so that eastern and western Friends may have the most satisfactory assurance that it was their generosity which saved the day. Local constituents of the college could not have succeeded alone. One would not be mistaken, so it seems, if he were to conclude that Friends have learned somewhat by this experience to co-operate and to all rally together to support of one factor which has been stricken and which needs assistance. It is to be most sincerely hoped that this co-operative spirit may grow until we shall have a large fund accumulated in the hands of our trustees, which fund may be used at times of disaster in the interests of any one of our educational institutions. The educational board of Five Years Meeting has been working toward this for some time.

Those who have traveled far afield in the interests of the Penn College Financial Campaign have discovered what seems to be positive proof that such a fund could be accumulated if some man of ability were put into the field to devote his efforts entirely to the accomplishment of this task.

Let a great volume of praise and thanksgiving go up from the hearts of our people everywhere for this most singular victory and may we with humility go prayerfully forward to the enlarged service which this increased opportunity affords.

It would be very difficult to write a personal letter to everyone who had contributed, expressing to them the appreciation for their assistance, therefore I wish to take this opportunity to extend to everyone the deepest thanks of the management of Penn College and of those who have been most closely associated with this enterprise for their help, and this means that everyone who gave, even in the smallest way, has been fully appreciated. It has been the united contributions of all that has made this enterprise successful.

EARLHAM COLLEGE AFFAIRS

Prof. Alexander C. Purdy and wife, of Hartford, Conn., have arrived at Richmond, Indiana, and are to be at home on South West A Street. Professor Purdy at the opening of the college year will enter upon his duties as head of the department of Biblical Literature at Earlham College. He was an instructor at the Young Friends' Conference held at Cedar Lake near Chicago last week. For the past five years Mr. Purdy has been carrying on his theological and graduate work at Hartford Theological Seminary and at Harvard University. During this same time he was the preacher at the Moses Brown School at Providence, R. I. In June of this year he received his degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He had previously taken the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. His Bachelor of Arts Degree was taken at Penn College, Iowa. Mr. Purdy is recognized as one of the most scholarly men in the Friends Church in America, and a man of unusual talent as a public speaker.

NEW EFFICIENCY SECRETARY

Albert G. Shepard, who for the past five years has been doing successful work as pastor of the Friends' Meeting at Glens Falls, New York, has accepted the new Field Secretaryship of New York Yearly Meeting for which position his excellent organizing abilities seem to fit him peculiarly. The following interesting account from the Post-Star, of Glens Falls, July 24, will be of interest to Friends generally:

"Albert G. Shepard yesterday submitted to his congregation his resignation as pastor of the Friend's church to take effect September 1, when he will become field secretary of the New York Yearly Meeting of Friends, a position for which he was chosen because of his organizing and business abilities, which make him peculiarly fitted for it.

"Mr. Shepard's resignation caused a distinct shock to the members of his congregation, all of whom realize that it was through his untiring and efficient efforts that the local church was built up to its present high standing, both in point of membership and efficiency.

"During the Yearly Meeting in Glens Falls last year, a committee was appointed to engage a field secretary, an important task because only men of certain qualifications could hope to succeed in the work. After considering a large number of capable men, the committee decided upon Mr. Shepard and first broached the subject to him last May.

"Mr. Shepard refused to allow the committee to consider his name, as he felt his work here was not yet finished. At the Yearly Meeting in Poughkeepsie two months ago a special committee was appointed to wait upon him and finally persuaded him to reconsider his decision. Two weeks ago he met in New York with representatives of the Yearly Meeting, when the call was so urgent and was presented in such a light that he felt impelled to accept.

"As field secretary, Mr. Shepard will be in close touch with the local church. His duty will be to minister to the needs of churches throughout New York and Vermont, in financial matters, inspirational work and in organizing. The resignation of Mr. Shepard from his pastorate of the local church is different from what it would be if he were to enter another local field.

"I am naturally deeply interested in the future and welfare of the Glens Falls church," said Mr. Shepard yesterday. "I will be in Glens Falls often, will be officially interested in the welfare of the church and subject to such calls as it may make upon my time and abilities."

"Mr. Shepard will not sever his connection with the local church until about September 1. He will remain here in order to prepare his reports for the fiscal year ending September 30. Mr. and Mrs. Shepard probably will reside in Poughkeepsie.

"Mr. Shepard became pastor of the local church in October 1911. Since January 1, 1913, 126 new members have been received, hundreds of dollars have been spent in improvements to church property and the finances of the church are in splendid condition. The work of the church is so well organized, such a spirit of unity and enthusiasm characterizes its members that Mr. Shepard felt free to offer his resignation.

"The resignation of Mr. Shepard is received with regret not only by the members of his own church, but of other congregations as well. A splendid organizer, a gifted pastor, a broad-minded man, he has performed a notable work, and his popularity is city-wide."

BIBLE SCHOOL.

August 20.

Subject—The Riot at Ephesus.

Lesson—Acts 19:23-41.

Golden Text—The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil. I Tim. 6:10.

Paul's preaching in Ephesus was unusually effective, so much so that the defection from the worship of Diana was injuring certain business interests—at least that was the charge made against him. If this charge was based on facts, there must have been a large number of the Ephesians who had become Christians. It does not follow that all those who ceased to worship Diana had become followers of Christ. It is frequently the case that in communities where Christianity is preached people become skeptical of the old faith but do not accept the new.

What was the secret of this great success? In the first place, Paul remained in the city longer than was usual for him—about three years. This gave him a chance to exert his full influence upon the city for an extended period. He evidently found the people very receptive, else he would not have remained so long. He also had a splendid staff of workers and no doubt these should be credited with much of the success of the great work.

It is quite probable that the work was far more extended than the city of Ephesus. There is good reason to believe that the nearby cities were evangelized at this time, among them being the seven churches mentioned in the book of Revelations. If this suggestion be correct, Paul probably visited at least some of them, directing the energies of his workers and inspiring the new converts by his presence.

We have here a good picture of mob violence. Mobs seldom show large intelligence; under the excitement men rush wildly about shouting this and that and, not knowing what they are doing, usually end up by doing the wrong thing. Striking examples of this can be found in our own country.

The town clerk must have been a man of more than average strength. Tactful and shrewd, he allayed suspicion, called attention to the courts where their troubles could be adjusted and seems to have quieted their fears—a splendid example of official courage and influence.

"The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil." Business was being affected, but it must be noted that it was of a certain kind. Christianity never injures constructive business. It has made banking and the credit system of our modern times possible. No such system was ever developed anywhere else until Christianity made it possible for men to be trusted. Love for money as an end in itself is an evil and money can be used to accomplish fearful ends but it is also true that it can accomplish great good.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic, "Growth; Body, Mind, Spirit." Luke 2:40-52.

That we may have a strong, clean mind, the body must be strong and clean. Body, mind and spirit grow and are strengthened by exercise. We grow and do not realize the change. Moses, when he came down from the mountain, "wist not" that his face shone. In so much of our spiritual life we are unconscious of the fact of growth. As a writer upon life in the fields likening the spiritual life to that of the seed says:

But all the winter through, though it was hidden by frost and snow, the seed was growing beneath the earth; the difference is that now we can see it. And so it is with the growth of the soul. The soul is growing, though we do not know it, in its winter weather, when all is dead and cold and dark; when the Spirit has convinced us of sin and we say, "I seem to have no part and lot with the saints, no joy nor peace; I only feel the burden of my iniquities; I question whether I am a living soul." But the seed sown by the hand of God is growing through all those wintry days; if a man can feel and lament his weakness, his deadness, his barrenness, he is a living soul.

DIED.

Coffin—Frank Coffin died at the Reid Memorial hospital in Richmond, Indiana, July 13, 1916, aged 56 years. He was a member of South Eighth Street Friends Meeting.

Kelsey—James Edward Kelsey was born at the home of his grandfather, James Townsend, near Richmond, Indiana, August 24, 1902, and was drowned in Skunk River near Oskaloosa, Iowa, July 14, 1916. When only a few months old, he went with his parents, W. Irving and Anna Kelsey, to Victoria, Mexico, where they were engaged in missionary work. There the first five years of his life were spent.

William Asa Kelsey was born at Victoria, Mexico, January 26, 1904, and was drowned in Skunk River near Oskaloosa, Iowa, July 14, 1916. He and his brother, James Edward Kelsey, were inseparable companions in study and work and play. Perhaps their most notable characteristic was their devotion to each other, and it was most significant that they were drowned together. William's agonizing cry when he saw James going down into the hole of the treacherous river bottom, "Oh, same jimmie! save Jimmie," and his self-forgetful plunge after his drowning brother were only examples of what James would have done just as readily for William. In the autumn of 1912 both boys, having given evidence of a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ, were received as active members of Oskaloosa Meeting. A funeral service for both boys was held on Monday afternoon, July 17th, although William's body was not recovered until Tuesday forenoon, the fourth day after the accident. A precious prayer service was held in the Cheesman Undertakers' parlors before the interment of William's body Tuesday evening. Inseparable in life, in death they were not divided.

Childhood

By WILLIAM L. STIDGER

Glad of heart because it is today;
Glad of heart for laughter and for play;
Full of song that God is in the sky;
And happy that the clouds are sailing by.

Full of joy and laughter-love are we
That birds are singing yonder in the tree;
That sparkling, sunlit water bubbling flows;
That whispering grass beside the fountain grows.

Ah, teach us, Father, who have older grown:
With simple joys the whole wide world is sown;
That flowers are blooming, clouds are high;
That stars are myriad in the sky.

That we have health, and hope, and light;
That home-gleaming glimmer through the night;
Teach us like Childhood, sweet, at play,
To be full glad of heart because it is today.

EARLHAM COLLEGE

RICHMOND, INDIANA

Earlham College has made a great contribution to the Society of Friends and to the church at large.

The purpose to do this was never stronger than it is today. During the year 1915-16 there were thirteen student volunteers in the college. Six members of the Class of 1916 registered for Theological Seminaries for next year, one of whom is now on his way to Calcutta, Indiana, having been called out for missionary work soon after Commencement.

Earlham students are willing to get under the burden of the Church and help lift the load.

Here are some concrete evidences of this fact.

In the FIVE YEARS MEETING the following positions are held by Earlham men and women,—The Clerk, First Assistant Clerk, The General Secretary, The General Secretary elect, Three of the Trustees, Two of the Auditing Committee, the Chairman of the Executive Committee, The Secretary of the Executive Committee, The Chairman of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions, The Chairman of the Board on Education, The Chairman of the Board on Legislation and Temperance, The Chairman of the Peace Association of Friends in America, The Chairman of the Bible School Board, The Chairman of the Young Peoples' Activities, The Superintendent of the Young Peoples' Activities, The Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, about sixty appointees on standing committees.

It is impossible to enumerate the long list of College Presidents and Professors, Clerks of Yearly, Quarterly and Monthly Meetings, Presidents and Members of Boards of Trustees, Ministers, Sunday School officers and teachers, Missionaries and other active workers who are putting their Earlham training into the service of the Kingdom.

The College is a formative center of Quakerism. The future of the church is assured only as its colleges receive the support of the church.

Further information will be given on application. Address,

The Church and Its Ministry

Whatever may be said about the influence of the Christian ministry upon the Church, it needs to be kept in mind constantly that the Church owes a peculiar obligation to its ministry. Indeed the more the Church expects enlarged and efficient service from its ministers, the greater is the responsibility of the Church toward their preparation, equipment and training.

Religion must always have a voice, and while it is true that God's Spirit can and does find expression through obedient and consecrated personality in a variety of ways, it is a day when pre-eminently the prophets of the Lord must be able to speak the language of the best educated and the most cultured. Otherwise, Christianity will find itself measured increasingly by minor and decadent standards that are bound to turn many away from the faith. In the old days, the minister was both prophet and leader, regarded not only as the oracle of God, but the spokesman of the best ideals in the community. In this modern age, the ministry cannot fall below the average standards of the community without hurt to religion and without prejudice to the Church.

The Society of Friends cannot maintain its standing as a religious influence in the world of today unless its ministers can keep abreast of the average progress of the membership and the average ideals of the communities in which they deliver their messages. Friends have always been supporters of education, especially of higher education, but they have been distressingly slow to apply their convictions to those of our number who are being called from time to time into the ranks of the preachers of God's eternal truth. Pinning faith to the miraculous in the formulation and delivery of the gospel message, at first we fell into the error of putting a premium upon ministerial ignorance, and later, while stressing the value of education even in ministerial life, we have neglected to face the problem involved by providing adequately for proper ministerial equipment and training. We need to give assent to this utterance of The United Presbyterian in a recent issue: "The most essential fact to keep in mind is just this: the work of the kingdom of God, in its highest phases, waits for the services of those who are endowed with the blessings of an education."

Just here we come directly to the distinctive field of the Christian school, which pre-eminently must be directed to the task of cultivating the moral and spiritual life of the people. The Christian school must not only be able to give a kind of instruction which no secular agency can give, but the Church is bound by the highest obligations to see that its ministry especially is given the benefit of this instruction. The great movements of the Church, missionary, social and evangelistic, cannot go on as they ought, unless the leaders in these departments have been developed according to the best moral and educational standards, and the pulpit, speaking popularly, is bound to suffer decadence, if the ministry of the Word must meet the handicap of an uneducated preparation and training.

It has been said that Christianity is essentially a teaching religion. To make it otherwise is to suffer at the very outset of the Christian propaganda. The preaching cannot be all dogma nor can it be exhortation exclusively. The preacher must teach, and how can he teach unless he be taught, not alone by experience and continual revelation, but in terms of the higher and better education which it is the province of the Christian school to furnish? The first apostles were never able to get far beyond the simple recital of that which their eyes had seen and their ears had heard, but an element was soon gathered into the Church that most of all needed teaching concerning the way of life. Here, pre-eminently, was the field of the Apostle Paul and the later Apostles, except for whose services the young church might easily have died. Thus it is that we find Paul admonishing the young Timothy: "And the things which thou hast heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." And yet again he admonishes: "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

Of course, we do not say that no man or woman can preach who does not have a college education, but we are free to say that the service of all would be greatly enhanced if they could have training in a Christian school. There can be no greater heresy than the fallacy that faith and learning are incompatible. In a world where science claims its disciples in every field of life, it will be a far greater triumph of faith to be able to show the reconciliation of science with religion than it will be to foster the belief that there is an inevitable conflict, the one with the other. To neglect education is to foster superstition, and to neglect the education of our preachers is to run the risk of breeding fanaticism to the exclusion of that sanity which always characterized the teachings of our Lord. No one can read the story of the great religious movements that have sprung from the university and college without coveting for all our ministers that their training might have just such a setting.

By what means our ministers can be given the advantages of adequate training in a Christian school is the problem which the Church itself must solve. Unfortunately, many of those who have felt the call of God to preach the Gospel of Eternal Life are not able to avail themselves of a course in college. It is just here where the obligation of the Church must begin to be recognized. If the Church is to voice its recognition of the call to the ministry, and if in turn it is to receive the services of those who are thus called, it is bound not only to see that Christian schools are maintained according to the highest and best standards, but that our prospective ministers are furnished the means with which to secure the needed education. Whether this can be done by an endowment loaning fund, or by Quarterly Meetings assuming the responsibility of paying for the education of its preachers, or by the use of both methods, is a question for the Church as a whole to determine. It is certain at least that the Society of Friends is face to face with the vital problem involved, and by every rule of consistency it must set itself to the task of finding a solution.

Our Place In Education

By L. L. HOBBS

What one thinks of education is determined by what one is. Therefore, being is more fundamental than thinking. It is well that this is so; for otherwise only those persons could be right who think and reason correctly, who have the right, that is, the final, conception of the relations of things; in a word, who know the absolute truth. As this is impossible, we should, on any such basis as this, be foredoomed to failure.

The Friends have been pioneers in teaching individual freedom and in claiming for the individual a self-sufficiency. In other words, they have claimed to be independent thinkers. On this ground there is no place for the ordinances. We are not so dependent upon other men as to make it necessary that some priest should perform something and then make a pronouncement which is supposed to be authoritative. In theory, among Friends the individual is well nigh or quite supreme.

Extremes are nearly always unsafe; and we cannot very well conceive of organized activity except through giving up some of our self-notions for the sake of the increased power that comes through organized co-operative effort. For this reason we shall have to yield a certain portion of our individual infallibility in order to combine into groups or societies based on certain declarations of faith and practice, these societies or groups becoming very powerful agencies for the promotion of government, and civilization, all for the salvation, in a broad way, of the individual and of society.

The Friends' schools and colleges ought to be expected to stand for more for the individual than any other schools. They should, in order to come within the range of independence in thinking, be free from pretension; because the truth is the ultimate air, and the truth and pretension cannot keep company with each other. The whole system of Friends' educational work by right ought to be unique in the world, and stand for the farthest limit of scientific achievement, demanding the best equipment that can be provided for every kind of investigation—in chemistry, biology, physics, psychology, history, art, language, literature.

The Friends are not the people that should, for a moment, give up our high ideals of individual liberty and freedom; and our schools and colleges should possess the very breath of solid endeavor, and should be the place where our youth shall learn "the things useful in creation" and be happy because each man or woman may stand for one strong, immovable, personal force for truth and righteousness.

How like our natural home should Friends' schools be! Because there is no disposition to work deception, and no possibility of doing so if we should try. We could solve the problem if we should be willing to give our life to it, how far our colleges and schools should think it necessary to go with the modern trend to vocational training (so-called), what should be our attitude toward the cultural studies.

This question is to be determined in large measure by what ideal we have in mind for the young people in order to meet life's battles, and win in the contest. We must concede, I think, that there is scarcely anything more effective in convincing young people of the power of truth in our lives, in business, in religion, than the daily demands made upon a student by laboratory work in the various sciences that we teach in our best colleges. Things must be done according to the facts in the case, and there is no evasion by short cut, or by false utterance.

The question is over and over again, "What are the facts?" No noisy proclamation will gain for us a hearing in the laboratories, and we should all be thankful that the day for making one's way in the world of science, or of practical business life by pretense, has passed by; and we all are on equal footing.

It is not to be wondered at because there are many educators who, in their shallowness, think, or say they think, that the sole purpose of education is to train people to make the dollar; as if the wisest of men had said "The dollar is the principal thing, therefore, get the dollar." But I suspect the truth is that those students who adhere pretty closely to the old, solid curriculum, including, of course, as the above remarks would warrant, a good portion of the laboratory work in the science courses, will in nearly every case be the young men and women best prepared to earn a livelihood. As one cannot be blamed for getting good or of being good; so the young men and women among Friends ought to be shown how happy they may be by doing the main fundamental thing that has a double value; one value in itself, and the other the greatest power we know to bring about by our own exertions material results in the way of good business and comfortable living, and some means to help those persons in the world who need our help.

The conclusion is that as Friends we need to wake up to the day of our opportunity, and to make a supreme effort to increase the educating power of the Society of Friends. More money for equipment and endowment is an absolute necessity. We cannot afford to limp along behind the state schools: and yet one may see how difficult the task it. But the effect of the best educational training will justify any outlay of money. A mediocre college will not do for Friends. The sham institutions are not good enough for our children to attend; and if we fall much behind the best, the most far-seeing and wise parents will send their children to the state universities, where are to be found good laboratories and libraries and scholarly, thoughtful, independent men as instructors.

Mere assertion and pretended authority will not hold much longer in the midst of such splendid institutions as you can find in almost any of our state universities. The question is, shall we give up our unique position in education and fall away into the mass of the people of our states and lose our individuality? If we lose our schools and colleges, we are certainly on the high road to lose also our distinctive religious beliefs and our power as a religious denomination.

EDUCATION AND THE TRIUMPH OF THE KINGDOM.

(Part of an article in The Standard by Secretary F. W. Padelford, of the Baptist Church.)

"Practically every great movement in Christian history has sprung from the university. It was out of the university at Alexandria that there went those trained and educated men who presented the Christian faith to the men of culture in the Mediterranean world and won their allegiance to Christianity. From that university went out the missionaries to the ends of the known world, who created that mighty movement that drew the world toward God. What a different story the history of the world would have revealed if the doors of that university at Alexandria had remained open!

"It was out of the church schools of Ireland that St. Columbanus went to christianize France. And Germany ought not to forget that it was from the schools of England that Boniface came to bring to Germany the gospel of Christ and the lamp of civilization. She owes more to England than she would be willing to acknowledge today.

"It was a professor at the University of Oxford, John Wycliffe, who saw the relation of the open Bible to an intelligent Christian faith and a vigorous Christian church, and who, in the face of great opposition and persecution, translated the Bible into the English tongue. He did more for England and America than any other man who has ever lived. Without the University of Oxford we should never have had Wycliffe. Without Wycliffe we should never have had the English Bible. Without the English Bible we should never have had these two great, intelligent, cultured, English-speaking nations.

"It was at the doors of the university church at Wittenberg that Martin Luther nailed his theses and kindled the fires of the Reformation. It was from that university as a center that he sent out forces that converted Germany to Protestantism. Without the University of Wittenberg there could have been no great Protestant Reformation.

"The Roman church has at times been quick to see the important relation of the college to the extension of Christianity. When following the Protestant Reformation she had well nigh lost all of Europe to her faith, Ignatius Loyola was a student at the University of Paris. It was here that he and his six fellow students took the vows which organized the Society of Jesus. Under his leadership the church founded a chain of hundreds of colleges from Ireland to Japan and in a century had planted the cross all over Asia and had won most of Europe back to the church, and she has never lost it since.

"It was at a New England college that the modern missionary movement started. At Concord bridge a shot was fired that was heard around the world. At Williamstown a prayer was offered that echoed around the globe, and those six college boys who, facing the need of a great non-Christian world, said, "We can do it if we will," kindled the forces of a reformation that was greater than Germany or Scotland ever knew.

Moreover, it was in an American college that the Student Volunteer Movement was organized, which has been the great recruiting agency of all time. In the thirty years of its existence more than 30,000 young men and women have enrolled themselves in its ranks and dedicated their lives to Christian service and more than 7000 of them are already leading the armies of conquest in the non-Christian world.

"When you come to count up the agencies that have lent their power to the christianizing of this old world you have to write the Christian college almost at the head of the list. It stands second only to the Christian church. * * *

"The Christian colleges in America were originally founded to train men for the Christian ministry. In those early days nearly every man who entered their doors was already an avowed Christian, but as time went on and they expanded their curricula and began to prepare men for other tasks, men came who were not professing Christians. Then the college had a new function—to bring the Christian message to bear upon these men. These schools were quick to seize this new opportunity. There is no better place, save the Christian home, in which to bring Christian influence to bear upon young life than in the Christian school. Here teachers and pupils live in the closest proximity for days and months at a time. There is no other place where real personality has such a chance to manifest itself as in the Christian school. There can be no better chance to propagate the gospel. The college is, more than any other, the place of openness of mind. The student is constantly in search for truth. Truth has its best opportunity to appeal to his mind and heart.

"It is not strange therefore that these Christian schools have been great evangelizing agencies. Take, for example, Oberlin College in Ohio. It was founded by one of the greatest evangelists of the nineteenth century, Charles G. Finney. He put his stamp indelibly on the school. Hundreds of young men and women have found Christ as their Savior within those college walls.

"It is interesting to note that three of the world's greatest evangelists founded schools, Finney, Spurgeon and Moody. Moody's schools at Northfield have always been centers of evangelistic fervor. I do not know whether Billy Sunday is getting ready to endow a college or not, but I would suggest to him that he could not find a better investment for his money. * * *

There is absolutely no escape from the punishment which God promised shall fall upon sinners. "The wages of sin is death." In our case the punishment fell upon Jesus, who suffered for us, that we might go free.—Exchange.

WHY MEXICANS HATE AMERICANS

By CLYDE ROBERTS

(A Toast, written for the annual banquet of the Alumni Association of the Academic Dept., Nebraska Central College.)

Seventy years ago Mexico and the United States were approximately the same size. In the conflict that began at that time between the two nations, one-half of Mexico's domain was wrested from her and added to the United States, giving the latter country three times the area of the former. That conquest helped to make the United States predominant in North America and settled Mexico's destiny to be that of a second or third rate power.

An examination of the circumstances shows that, while Mexico was not without blame, the United States was the chief sinner. Magnify Mexican incompetence as you like, call it "manifest destiny" if you will, the fact remains that the United States drove an exceedingly hard bargain because she was in a position to do so.

The trouble over Texas was the beginning of the hatred of the Mexican for the American and his Uncle Samuel. Before that time the ties of mutual sympathy were strong between the two countries. So here we have reason No. 1 why Mexicans hate Americans: Fear of their strength and suspicion of their designs. This fear and suspicion extends to Central and South American States, though in the latter region European press agents are partly responsible for such feeling.

But we find other reasons. The language of Mexico is Spanish, that of the United States, English; the religion of Mexico for the most part is Catholic, in the United States Protestant ideals predominate; United States, until recently, has been preoccupied in her own development and Mexico is very much occupied with home affairs even yet. American manufactories, though extensive, supplied little beyond the home market and Mexico's needs, though great, have their supply, to the extent of her ability to pay, from Europe. Mexico has not evolved or developed a type and some question whether or no there is an American type; be that as it may, Mexican immigrants have come largely from South Europe, while your Uncle Samuel's children have come from northern Europe, thus representing fundamental differences in beliefs, ideals and character. Furthermore, the descendants of the Aborigines far outnumber the descendants of immigrant stock in Mexico, which is not the case in the United States. One often hears in Mexico the boast that their policy has been to uplift and free the native while the policy of the United States has been one of extermination. Though the development of the railways in the United States, after she had completed the Union Pacific in 1869, was very rapid, yet she had no roads extending into Mexican territory until many years later. All of these things—difference of language, of race, of religion and of ideals, which, with preoccupation in home affairs, hindered intercourse between the two countries—account for the misunderstanding which may be given as the second reason why Mexicans hate Americans.

Briefly, then, we have the conditions which in the past have hindered intercourse between the two countries, but a glance will show that what were serious hindrances in the past, as, e. g., "preoccupation at home," can no longer be so considered. On the contrary, the amassing of capital and organization of industries, together with the rise in values, demand for foreign products and development of transportation facilities, are encouraging expansion into virgin fields. The "dead weight of illiteracy" and low moral standard of Mexico, producing vicious government, have retarded development and made of that nation one of those virgin fields for expansion and at the very door of its powerful neighbor. That expansion had begun before the breaking out of the Madero revolution in Mexico when approximately 45,000 Americans were reported in that country with considerable hold upon its commerce and industries.

History tells us that there can be but one result from the impact of an intelligent, rich and powerful people upon a weaker group, especially if the latter occupy territory of great natural resources. So the American expansion into Mexico has caused more and more friction and the end is not yet. Mexican students, who, by the way, are more influential in their own land than American students in theirs, have, on the slightest provocation, paraded the streets crying, "Death to the Americans (or Gringos)." Mexican newspapers have talked of "Commercial intervention," of "Peaceful occupation" and other worse designs of the "Northern Invaders," whom they designate as buzzards and wolves. The Americans, especially those representing the powerful corporations, such as Standard Oil and the Guggenheim mining interests, are accused of financing and otherwise promoting certain revolutions to gain coveted concessions; they are charged with being incapable of sympathizing with the Mexicans in their struggle for economic freedom and are qualified as, upon the whole, undesirable on account of their arrogance, lack of manners and questionable motives. These accusations could be applied as well, and sometimes are, to the other foreigners and to wealthy natives, but there is a tendency to distinguish between Americans and Europeans in the belief that the former are, with few exceptions, enemies of the commonwealth. The Mexicans, in a word, want to develop their own country, however slowly that may be, and though they welcome foreign capital, it cannot be said to be with enthusiasm, nor can it be denied that the preference is for English, French, German or Japanese capital rather than American.

In this commercial expansion, then, we see another source of hatred for the Americans and the aversion for American capital reveals the real source of the hatred to be jealousy, though the element of fear is not lacking.

Summarizing, we find that military conquest, racial differences and commercial exploitation on the part of the United States have given rise to fear, misunderstanding, suspicion and jealousy on Mexico's part. Other causes might be added and the ones given might be developed in greater detail, should the scope of this paper permit, but the writer is confident that most of the explanations as to why the Americans are "in bad" with the Mexicans, if analyzed, would classify themselves under the causes given above.

Just here comes the temptation to discourse upon duties of governments, though that is beyond the limits of our subject. One cannot forbear, however, a word on the opportunity that presents itself to promote better relations between the two peoples.

Circumstances seem to have conspired to spoil the friendly relations between the two neighboring peoples until the suspicion and hatred of the Mexican have passed all bounds of reason, until even legitimate American enterprises are not safe, yet there are areas where this feeling has been modified to a remarkable degree and almost without exception these are the areas influenced most by Protestant missions.

The miner, the merchant, the oil magnate, fibre grower or rancher all exploit the country without satisfactory recompense. The American hobo and even the tourist are sources of irritation, while the missions alone labor for the good of the native without hope of reward. For the irritation from the political, social and economic sources the real counter-irritant is the Protestant mission which, if supported with one-third the funds and one-tenth the men used by the army and navy departments to "promote a proper understanding," could, in fifty years, make our southern border as peaceful as is our Canadian frontier.

LETTING GOD GIVE

Our giving to God releases His giving to us. But we never can equal Him in giving. The more we give Him, the more He will give us. If His resources are greater than ours, if His love is greater than ours, we can be sure that He will give us more than we can ever give Him. But He cannot give us all that He wants to unless we give Him all that He wants us to. Paul Rader, the new pastor of the Moody Church in Chicago, who is being so blessedly used for soul-winning in that great and needy city, says that "Giving is the same as handing God a basket which He can fill with fruit and pass back." Or again, "Giving is like putting a chute into your cellar so that God can fill it with coal this cold weather." It is good sense, both spiritually and temporally, to have the channel between God and ourselves wide open.—Selected.

THE FAMILY CIRCLE

CHOOSING HER PROFESSION

By MARY MARGARET SISSON

Over the leaf-covered, half-frozen earth, twilight was casting a softening mantle. The wind made havoc of the reddish-brown curls outlined on the white sweater of a slender girl hurrying across the muddy road. Before her was a large gate which hid a beautiful mansion from the view of the passer-by. With her hand still on the gate's knob, the girl paused to view the scene before her. The stately, old, colonial home, of which there are now too few in Southern Ohio, loomed up distinctly in all its whiteness against the darkening heavens. "Why, it's just like Aunt Virginia herself," exclaimed the girl, half aloud. "It stands alone, a magnificent representative of the last of its kind." Just then Jack Frost, sailing along with his good friend Boreas, caused the girl to cease her meditations and hurry up the driveway.

She opened the door without knocking. After hanging her wraps on a pair of antlers which adorned one of the walls, she went down the long dimly-lighted corridor till she came to a door which bore these words, exquisitely inlaid:

"Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man."

"Come in, Elizabeth, dearie," called a rich, mel-low voice from within. Elizabeth always said Aunt Virginia's voice reminded her of "The Angelus."

When Elizabeth opened the door a beautiful, though to her customary, picture greeted her eyes. The sweet little woman in gray, seated in a low rocker before the fireplace, was perhaps fifty years old. But Aunt Virginia had defied Father Time. Her skin was almost as fresh and rosy as Elizabeth's own; her clear, deep gray eyes, at times almost black, had lost none of their youthful lustre; but her hair waved back from her Madonna-like forehead in a snow-white mass. Elizabeth was fond of saying that the only common thing about this most extraordinary woman was her medium height.

Elizabeth brought a small stool from one of the corners and, seated at Aunt Virginia's feet, laid her head upon the older woman's lap. Aunt Virginia stroked the girl's hair while both gazed into the fire. This was their custom when something weighty was upon hands. Finally Elizabeth turned and looked up into the sweet face above her.

"Auntie, father has gained back all the money he lost, and more, too. So I may enter college at the beginning of the next semester."

Aunt Virginia went on stroking the girl's hair while Elizabeth gazed into the fire again. After a short interval Elizabeth spoke. "Now, auntie, just what course shall I take? What shall be my profession?"

A hint of a smile lurked around the corners of Aunt Virginia's mouth at the word profession. "What is your idea of a profession, Bettsie-girl? Is there no certain line you long to follow?"

"Why, that is just what I can't determine! I had given up hope of a career. But now—well, I don't want to be a stenographer or a bookkeeper or—"

"A teacher," suggested Aunt Virginia, quickly.

"No. Daddy Doctor says I mustn't choose an indoor occupation. I took domestic science in high school, you know."

Elizabeth put another log on the fire and for a while the two watched it burn. Then Elizabeth spoke. "Auntie, when you were young didn't girls have careers? Did you never have a profession?"

Aunt Virginia gazed beyond her into the fire. "Yes, dear. Everyone has a career, a profession. When we start life's battles we start our career. When I was twenty I was highly educated for the times. Every advantage had been mine. Like the rest of my girl friends, I hoped to marry and become the center of a group of society. It was then—" Her voice broke, but in a moment, folding her hands, she calmly resumed. "I was engaged to a young admiral. It was May, and we were to be married in June. George was bringing mother back from a visit to the State Capital. The train they were on was wrecked, and—"

Elizabeth gazed in wide-eyed sympathy. Aunt Virginia wiped the tears away. "Father was wild. I had little time for my own grief comforting him, the two boys, and Elsie. Then, after the rites were over, I faced my own despair. My life was a blank. What could I, what should I do? One day I picked up a small volume, a present from George. It was 'The Vision of Sir Launfal.' A voice in me spoke. 'You will find work just as Sir Launfal found the Holy Grail—at his own door.' The next day I discovered that beautiful poem which contains the lines imprinted upon my door. Then it was that I saw my father's need of men and my true career began."

Elizabeth rose with quivering lips. Putting her arms around Aunt Virginia's neck she whispered brokenly, "I see clearly now. I am going to try to take dear mother's place in our home."

In a moment she was gone. Outside the door she paused and looked at the familiar words. They had now taken on a deeper significance for her. "Why," she whispered, "Aunt Virginia has been a friend to every man, woman and child that's been in Alexandria for the last thirty years."

As she stood again at the gate, looking up at the stars, she held out her arms and said, softly, "My career shall be what hers was—Others."—Western Christian Advocate.

THE HIGHER LIFE

THE WAY OF FAITH

Joseph had the wisdom which is from above; a delineation of which is found in James 3:17, 18. That is what beautified his boyhood, and saved him through all his life from being spoiled by the honors which were thrust upon him or the temptations and unjust afflictions which fell to his lot in life. Wisdom manifests itself peculiarly at times, and, as seen in God's dealings with us, it exhibits some austerity. It is hard for those of us with narrow vision to account for Joseph's method of dealing with his brethren; and some with narrower vision may think that his afflictions and imprisonment were due to an excess of virtue. But the success of all his undertakings in life justifies wisdom's ways. God is with such men in this world and such men will be with God in the next world.—Leslie's Weekly.

FORGIVING ONE ANOTHER

"There are continually things to be forgiven. Intended and unintended, by forethought and for lack of thought, for things said and done, and for things not said or done. We are to have the spirit and attitude of forgiveness at all times for all things. On our part, and as far as it is possible for us, it is always already done. As heart action is the real action and this is always possible to us in this matter, it is always already done. It may not be appreciated by others, but it is already freely forgiven. Tenderness of heart and kindness of act are related as the fountain to the stream. The movement bears the conditions which impel it. Where the heart is full of tenderness, tenderness springs indigenous into activity. For this there is one all-sufficient cause, the remedial blood of Jesus which gives 'a heart in every thought renewed, and full of love divine.' This is the pattern shown us in the heavenlies. In our prayers we say, 'forgive as we forgive,' and the apostle says, 'Forgive as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.' How rich and full the forgiveness of infinite love in atoning blood. THIS IS MY FRIEND

Let me tell you how I made His acquaintance. I had heard much of Him, but took no heed.

He sent daily gifts and presents, but I never thanked Him.

He often seemed to want my friendship, but I remained cold.

I was homeless and wretched and starving and in peril every hour, and He offered me shelter and comfort and food and safety, but I was ungrateful still.

At last He crossed my path, and with tears in His eyes He besought me, saying, "Come and abide with me."

Let me tell you how He treats me now:

He supplies all my wants.

He gives me more than I dare ask.

He anticipated my every need.

He begs me to ask for more.

He never reminds me of my past ingratitude.

He never rebukes me for my past follies.

Let me tell you further what I think of Him.

He is as good as He is great.

His love is as ardent as it is true.

He is as lavish of His promises as He is faithful in keeping them.

He is as jealous of my love as he is deserving of it.

I am in all things His debtor, but He bids me call Him friend.—From an Old English Manuscript.

WITH OUR SCHOOLS

GUILFORD COLLEGE.

Dr. L. L. Hobbs of Guilford College, is much interested in the peace work of the South, being at the head of this movement in North Carolina.

H. Louisa Osborne of the faculty of Guilford College, has spent the summer vacation among relatives in Indiana.

President Thomas Newlin of Guilford College, spent ten days at the Blue Ridge Y. M. C. A. Conference in June and since that time he has visited several meetings in the interests of the college.

Prof. E. Partington of the English Department, Guilford College, is spending the summer at Syracuse University.

Julia S. White, Librarian at Guilford College, attended New England Yearly Meeting.

Prof. Joseph H. Peele of Guilford College, has recently spent two weeks in New England.

PACIFIC COLLEGE.

Pacific College is continuing to enlarge the scope of its work. It is not the aim to make the college in any sense a vocational school, but it is the desire that the college may offer as thorough preparation for practical life as possible. Accordingly a new department has been added, which will enable the school better to serve the community, and at the same time will add considerably to the income of the institution.

Beginning with the opening of the new school year, the college will maintain a thorough business department. A competent instructor has been secured in stenography, type-writing, bookkeeping, commercial law and kindred subjects, and at the recent yearly meeting enough money was raised to equip the commercial department. As fast as the number of students makes it advisable, the faculty of this department will be enlarged.

The department of home economics, which was one of the most popular and successful in the college last year, has been considerably enlarged for the coming year. The Biblical work given this year will be considerably more extensive than last year.

Prospects are exceptionally bright for a considerable increase in the student body which was greater last year in spite of the stringent financial conditions, than it was the year before. Especially in the college proper will there be a large increase in the enrollment the coming year.

WHO'S WHO AMONG EARLHAM-ITES.

The most pretentious Bulletin Earlham College has issued is just from the press and is being distributed to all former Earlham students and officers whose addresses are known. It contains the names, present addresses and vocations of over 6,500 former and present Earlhamites. The book contains 212 pages and represents an amazing amount of work. It is issued under the joint auspices of the Old Students' Association and the College Trustees. The Alumni Triennial is included in the book also. The work of compilation and editing has been done largely by Dr. and Mrs. A. D. Hole of the Old Students' Association, and M. A. J. Ballard, College Registrar. There are four full page halftones of Earlham presidents: Barnabas C. Hobbs, Joseph Moore, Joseph John Mills, Robert L. Kelly.

Among the interesting data are the following:

Total number of "Earlham" families in which there are children	571
Total number of children in the above families	1050
Members of the second and third generations who have attended Earlham	204
Number of families sending all children to Earlham	35
Number of families sending two or more children to Earlham	58
Largest number of children sent by any one family	7

Earlham Notes.

At the opening of the fall term on the 12th of September, Miss Elgia Wittmer, of the University of Wisconsin, will become head of the Department of Vocal Music. Miss Wittmer is an experienced teacher of voice and herself a beautiful singer and the vocal interests of the College will be well taken care of by her.

The scholastic standard of the Earlham faculty was never so high perhaps as at present. In addition to professors of ripe scholarship and rich experience without the doctor's degree there are with the doctors degree two from the University of Chicago, two from Johns Hopkins, two from Cornell, two from the University of Michigan, and one from Hartford Theological Seminary. One other professor has finished his work for the Ph. D. at Yale University and one is on her last year's work for the doctorate at the University of Wisconsin.

Two recent graduates of Earlham College have received appointment in the faculty of the University of Wisconsin for next year. Earlham graduates are to be found in the faculties of most of the leading universities and many of the leading colleges of the country.

The quality of the Earlham faculty is indicated by the fact that for each of three successive years a member of the Earlham faculty has been taken on by Oberlin College, which institution has recently received a $6,000,000.00 addition to its endowment fund.

This year Miss Louise Rodenbaeck, of the German Department, has been prevailed upon to return to Oberlin, which is her Alma Mater. Her successor at Earlham is Miss Dorothy V. Robertson, also an Oberlin alumna and a German teacher of unusually successful experience.

The Commercial Club of Richmond, Indiana, has sent to each of its more than six hundred men, a letter urging them to give employment to Earlham students on part time during the coming college year. Quite a number have given immediate response that they will do so, and there is no reason therefore why any ambitious and healthy student who wishes a college education and has limited means cannot get into Earlham this year.

CLEVELAND BIBLE INSTITUTE

The work of this Institute has been greatly blessed during all its history and never more than during the past year. For over twenty-four years it has proved its efficiency as a real live training school. A large number of Pastors, Evangelists, Missionaries and Christian Workers are engaged in active service today who received their training at this Institute. Many of these are working among Friends.

The Board is wholly composed of Friends as is practically all the faculty. While the work is interdenominational in character the facts as above stated, coupled with the further fact that a large number of students are Friends, give the institution a value to Friends that is by no means inconsiderable.

The plan of work gives the students an immediate efficiency upon leaving the Institute as they engage in various forms of Christian work while in the school as preaching, leading prayer meetings, house to house visitation, personal work and mission work.

The utmost emphasis is laid on the importance of a strong spiritual life and all possible means are used to promote and conserve it. While the training of the intellect is given its proper place it is never allowed to crowd out the more important matter, the right relation of the student to his God.

The Institute stands for the word of God as the full expression of God's will for humanity, "the faith which was once for all delivered unto the Saints."

MOSES BROWN SCHOOL

One of the most interesting events of the past year at Moses Brown School was the Mid-winter Alumni Dinner. Great interest has already been shown in the new Alumni Association and an effort is now being made to gather the names and addresses of as many graduates and old scholars as possible in order to publish a school directory in time for the Centennial Celebration in 1919. In connection with the Alumni Association it is interesting to call to mind some of the meetings of former Alumni Associations which have been allowed to lapse. The reports of many of these meetings have been preserved at the School and much of the matter which they contain is worthy of publication. It was for one of these gatherings that Whittier's poem, "The Quaker Alumni" was written. We reprint an account of an address on the founding of an Alumni Association, delivered by Pliney E. Chase, in 1859.

Pliney E. Chase of Philadelphia, said that he had considered it a pleasure, and almost a duty, on his way to the meeting, to make a pilgrimage to the school. He visited the building, the playground, the groves,—and while he found much that was unaltered, he found many changes, some of which he was satisfied were real improvements and cheering marks of progress. The pleasant associations that were awakened by the visit had given additional interest to the present gathering, and additional reasons for hoping beneficial results from the organization of an Alumni Association. Such an organization would not only afford an opportunity for frequent agreeable reunions among those who had been bound together by the ties of early friendship and kindred pursuits, but it would also, undoubtedly, react advantageously on the institution to which it owed its existence.

The school was established for the purpose of affording a "guarded education" and it is the duty of its friends and of those who administer its discipline to see that the intentions of its founders are wisely carried out. A rightly guarded education will not only shield the pupil from the undue influence of a worldly spirit, but it will also protect him from the even greater danger of unbounded self-complacency; it will not limit its teachings to any narrow and merely sectarian views, but it will embrace all broad and liberal instructions, subordinated to the highest moral and religious principles,—principles that are recognized not only by Friends, but by all sincere, earnest, Christians. If the Association, co-operating with our beloved Alma Mater, secures to all the future pupils of the school such an education as this,—after the world has accomplished its purpose, and the memory of all temporal things has become like a long forgotten dream, the influence we are now inaugurating will continue to be felt, in the character and dispositions that it will aid in impressing on coming generations, as a portion of their eternal inheritance.

OAKWOOD SEMINARY.

Prospects are good far an active year at Oakwood Seminary this year. For a time some anxiety was felt by friends of the school on account of the compulsory military training laws which we have in New York State. After a visit to Albany we have assurance from high authority that the physical training provided by the commission will have no military implications.

Our pastor, Ida T. Parker, has attended Summer School at Auburn Theological Seminary. Work for a degree is well under way and will soon be completed. She is the first woman to be admitted to the regular work of the Seminary. Her work in the Biblical Department of Earlham was given full recognition.

Mr. Y. O. Wain, teacher of History and German, is spending the summer at Harvard Summer School. He led their chapel services three mornings. He is also doing some pastoral work near Cambridge.

Our new music teacher, Margaret Talbert, taught last year in Cleveland Bible Training School. She comes from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Miss Talbert comes to Oakwood with splendid recommendations as to ability and character.

Harold Marshall will be preceptor of Oakwood next year. He has done a year of graduate work in California University. He is a graduate of Penn College and has taught two years in Pacific College. Mr. Marshall is a good athlete and will add much to the school life in this respect.

Prospects are good for a splendid group of young people in the Seminary this year.

MINUTE OF APPRECIATION.

At a recent meeting of Fall River Preparative Meeting, the following minute was placed upon its records:

"Our Meeting unites in an expression of sincere appreciation of the faithful labors of our friend, Murray S. Kenworthy, who has served us as minister for the past ten months. On account of his studies at the Harvard Divinity School, he was able to be with us only on First Days. Even in this limited time he accomplished much work along various lines, which included preaching, teaching the Young Men's Bible Class, active work in the Christian Endeavor Society, and pastoral visits. He also gave a valuable series of lectures on the Hebrew prophets during the winter and spring months.

"He has strengthened and encouraged our members by his ministry. Though we deeply regret his departure, we are profoundly grateful for his helpful presence and devoted service."

ALL DAY HOME COMING

The Friends Church at Sycamore, Indiana in the eastern part of Howard county, is planning to have an all day meeting next Sunday, August 20. It will be the 26th anniversary of the organization of the Meeting, and also it is to be a home coming day. We are expecting many of our friends to be present. Everybody is invited to come and worship with us. Dinner will be served on the church grounds.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Working in MEXICO, JAMAICA, CUBA, BRITISH EAST AFRICA

Home Office, Second National Bank Building, Richmond, Ind.

EDGAR F. HIATT, TREASURER

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS, GENERAL SECRETARY

ROSS A. HADLEY, ASSISTANT SECRETARY

AN AFTERNOON WITH EAST INDIANS.

Last Sunday, P. M., taking with us two East Indian Mission girls who sing, we visited one of the properties (i e., plantations). We could not have been given a more hearty welcome by any company at home. "Salaam, salaam," in pleased voices greeted us from all sides. As we passed about among the forty Indians there, they all begged for a song, spreading down their best blanket or giving us the best seat they had. As we sang and read and talked to them of Jesus' love and of His power to forgive and cleanse sins, they said, "Yes, Miss Sahib, true word, good word." While we realized that perhaps from many of them these words did not come from the depths of the heart, yet we thanked God that the Bible truths were not rejected and prayed that God would care for the seed sown.—Lora Arms.

RECRUITS FOR AFRICA.

A multitude of Friends will rejoice over the news that another missionary family is to be sent to Africa this autumn. With Dr. Blackburn and his family returning on furlough this summer and Dr. Estock's furlough due only two years hence, the necessity for sending out another missionary doctor has become urgent. For two years past, the Board of Missions has had before it the applications of Dr. Archibald A. Bond, a practicing physician of Westfield, Indiana, and Mira Cope Bond, his wife. During this period their concern for service beyond the sea has become stronger. And after the most careful consideration, the Board has united with them in their concern, realizing that Dr. Bond's medical knowledge and the training and experience which both have had in Christian work is such as would seem to qualify them in an unusual manner for work in our difficult Africa field. They will be accompanied to Africa by their little daughter, Dorothy Marie, four years of age.

The cost of transportation to and from Africa and of maintaining workers at such a great distance from the home base is necessarily heavy. The Board has consented to send these Friends to the field, with the financial burden which it entails, only because of the imperative need on the field and the confidence we have felt that Friends would approve and support the move with their prayers and their gifts. Already a few meetings in Western Yearly Meeting have expressed a desire to have a share in the enterprise by providing a part of the funds needed. Others it is hoped will wish to take a similar action—thereby entering into partnership with these new missionaries in their investment of life in the cause of Christ's Kingdom. Any meeting wishing thus to establish a living link with the Africa field should correspond at once with Charles Tebbetts or Ross Hadley, the secretaries of the Board.

MOVEMENTS OF MISSIONARIES.

Mary Elizabeth Allen, who has been in charge of the East Indian orphans in the Happy Grove School in Jamaica, will remain in this country until about the end of October. Miss Allen's home is in England, but for various reasons she felt it would be better to take her brief furlough in this country. She has visited in Worcester, Mass.; Columbus and Delaware, Ohio, and at various points in Iowa, including Lake Okoboji, where she attended the Summer School of Missions.

Clyde E. Roberts, of Victoria, Mexico, is at present visiting meetings within Nebraska Yearly Meeting and hopes to be able to get back to Mexico in September or October. The Roberts family has been off the field over a year. Last winter Clyde Roberts was enrolled in the graduate department of the University of Nebraska and feels that he will now be better equipped than ever for his work. Mrs. Roberts and their two children are in California visiting relatives and, if conditions will permit, will proceed with Mr. Roberts to Mexico early in the autumn.

Lena A. Hadley, whose work at Puerto Padre, Cuba, last year was unusually heavy on account of Henry and Alma Cox being on furlough, decided, with the consent of the Board, to spend this summer in the north and has spent several weeks with her relatives at Coldwater, Kansas. She hopes to return to Cuba about August 26th. She writes that she feels much better than when she left Cuba. The rest at home seemed to be exactly what she needed.

Although on American soil since early in June, Solomon Tice at San Benito, Texas, has been busily occupied with the preparation of reports and estimates and has in no sense been taking a holiday or furlough. Mrs. Tice is with him again after spending several months in the north under the doctor's care. She is much improved in health. It is Solomon Tice's purpose to return to Victoria within a few days on a tour of inspection. By the time this paper is in the hands of its readers, he will probably be on the way. Unless something unforeseen prevents, the day schools at Victoria will be opened in September and of course the work of church and Bible school will be kept up. The new governor of the state of Tamaulipas is said to be very friendly toward Americans and especially toward the work of the missionaries.

Carrie E. Haviland of Holguin, Cuba, is spending the summer in this country, making her headquarters with her uncle, Samuel R. Neave, at Hughesville, Md. The heavy work of the past school year left her pretty badly worn out and she writes that these weeks in the north have been very beneficial to her health. She returns soon to the field, sailing from New York on the S. S. "Munamar" on August 19th. In a recent letter she tells what a relief and delight it is to know that the mission school will be able, on September 4th, to start the year's work in a home of its own. The purchase of the property, as reported in an earlier issue, was effected about July 1st.

At the close of the school year in June, Sarah R. Charles left Matamoros, Mexico, going to Indiana to spend the summer with her mother at Fountain City. She attended the Summer School of Missions at Winona and the Young Friends Conference at Cedar Lake. A few visits have been made to relatives at other points in Indiana. Miss Charles expects to return to Matamoros the latter part of this month in time to prepare for the opening of Hussey Institute, the girls' school, where she and Nancy L. Lee will be working next year.

Several months have been occupied by Edgar Hole, of the Lirhanda Station of our Africa Mission, in visiting meetings in the east. Mrs. Hole and their two children, Leona and Morlan, have made their headquarters at Woodhaven, Long Island, though the family is this summer living at Moorestown, N. J. Already Edgar Hole has attended Philadelphia, New York, New England and North Carolina Yearly Meetings and he has a prospect of attending several others later in the year. He will be available for a few visits to meetings in the middle west in August and September and possibly also in October.

After spending two years at Banes, Cuba, Sarah A. Lindley, formerly director of the Mission school at Matehuala, Mexico, has returned to this country and is spending several weeks with relatives in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Oklahoma. Her plans for next year are uncertain, due partly to the unsettled state of affairs in Mexico, and partly to her own health, which for several months has not been satisfactory.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

August 27.

Subject: Journeying to Jerusalem.
Lesson: Acts 20:16-38.

Golden Text: I commend you to God and to the word of His grace—Acts 20:32.

Paul was now well started on his journey to Jerusalem—his last visit to that city. The student of Christian history will recall a similar experience in Jesus' life. There is much in common in the last journeys of these great characters. Each seemed led on by a divine force. Each was warned by friends of the dangers which certainly awaited him. Each of them felt that the journey must be made. In that city they were both arrested by men determined to end their lives. There is a number of other striking similarities in their experience which might be cited.

The Apostle's future fate seems to have created in his soul a great concern for the welfare of his churches. The elders of Ephesus in particular were summoned to a neighboring city that they might receive a last personal message from their great leader. Paul seems to have, in an unusual degree, combined the talents of evangelizing and organizing churches. He seems to have been well aware of the fundamental idea that it was just as important to care for a work after it was started as it was to found it. Thousands of our converts are lost because our workers fail to appreciate this fact. Preparing the ground and sowing the seed is only the beginning of that which leads up to the harvest.

The intensity of Paul's earnestness is hard to measure. Every fiber of his soul seems to have been tense with eagerness. To the Colossians (1:24) he wrote that he filled up on his part that which was lacking of the affections of Christ. Were it possible he would be anathema from Christ for his kinsmen (Rom. 9:3). So with the Ephesians he had spent himself without reserve. He had served with many tears and temptations and great humility. Paul was in earnest and being a man of great energy he did great things for the kingdom. He kept back nothing that was profitable. His was a comprehensive effort and message. Not only did he speak publicly but from house to house. He did all that could be done to win men to the kingdom—and his methods were effective.

One of the secrets of Paul's great power lay in his consecration, his absolute surrender to the cause, but a further cause of his unusual success was his submission to divine leadership; he went bound in the Spirit. Fully convinced that he was doing what God wanted him to do, he went anywhere and dared anything with unshaken loyalty. What was his life when compared with the worth of the kingdom? It had been given to the cause long before and he was determined to complete the course. There were no dangers, no suffering sufficiently severe to hinder him now.

Last, but by no means least, he had so preached and labored that he felt himself clear from the blood of all men. Like a true watchman he had given the warning—even more, he had constrained the people to flee the wrath to come and now he confidently journeyed toward Jerusalem ready for any sacrifice God wished him to make.

CHURCH AT WORK

Pleasant Plain, Iowa—An enjoyable social was held at the home of C. C. Haworth on the evening of July 29th, when the three young people's classes met for a good time together. Ice cream and wafers were served. The "Plus Ultras" girls, twelve to eighteen years of age, presented the school with a chart which is attracting some attention. It indicates with a star the class that contributes the most in proportion to the number in the class. Members of the Y. M. B. C. have pledged about $600 in the Penn Campaign.

Des Moines, Iowa—After an absence of three weeks in the interest of the Penn College Campaign, Richard R. Newby occupied the pulpit on July 30th and preached a most excellent sermon in the morning. In the evening the members had the privilege of listening to Joseph Sopher, who had just returned from California.

Cherokee, Oklahoma—On July 13th the first camp meeting that was ever held in this city was opened under the direction of Stella Quarterly Meeting. Lindley A. Wells of Portland, Oregon, was the evangelist in charge and was assisted by many of the pastors of the Quarterly Meeting and by his son, Charles Wells, and his singing evangelist. The ministry was clear and forceful and related itself to repentance and faith and the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Social and civic evils were dealt tremendous blows, yet in the spirit and tenderness and love of the Gospel. Many have said that this was the best and most satisfactory meeting ever held in Cherokee. Between forty and fifty persons knelt at the altar, either for pardon or cleansing, and at the close of the meeting on July 30th the Alfalfa Holiness Association was organized with Alvin Gibson as president. Arrangements are being made for an annual camp meeting in Cherokee. Brother Wells and son went from here to Burr Oak, Kansas. They expect to move from Portland, Oregon to Wichita, where he will make his future headquarters.

Poplar Ridge, N. Y.—Scipio Quarterly Meeting of Friends convened at Poplar Ridge August 4, 5 and 6. On Friday afternoon at the Meeting of Ministry and Oversight, a helpful discussion concerning the relation of the pastor to the pastoral committee was led by Ida T. Parker, of Union Springs. The thought was emphasized that the Pastoral Committee and not the pastor is head of a Friends' Meeting, and that there must be mutual understanding and helpful co-operation between pastor and Committee if Quaker ideals are to prevail in the meeting. A unique feature of the Quarterly Meeting came on Friday evening when a hundred people of the community met on the parsonage lawn for a social hour. Many people who do not usually attend were present, and a feeling of fellowship was very evident. A social hour of plays and games led by Levinus K. Painter, the pastor at Poplar Ridge Meeting, was followed by three short talks concerning the need of Bible study for all the people in the community. Then the young people served ice cream and cake to all present.

The meeting for worship on Saturday was followed by a business meeting. Another conference concerning the significance of the Sabbath came on Saturday evening. Three short interesting talks were given by Lewis Dickinson, William Wilmore, and Margaret Parker, on The Origin of Sabbath, The Sabbath as a Day of Rest, and The Sabbath as a Day of Worship. A very helpful and spirited discussion of the talks followed, in which many of those present took part. Alonzo Cloud of Ivor, Virginia, attended the Quarterly Meeting and brought helpful messages at both meetings for worship, and at the Friday evening hour.

The work of Levinus Painter and wife at Poplar Ridge is starting off nicely. The outdoor meetings on Sunday evening are largely attended and a splendid choir of young people adds much to the interest and value of the meeting by their helpful messages of song. The interest and attendance at prayer meeting and on Sunday morning keeps up through the hot weather. Plans are under way for the more effective ministry of the church to all the life of the whole community.

Goldsboro, N. C.—A most interesting and profitable series of meetings was held at our meeting house from the 12th to the 24th of June. In spite of the rainy weather the crowds were large. A fine spirit of co-operation was manifested by the other churches of the city in that every pastor and many of their members were in attendance. Twenty-three gospel messages were brought by the evangelist, Fred E. Smith, of Greensboro. The meetings were all held in the demonstration of the Spirit and power, many souls were quickened into new life and activity and the church was greatly strengthened.

Clear Creek, Ohio—On July 16th a number of the young Friends of Wilmington Yearly Meeting held an all-day rally at Old Clear Creek Meeting (109 years old). A large company greeted the young people, especially in the afternoon. Frank Barrett had charge of the meeting for worship at eleven o'clock. Ethel Hawkins conducted the services in the afternoon. It was a very profitable day and one long to be remembered. We believe our young people are getting a vision of their privileges as members of the Militant Church. May no stumbling block be put in their way.

Leesburg, Ohio—Fairfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Leesburg, July 28th and 29th. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight was small, probably because of the excessive heat and on account of wheat threshing. The meeting on Saturday was well attended. We had no visiting ministers except the local minister of the M. E. Church, who was acceptably with us. The usual routine of business was transacted. The meeting granted the request of Fairfield Meeting which was for a Monthly Meeting to be known as Leesburg Monthly Meeting to be held at 7:00 P. M. Perhaps the most interesting report was that made by the Evangelistic Superintendent. The spirit of unity prevailed.

There are souls in the world who have the gift of finding joy everywhere, and of leaving it behind them when they go. Their influence is an inevitable gladdening of the heart. It seems as if a shadow of God's own gift had passed upon them. They give light without meaning to shine. These bright hearts have a great work to do for God.—Faber.

NEWS NOTES

Prof. W. O. Mendenhall, of Earlham College, is to give a series of three addresses at Canada Yearly Meeting next Month.

Richard R. Newby has received and accepted a call to remain as pastor for another year at the First Friends Church, Des Moines, Iowa.

Levi Mills, of Wilmington, Ohio, was renominated for the office of county Probate Judge by a substantial majority in the Republican primary last week.

Prof. Elbert Russell will be an instructor at the Teachers' Institute at Greencastle, Indiana next week, and will attend West Richmond Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, on August 27.

Murray S. Kenworthy, former pastor, preached acceptably at West Richmond Meeting, morning and evening, last Sabbath. Vincent D. Nicholson preached there on the morning of August 6.

Toronto Meeting, Canada, has recently had the services on different Sabbaths of Dr. William W. Cadbury of the Canton Christian College, China; Frederick Sara, of Calgary Meeting, and Alfred Young of Newmarket.

Ruthanna M. Simms, of Chicago, has written an excellent article recently on "William Penn's Preparedness for Peace." It has been put in pamphlet form and is for sale by the Women's Missionary Union of Friends of America two cents per copy, or 20 cents per dozen.

We are sorry to learn that Robert Douglas, well known to Friends throughout America and England, is in poor health at the home of his son at Versailles, Ohio. Since returning from his trip to California in the Spring, he is not so well, and is confined to his bed part of the time.

The many friends of Delia Fistler will be grieved to know that she passed away at her home in California on August 6. She had literally given the best of her life to the Mission at Nowgong, India, but for the past two years has had to give up the work on account of failing health.

Morris E. Cox and family, of Westfield, Ind., have moved to Thorntown, Indiana, which is to be their future home. The Men's Bible Class of Westfield Meeting gave a reception to them on August 1, and a nice oak rocker was given to Mr. Cox in appreciation of his many years as teacher of the class.

Lester C. Haworth and wife, who have been engaged in Y. M. C. A.

work at Youngstown, Ohio, recently visited the parents of Mr. Haworth, living near Danville, Ind. From there they went to Vancouver, Canada, where they were to take steamer for India, expecting to engage in Christian service there for the next year under Y. M. C. A. auspices.

Tom Jones, the Young Friends' Secretary, and Prof. Morris, of Fairmount, Ind., gave excellent addresses to the young people of Amo, Ind., on the evening of August 1. A large delegation from Hadley was present.

Mill Creek Meeting, Danville Quarterly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, has recently spent about $200.00 in repairs and in the re-decorating of the building.

The Friends' Church at Knightstown, Ind., has extended a call to Zeno H. Doan, of Lynnvile, Iowa, to be their pastor for next year. He has accepted the call and will probably get moved in time to attend Yearly Meeting in September. The members feel that they are fortunate in securing him to follow Willis Bond, who has done good work in building up the church, and as he leaves, will take with him the high regard and confidence of the whole community for himself and wife.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING ASSEMBLY.

The Annual Assembly of Bible Schools, Young People's Activities and Christian Endeavor of Western Yearly Meeting met at Westfield, Indiana, July 25 to 27. Over two hundred delegates were enrolled. A fine spirit of harmony and helpfulness prevailed. The opening address, made by W. O. Trueblood, of Indianapolis, was full of inspiration. Tom Jones was present for all the sessions, and, with his broad view of the field with its needs, and his deep spiritual insight, added much to the success of the meeting. His address on Wednesday evening was a masterly one and was a challenge to the church to arouse herself to the opportunity that is hers, for it is a large one and a large opportunity comes seldom.

W. J. Reagan, of New York, was present and brought living messages. He conducted conferences on Bible School work and Tom Jones on Young Peoples' activities, both of which were helpful and inspiring. The Round Tables conducted by C. L. Reagan on Young Peoples' work and J. Ord Fortner on Bible Schools were interesting and profitable, bringing out many helpful suggestions.

Several ministers were in attendance and the times of devotion were times of blessing. The music was in charge of Eldon Mills, of Valley Mills. His work was inspiring and greatly appreciated. The Assembly sermon was preached by Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis. The centennial idea prevailed in this. He showed three phases of our growth as a state, the material, the educational and the religious. He took for his text, "Herein is that saying true that one soweth and another reapeth."

Hobart Hoskins discussed the Young Friends Movement. The question of the Rural Church was discussed by W. J. Reagan in Everett Henley's absence. One question he asked was "How many people do you know in your community who do not come to church?" Then why don't they come?"

The Junior hour was in charge of Mabel Quigg, of Darlington, Indiana. She reported about eighty dollars of the one hundred pledged by the Juniors of Western Yearly Meeting for Clara Ford's support had been paid in. An interesting program was given, consisting of an exercise, the Junior Garden, in charge of Ruth E. Brown. A recitation was given by Charles Kittinger, and a song by four girls.

The last afternoon was occupied by Enos Harvey of Noblesville, Former Cannon of Indianapolis, and Frank Ashby of Plainfield. Enos Harvey gave a most profitable talk on church organization, showing that we are all part of a big organization and that the purpose of this organization is fruit. Former Cannon, giving an address on Efficiency, discussed the organization of the school, beginning with the selection of the Monthly Meeting's committee, which should be made up of people decidedly interested in the Bible School. His plea was for organized classes and enthusiastic, trained, efficient teachers. Frank Ashby's address on "A Membership Campaign" closed the program. He said you must choose your field carefully, make your school efficient and then work for it.

The Assembly meets next year at Mooresville. J. Ord Fortner was re-elected Superintendent of Bible Schools and Education. Chester L. Reagan remains Superintendent of Christian Endeavor and Young Peoples' Activities. The slogan for the Bible Schools is twelve thousand scholars for next year.

The following resolution was adopted:

At the Annual Bible School and Christian Endeavor Assembly of Western Yearly Meeting of Friends church (consisting of 14,000 members) held at Westfield, Indiana, July 25-27, 1916, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, the nations of Europe, for the space of two years past, have been engaged in a war without precedent, in magnitude and slaughter, in the world's history. And as we believe this war has been precipitated without any just or reasonable cause and is wholly the result of military ambition and preparedness on the part of the rulers of the belligerent countries and is a stain upon the name, and a detriment to the cause of Christianity and true civilization,

Therefore, resolved, that we deeply deplore said war and pray that, in some way, an over-ruling Providence shall cause this war with its devastation and ruin to cease and the natives to return to sober-mindedness and reason.

Resolved, that we can but view with uneasiness and disfavor the preparations for war now being made by our government and the increase of the war spirit manifested by many of our people as uncalled for and subversive of the spirit of Christianity which should animate the hearts and minds of our people. For a century past, no nation has thought to attack us and we feel sure that no nation now has any purpose or intention so to do. Hence we think it unwise and impolitic at this time to inaugurate such a policy of preparedness.

Resolved that a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution be sent to each of the Senators from our state.

LENA HENLEY,
Secretary.

NO NEED OF A WAR.

I would not give the life of one clear-eyed Kansas boy for the whole of Mexico. We do not want war with Mexico. Mexico does not want war with us. There is nothing in the Mexican difficulty that could not and cannot be settled by the sincere co-operation of the two countries. All war is wasteful, wicked, criminal folly. It is the wrong way to right wrongs. It is the longest way around any international difficulty. Might does not make right. It never will. Murder and extermination are crimes whether a nation commits them or an individual. An international court to enforce peace and settle disputes between nations is the right way to adjudicate national questions. It is the common sense way. It is not the brute way.—From Governor Capper's Fourth of July Address at Baldwin, Kan.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Secretary of the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting will not send out blanks this year as usual for gathering the Yearly Meeting report, but will depend upon the reports sent to our Yearly Meeting Statistical Secretary. If all congregations will make a full report to the Yearly Meeting Statistical Secretary, Charles L. Hawkins, the ground will be sufficiently covered, from which to gather items for our report.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Topic: "Carelessness versus Thoughtfulness." Heb. 2:1-7.

Carelessness and laziness are brothers. There is no excuse for either. "I didn't think" has brought many to grief.

We are more often careless about our time. Today's opportunities must be improved today, for they may never return tomorrow.

"The Land of Anyhow."

Beyond the Isle of What's-the-Use,
Where Slipshod Point is now,
There used to be, when I was young,
The Land of Anyhow.

Don't Care was king of all this realm—
A cruel king was he!
For those who served him with good heart
He treated shamefully!

When boys and girls their tasks would slight
And cloud poor mother's brow,
He'd say, "Don't care! It's good enough!
Just do it anyhow."

But when in after life they longed
To make proud fortune bow,
He let them find that fate ne'er smiles
On work done anyhow.

For he who would the harvest reap
Must learn to use the plow,
And pitch his tent a long, long way
From the Land of Anyhow!

CHARLES F. COFFIN.

Word has been received of the death of Charles F. Coffin at his home in Chicago on the night of August 9th. While attending meeting, on July 30, he was overcome by the heat and was not able to survive the attack. Obituary notice will be given next week and a fuller notice of his life later.

MARRIED.

Deane-Coulson—At the home of the bride's parents at Scott's Mills, Oregon, June 21, 1916, L. Earl Deane and Mamie A. Coulson, Minister, Jesse E. Coulson, father of the bride. At home at Mushegan, Mich.

DIED.

Cook—Martha Unthank Cook, familiarly known as "Grandma" Cook, died at the home of her daughter in Rushville, Indiana, July 12, 1916, following a long illness. Had she lived until September 14th, she would have been ninety-five years old. At the age of twelve years, she moved with the family from North Carolina to Henry county, Indiana. She married Thomas Cook in 1840. She attended school in the first log school house at Spiceland, Indiana, and also attended the first Friends church at that place. She was a life-long Friend. She is survived by one son and two daughters. Funeral services were conducted by Harry R. Hole, pastor of the Friends Meeting at Carthage.

Fistler—Delia Fistler died at her home at Eagle Rock, California, August 6, 1916. In October, 1892, she in company with others sailed for India, and later assisted in the establishment of the Friends' Mission at Nowgong, India. Over two years ago, on account of failing health, she was compelled to leave the Mission and return to America. Her heart was still on the mission field and she longed to go back and labor for those who were so dear to her.

Hockett—Achshah Jane Hockett, daughter of Eli and Emma Newman Hodson, was born near Jamestown, N. C., June 8, 1850, and died at her home, north of Amo, Ind., April 7, 1916. She married Benjamin F. Hockett in 1876. She was a life long Friend. She was a quiet, home-loving woman, and it was in the home that her influence was most felt, as she was ever ready to sacrifice self for her family. She leaves her husband, four sons, three daughters, two grandchildren and one brother. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Austin Osborne, assisted by D. E. Noland, of Coatesville.

Johnson—Fannie Johnson, daughter of Robert and Mary Johnson, was born at Urbana, Ill., November 2, 1886, and died at Cherokee, Oklahoma, July 23, 1916. She was converted ten years ago at Stella Academy, and four years later she sought the Lord and was graciously sanctified. Her one great desire was to win souls for Christ, and many have been helped by her earnest, consistent Christian life. She joined Friends and the C. E. Society six years ago and continued a loyal member. She is survived by her mother, four sisters and three brothers. Funeral services were conducted by the pastor, G. A. Deshler.

McPherson—Louisa Jane McPherson was born in North Carolina, August 15, 1856, and died at her home in Mooresville, Indiana, February 20, 1916. She was converted and joined Friends when a girl and from that time lived a consistent Christian life. The poor and needy found in her a true and faithful friend. Her Christian life was often more manifest in the personal work she performed in the daily round of life than in the public services of the church. Many ministers, young men and others, can testify that she had been a great blessing to them. She had a large class of boys in the Sabbath School for years. She married Addison McPherson in 1874. To this union were born three children, all of whom survive.

Oliphant—Horace M. Oliphant, son of Mahlon and Rachel Oliphant, was born at West Branch, Iowa, September 1, 1853, and died at North Manchester, Ind., July 14, 1916. He was first married to Cora Harris, with whom he lived until her death about seventeen years ago, and was afterwards married to Emily Ida Cox, who with two children survives him. He was a life long believer in the principles and doctrines of the Friends' Church, but being away from Friends, he and his wife had joined the U. B. Church.

Patton—Mary E. Patton, member and elder in the Friends Church at Ridgefarm, Illinois, died at the home of her daughter in Topeka, Kansas, May 1, 1916, after a lingering illness of more than two months. The remains were accompanied by her daughter, Clara Bowers, and her brother, William P. Haworth, to her home at Ridgefarm, Illinois, where funeral services were held. Interment took place in the Friends Cemetery at Stanton, which was her early home.

Pemberton—Thursey Pemberton, daughter of Enoch and Rosanna Pearson, and wife of Enos Pemberton, was born in Miami County, Ohio, August 3, 1838, and died at her home near Ludlow Falls, Ohio, July 14, 1916. She first married Henry Yount in 1860, and after his death married Enos Pemberton in 1873. She leaves her husband, three children, six grandchildren and three great grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Charles Swanders, of Farmland, Ind., and was assisted by Elwood S. Hinshaw, of Lynn, Ind., and John L. Kittrell, of West Milton, Ohio.

Reynolds—Esther Wixon Reynolds, wife of Charles S. Reynolds, of Perry City, New York, died in the Ithaca, N. Y., hospital June 23, 1916. Her husband, three sons and three daughters survive her. Funeral services were held at the house, N. R. Franklin and wife being in charge.

Stubbs—Mahlon Stubbs was born at West Elkton, Ohio, February 2, 1825, and died at Denver, Colorado, July 16, 1916. The responsibilities of life came upon him early, as he was only sixteen when his father died. In 1848 he married Rachel Woodard at New Garden, Indiana. In 1863 he and his wife were sent by Western Yearly Meeting to take charge of an Industrial School for Indians at Council Grove, Kansas. For many years he labored earnestly among these Indians as teacher, farmer and agent, leaving the service about 1880. He lived for a time at Emporia, Kansas, and at Las Vegas, N. M., but he spent more than a quarter of a century of his later years in Colorado Springs and Denver. The death of his wife, Rachel, occurred after he went to Denver, and later he married Linda Dodd, who survives him. His life was filled with service to the church and mankind, and his faithfulness to God was an inspiration to all.

Sylvester—Iva Celeste Sylvester, daughter of Irvin and Miranda Overman, was born at Amboy, Indiana, August 9, 1886, and died at her home at Long Beach, California, May 27, 1916. She was a birthright Friend and was a loyal and faithful worker. She was converted when quite young and lived a consistent Christian life. She married George J. Sylvester in 1915. James Whitcomb Riley

By DANIEL L. MARSH, D.D.

O gentle poet of the heart,
O friend of crowds and solitudes,
O master of an artless art,
Interpreter of Nature's moods;
A sense of loss beyond repair
Has got a strangle hold on me
Since you have gone from HERE to THERE,
And I no more your smile shall see.

You taught me how to use my eyes,
To see the handiwork of God
In plainest birds that climb the skies,
In humblest flowers that dot the sod.
The hearing ear you gave to me,
To understand the faintest tone
Of Nature's lilting melody,
In brook and breeze and drowsy drone,

The crimson foam of clover bloom,
The cool green gloom of grassy glade;
The honeysuckle's sweet perfume,
The wealth of tangled shine and shade,
The morning, diamonded with dew
The garden of old-fashioned flowers,
All these,—all Nature is made new
Because of you, O friend of ours.

O gentle poet of the heart,
Seeing beyond both time and sense;
O master of the highest art,
Interpreter of Providence;
A gladsome hope, and not despair,
Like southern wind caresses me;
Since you have gone from HERE to THERE,
There must be immortality !

AS HIS LOVERS THINK OF RILEY AWAY

By JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

I cannot say, and I will not say
That he is dead.—He is just away.

With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand,
He has wandered into an unknown land,

And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.

And you—O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return—

Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;

And loyal still, as he gave the blows
Of his warrior-strength to his country's foes.

Mild and gentle as he was brave—
When the sweetest love of his life he gave

To simple things where the violets grew Blue as the eyes they were likened to.

The touches of his hand have strayed
As reverently as his lips have prayed:

When the little brown thrush that harshly chirred
Was dear to him as the mocking-bird;

And he pitied as much as a man in pain
A writhing honey-bee wet with rain.—

Think of him still as the same, I say:
He is not dead—he is just away

THE SPECIAL OFFER

Young Friends, Christian Endeavorers, pastors and others interested should remember that the offer of THE AMERICAN FRIEND to new subscribers for six months at fifty cents each is open until September 1st. Young Friends' organizations which have been pledging certain numbers of subscriptions to THE AMERICAN FRIEND should take advantage of this offer to reach the goal which they have set. THE AMERICAN FRIEND is the property of the Five Years Meeting and young Friends can render no better service for the church than thus to increase the circulation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. This special offer will close on September 1st.

ANOTHER SPECIAL OFFER

As an inducement to enlarge the circulation of the printed proceedings of the Men's Conference at Richmond, Indiana, last October, THE AMERICAN FRIEND will dispose of the stock on hands at a reduced price: paper cover, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents. The book contains one hundred and sixty pages, six by nine inches. Probably not so many addresses of equal ability and importance have ever been given at any other single Friends gathering. The addresses have to do with the mission and message of the church as a whole, and of Friends in particular, and a copy should be in every Friends' library. Send orders and money to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

STILL ANOTHER OFFER

The cost of THE AMERICAN FRIEND for one year is $1.50. The cost of Charles M. Woodman's book, "The Present Day Message of Quakerism," is $1.00. This most valuable book will be sent with a new subscription to THE AMERICAN FRIEND for $2.00. Send orders and money to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana.

THE FIVE YEARS MEETING

I venture to offer some suggestions about the next Five Years Meeting program:

Let us have its make up and personnel as democratic as possible.

Let the program committee, through THE AMERICAN FRIEND and possibly by a letter to each Yearly Meeting, solicit from everybody subjects to be discussed.

Have these subjects published in THE AMERICAN FRIEND two or three times at suitable intervals, and let the program committee encourage persons who want to discuss any given subject to signify the same to the committee.

All persons should present their discussions in writing. No paper should be more than ten minutes in reading.

Each paper should close with a brief, concise summary of the subject matter contained, so that the Five Years Meeting will have available material at hand for any statement it may desire to publish.

Provision should be made for impromptu discussion of subjects presented. No one person should be allowed too frequently on the program.

A program made up along these lines will demonstrate the adage that "Everybody is wiser than anybody." If the whole church is given a chance to be heard on the program, without too much "editing," the Five Years Meeting of 1917 will mark an epoch among Friends.

Having Fellowship With God

Any man's religion is measured by the degree of his soul intimacy with God. We know God, through incarnation in Jesus Christ, through the revelation of the Spirit, through forgiveness and through immediate and personal communion with him as Father. It is the intimacy of childhood with a father that typifies the ideal relationship between sainthood and God. There can be no vital, satisfying, Christian experience that does not embody a vital, satisfying, personal relationship with the Father. Until a soul really finds God it cannot be at peace with Him, it cannot enjoy fellowship with Him, it is without the saving element that is humanity's greatest need. When the soul has actually found its way to God, it may claim rightful heirship to all the blessings of the Father's kingdom, regardless of all theologic definitions and all the formulæ which men have woven into that which they call religion.

Men find God through Jesus Christ, through his personality, his ministry, his ideals, his matchless love, his death and his resurrection, and no one can disown the Son without disowning the Father also. But the acme of all human experience is to find God and to know Him, as the guarantee of that quality of life which it is the function of religion to give, and as the further guarantee of the ability to follow and obey the teachings of Jesus as the sum and substance of the best ideals in human experience. The man or the woman who has the inner consciousness of acquaintanceship with the divine Father will not go far astray either in faith or conduct. Sin will neither breed nor thrive in a praying atmosphere where the line of connection with God is unbroken.

It needs to be kept in mind that primarily religion is not conduct, although conduct is easily and directly a product of religion. Yet there are many apparently who think of religion only in terms of conduct, forgetting that we do as we do because we are as we are. Nor is religion merely a conception of God or a theory about the Son. An intellectual concept may have its bearing upon what a man really comes to be, but it can never be a substitute for that which a man is or may become. Religion, above all else, is life, and concerns quality and essence and experience in spiritual personality. Men may follow after righteousness for a time as a matter of obedience to a moral ideal, and yet have no consciousness of a direct fellowship with God as the only source of that spiritual nourishment which can alone satisfy the deepest needs of human life.

The New Testament theory of the relationship of man to God is not that of a servant, but of a son. Men do not find favor with Deity by virtue of their works, but by virtue of their holiness. Sonship produces service, but there may be service without sonship. We are not saved by good works alone, although faith and works are inseparable manifestations of the Christian life. All Europe is reaping a violent whirlwind because religion has been made a thing of action, of show, of materialism, rather than a thing of life. It is righteousness in life, springing from a virile and pure spirituality, that exalts a nation, or an individual. It is moral value and superlative spiritual worth that distinguish Christianity from all other world religions, and no amount of activity and no quality of conduct can atone for deficiency in our moral standards or our spiritual ideals that have been incorporated into the excellency of moral, daily life.

More than all else, religion is not a mere profession of the tongue. What multitudes there are who are suffering the uncertainties of a religious experience, because religion to them is a matter of profession, of attending the services of worship, of giving to the poor, or of giving testimony in the prayer meeting, and therefore subject to all the caprices of environment, the state of health, the condition of business or the temperature of the weather! A profession of faith is a part of the fruition of sainthood, for we are to be witnesses unto Jesus Christ to the uttermost parts of the earth, but there can be no availing witness without the possession of a life that prompts the spirit of witnessing. All too many men have one standard for their testimony in the prayer meeting and quite another for their testimony in the shop, or in the field or at the ballot box. Ye cannot serve God and mammon, nor can we expect a harvest of wheat and thorns from the same germ. The inconstant professor of religion is the bane of the church and of the Christian faith.

We should seek to express our Christian life in terms of fellowship, of communion, of sonship, remembering that obedience is better than ordinances, consecration is better than conduct, surrender is better than service. But out of our consecration and our surrender will come righteousness in conduct and a fullness in service that will inevitably enrich both our own lives and the lives of needy humanity all about us. When, through our acquaintanceship with the Divine Father, we can say in true sincerity with the Psalmist, "I delight to do thy will, O my God," we are then ready to become servants of all in a ministry of service and good will that will lead others to glorify our Father and to come into fellowship with him. All great movements of the world that make for human uplift and betterment wait for the leadership of those who have learned the art of fellowship with God.

WHAT WOULD YOU SUGGEST?

In harmony with the suggestion made by Truman C. Kenworthy in this issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and in keeping with suggestions which have come from other sources, THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be glad to give limited space occasionally for brief and pointed suggestions concerning the program of the Five Years Meeting in 1917, including the subjects to be discussed and the manner of their consideration. We cannot give space to extended articles on this question and will reserve the right to reject anything of a controversial nature. We believe that there are large possibilities for the Society of Friends in the next gathering of the Five Years Meeting and it is time that the whole church was directing its thought and attention to the vital problems which concern us as a denomination.

The Pastor's Vision

By MILO S. HINCKLE

(Paper read before the Ministerial Association of Indiana Yearly Meeting at Lynn, Indiana, May, 1916.)

Whatever phase of the work of the minister one happens to be dealing with, that for the time being, at least, impresses him as the paramount issue in a vital problem. Hence we may be easily pardoned for indulging the feeling at this time that our subject points the index finger at the fundamental secret of worth while pastoral service. Indeed, no apology is offered for so stating our conviction. What one sees before he undertakes is primary and fundamental to his accomplishment.

The artist must constantly see the painting on the mental canvass as he plies the brush which is indeed but reproducing his vision in materials. The architect would build carelessly and with poor grace if the structure that others do not see were lost to his vision also. In very fact the size and character of one's accomplishment is determined by his outlook upon the undertaking—what he sees in it. What a "thorn in the flesh," to be sure, is poor eye sight; no less a handicap to service of a spiritual character than to the finest of mechanical labors! This insistence is not an indictment against the pastoral service being rendered, but it may indicate a conviction that in things religious we often attempt things with a kind of vision as to the outcome that would vouchsafe certain failure in any of the secular interests about us. Even the farmer as he toils to put out the crop constantly antidotes his fatigue with the pleasing sight of acres of waving golden grain and bins bursting with the gathered product. As so large a portion of our ministers are products of rural life, we may well take the lesson into our ministerial activities.

The minister's vision bears no connection with what we term visionary and hence impractical individuals who are actuated by notions and forever dealing in unrealities. Rather it approaches the blue print guide for operations. It is a happy combination of human ingenuity with Divine inspiration and revelation. It is catching something of the spirit of the Master and looking upon our work through His eyes as he so much desired his disciples to do when he admonished them, "lift up your eyes and look upon the fields." His vision is the steam gauge in the pastor's store house of service possibilities. A small effort at pastoral leadership or a small sermon is quite generally indicative of a narrow vision as to one's purpose in such services.

The writer of Hebrew Proverbs so strongly emphasized the value of seeing largely and wisely as to assert that, "Where there is no vision the people cast off restraint"—"perish" in old version. This same element was so characteristic of the leaders of God's people in prophetic times that they were commonly known as seers, a term significant of comprehensive vision beyond that of people generally. The seer, not simply a foreteller, but a man of quickened perceptions and keen insight and broad outlook is the man whom God can use today in the tremendous stress of this strategic age.

Men and women become recognized leaders in the world, not always because they are so far superior in strength or ability, nor because they have a larger fund of theory to offer to life's problems, nor yet because they are born to sit above their fellows, but distinctly because they see so much more than others and, therefore, have an objective toward which to direct their energies and powers, perchance an outlet for the best of their theories. Caleb and Joshua were not necessarily better soldiers than the other ten spies, but they saw all that the ten saw and then vastly more in quality as well as quantity, completely counter-balancing the vision of the ten and impelling them to the full fruition of their fondest hopes, while the ten are completely forgotten. An artist develops, not because of ability to mix colors accurately and apply the brush deftly, but because he sees so much to which others are blind and has a passion to reproduce his discoveries for others. His is an impelling vision—a compelling passion. So must be the visions and the resultant passion of the under shepherd who feels "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel" or "If I feed not the lambs" or "If I tend not the sheep."

To draw a bit more upon the record of God's dealings with others, in order to be the more sure of our own conviction, attention is directed to a few outstanding examples in the Old Testament. The splendid leadership and service of Moses was the direct result of his vision of Jehovah and His lofty purpose in Israel. Neither did God offer him a responsibility nor require of him a service, until He had given him an unforgettable vision that was so inspiring and freighted with passion as to grip permanently the life of this man of extraordinary possibilities. Ever afterwards Moses had an objective toward which with increasing perseverance and extreme patience he sought to lead God's chosen people. This vision was more than a burning bush, a leprous hand, or a rod transformed into a serpent. These were but islands in the ocean of possibilities that Moses saw for his people as they wholly followed the Lord their God.

A similar experience is noted in that young prophet and statesman, Isaiah, in some respects without a peer, who, in his youth, dedicated all to Jehovah's service. His unexcelled consecration and lasting fidelity followed the lifting up of his eyes to behold the Lord and to see the need of his people. Such a vision makes it easy and natural to say, "Here am I, send me, and it matters not where."

So much is this factor noticeable in Old and New Testament leaders, that one instinctively feels that it must be in the divine order for his servants. Even our Lord Himself, during that period of retirement and communion preceding His ministry, saw wondrous visions that undoubtedly directed His course through the succeeding years of His life. Paul, too, the chief apostle, Christian philosopher and the mightiest factor of apostolic times in establishing the new church and its faith, over and again emphasizes the opening of his eyes to see the Divine plan and seems to attribute his success to this significant fact, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision."

All of this is to prepare the way for a few brief observations concerning the vision of that servant in the vineyard whom we call a pastor. If it is a comparatively new term among Friends, it is co-existent with the modern church among other religious bodies, and was well known in Bible times. Seven times in the Old and once in the New Testament is the term pastor used, while the office or service is of frequent occurrence under other names, shepherd, bishop, etc. The Epistles to Timothy connection with our theme, one remembers with keen interest how they glow with the unfolding revelation of the kingdom as it relates to individual and to community life. Perhaps the most significant is that reference in Paul's letter to the Ephesian church naming the pastor's service as one of the special gifts of the endowment of the Holy Spirit along with evangelism and teaching.

There are some distinctive factors in the pastor's vision, but much that is in common with the minister in general. For this reason so much time and thought has been given to the subject in a general way.

Beginning with things near at hand, we may say that the pastor's concern is with the development of personal and family religion. The eternal purpose of God to perfect the oneness of man with Himself in that completeness of fellowship and likeness of character is the axis of religious truth, about which revolve the increasing and enlarging circles of spiritual conceptions and developments. The absolute purity and holiness of God on the one hand and the sinfulness and unworthy conditions of wilfully rebellious man on the other, with the whole plan of personal, human redemption inter-mediating, are outstanding considerations in the pastor's view of his duty. So he concerns himself with the spiritual needs of men, women and children. As the shepherd tenderly examines and cares for the needs of the individual sheep as they enter the fold in the evening, so the pastor yearns for the personal welfare of each individual under his care. Weary and fatigued men need the easy yoke and the light burden of Christ. Wayward and careless people need the transforming power of Him who makes new creatures. The clear vision of all this and much more sends out the passionate clarion call to the wicked to forsake his way and the unrighteous his thoughts and return unto God to receive a gracious pardon. This strong evangelistic passion must ever be prominent in the pastor's vision, for he is an ambassador beseeching men in Christ's stead, to be reconciled to God. Thus far the church and its message exist and the minister's first responsibility is to promote the personal salvation of men, preparing their hearts and homes to be dwelling places for God. A pastor, the horizon of whose vision does not include this much, is a mere puppet attempting too sacred a calling.

Nevertheless with the same breath it should be said that this horizon, if it includes the whole of one's concern, is far too narrow for the awakening demands of the present day or for the real business of the church of Christ and its requirements of its ministers. Granted that it is fundamental, there is yet serious need of seeing more than simply the need and the call to souls.

The needed vision of today must clearly see in God's plan of redemption, not only the saving of the souls of men, as we speak of it in an evangelistic sense, but also the saving of conditions and environments wherein saved men are to live and develop. In short, human society is included in the plan of redemption. This is a much broader field than personal evangelism, or perhaps it is more correct to say that this is bringing evangelism to its own—giving it the whole field of human life and experience. It is the establishing of the kingdom of heaven in the earth for redeemed men to abide in. It was beautifully summed up in the interdenominational slogan, "Christ for every life and the whole of life." This factor of church responsibility and ministerial activity is by no means universally accepted, even by many who are quite enthusiastic in their chosen ideals of religion. Until pastors, especially, wake up to this larger type of service, many precious fields go untilled and the church dwindles from the very smallness of its ideal.

The extreme necessity of this large field of Christian social service, which if done for its own sake and minus the Spirit's direction, or for any purpose short of the practical establishing of Christ's kingdom among men, must fail as perhaps it does in certain places, but which if done under the guidance of Christ and to make it possible for saved men to continue saved, it furnishes the field for the operations of all our evangelism—this necessity, I repeat, is illustrated by the mother who washed and dressed her child in spotless white and immediately sent it out to play in the puddle in the backyard at making mud pies, charging him not to soil his hands or garments. The scripture gives it under the figure of a swine having been thoroughly washed and turned again to the wallow. The truth needs no restatement that redeemed men must live in redeemed conditions if they are to retain their new found faith and grow in the things of God. Herein has been the weakness of much of our evangelism and pastoral service of the past in that they ceased with the reclaiming of a soul. This is indeed but the threshold of our responsibility. The church, then, is to be under the inspiration and leadership of the pastor who has a community vision, a vital community factor, whose regenerating influence shall make itself felt in bettering social, business, political, industrial conditions under which its people live. How else can we pray, "Thy kingdom come, in earth as it is in heaven"? It must be said, however, that the church's attitude and activity along these lines in places where pastoral leadership is depended upon, will be measured largely by the size of the pastor's vision and passion.

Still another factor, which perhaps is still a widening of the horizon, and which the pastor must lead the church to see and accept, and which therefore he himself must first see, is that the tremendous responsibility of the church to community regeneration demands on the part of its representatives a much-used but ever vital term, efficiency in workmanship. If the ordinary secular interests must have the highest possible attainment of skill, much less will the most delicate and important business known to men, the bringing in of the Kingdom of God and the redemption of mankind, be accomplished through careless, thoughtless and haphazard methods. The truth is, if the business world attempted one week's activity on the same basis of system and efficiency that most professors and some ministers use in religious matters, it would be stranded and bankrupt by Wednesday evening or Thursday morning sure. The pastor's vision should, then, include the splendid opportunity, to say nothing of the obligation, of bringing into the church life the element of training in the matter of kingdom building—training in the art and practice of communion with God, the knowledge and use of His Word, the practice of piety, the moulding of other lives, and carrying of the principles of the Kingdom into every activity of life.

It is to be seriously questioned if it is not true with many of us who stand in responsible relation to the church that our conception of the purpose and end of the church or of personal religion is to have something to enjoy and to enjoy what we have. With such, the church is never so prosperous or so spiritual as when she is singing lively songs, shouting loud and long prayers and engaging in a sort of perpetual revival to keep itself from backsliding. This is no reflection upon singing, praying, or revivals, for we believe in all three most heartily. But such churches or Christians can reach with the finger tips their horizon, for the interests that can be crowded into their own life are their joys and satisfaction. In contrast we desire to catch something of the vision of Christ as to the fundamentals of Christian living and the purpose and business of the church in the world. When getting at the real basis of the question, he brushed all paraphernalia and surface evidence aside with one mighty stroke and said, simply, not the singing or shouting or testimony or holding meetings or observing forms or making ever so good a show of sanctimoniousness: "Not every one that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Jesus does not depreciate the varied manifestations of the Christian experience on the part of the doer of God's will, neither do we, but he insists that it is this genuine service for God, growing out of a right relation with God, that determines one's right to use any mode of expression of personal experience with him. "If ye know these things, blessed (happy) are ye if ye do them," He said again. Real joy comes most largely in serving, and what is serving but literally giving away what we are and have for the good of others? Oh, that it could be burned everlastingly into the deepest heart consciousness of all Christians that what we keep to enjoy we lose utterly, and only what we gladly give away for the comfort and joy of others can we retain for our own greatest happiness! This is laying up treasure in heaven. - As if fearing what we to-day realize to be true, that even His own example would fail to impress the church with this great passion, He taught it again in unmistakable terms that the determining factor in separating the saints for the kingdom beyond would be their badge of service in doing the most commonplace, yet needful things for the needy. "Inasmuch as ye have done it—(these common duties)—unto one of these, my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." Oh, for a vision transmitted to the church, that will forever lead men in the footsteps of Him whose joy was "going about doing good!"

Perceptibly the range of vision has widened with the enlarging conception of the purposes of God in our lives. But, as yet, it is not the vision of the Christ for His church nor of the saints who first caught something of His passion and understood the meaning of His unspeakable sacrifice for men. So far, we have dealt only with the things near at hand, the interests of the kingdom of heaven in the community about us. They have all been local, home interests. The vision that covers them is a vision of the local. They are right. They are vital. They are primary. They are fundamental. They are of Christ's ordering and are foundation principles of his kingdom. And the vision is commendable.

But neither the vision nor the local interests comprise the sum of the responsibility of the church. Indeed if these things mark the boundaries of our activities and become the end of our efforts and interests, we become inexcusably provincial and fail of the highest calling of the church and its ministry. To stop here—as so many do—is to fail to grasp the size of God's plan and the scope of redemption. It is, yet more seriously, to fail in the manifestation of the spirit of all-inclusive love that begets a burning passion to save the wandering and lost, though he were in the relation of one to the ninety and nine, and the least valuable of them all. To be satisfied with our local interests, insistent and proper though they be, is to content ourselves while over half the family can neither read nor write, while it suffers real pain without a physician to heal, and does not know God nor how to find him. To stop here is to foster and promulgate a spirit of selfishness and indifference, that one finds it hard to harmonize with a Spirit-filled Christianity. To stop here is to prepare the way to certain failure by violating the law of growth and perpetuity which demands a giving forth proportionate to the desire for increase.

To stop here is to develop an individualism that robs Christianity of her grace and the larger half of the world redemption. To stop here is to refuse to pass to others fully as worthy the blessings so freely given to us, and which lifted our ancestry out of barbarism but a few centuries ago. To stop here is to leave the church where, in its selfish contentment, it merits and receives the contempt of a hungry, needy world. To stop here is to prevent the full and complete establishment of the kingdom of heaven among men, for which we insincerely and well nigh in hypocrisy pray as though it would or could come of its own accord, and we had no responsibility therein. Yes, to stop here with our localisms and personal evangelisms, is flatly to refuse obedience to our Lord's last and great commission: "Go ye into all the world and make disciples of all the nations," though He has promised to go with us and aid us in the undertaking.

Oh, what irreparable loss for the church to stop here, for the ministry to content itself with the smaller vision of localisms—good as they are—and stand as an obstructing agency to the enlargement of the vision and activity of the church! For it is perceptibly true that in this section of Quakerism and in other denominations generally the standard of the church is largely determined by the standard held up and proclaimed by the ministry, particularly by the pastors. What loss to stop here! Yes, but right here is where a large portion of our ministers have reclined, and few churches have run far ahead of the resting place of the pastors. There are a few exceptions where a church has been blessed with one or a few individuals of larger vision and conception than the pastor has shown, and who have refused to be confined to the narrow limits of his astigmatism.

Because our churches and ministers have become so much "at ease in Zion," being wellnigh deaf and blind to God's world-evangelization call, the church has in many instances become provincial, indeed many have died of surfeiting upon their own blessings and enjoyments. Such a message and such a vision make little impression on many strong, capable, far-seeing youth who have enjoyed splendid training for large service and possess talents that would grace the church, but, because they disdain provincialism they turn from the church to secular interests. Not a few of our best have thus been lost.

Oh, for a vision that will put every minister and church along side of Jesus who stretched his arms to the four points of the compass and spanned the earth with his love and atoning sacrifice! Would that every pastor would read prayerfully that marvelous booklet by Courtney H. Fenn, "Over Against the Treasury," and see the literal returns of yielding to a mighty passion like unto the Christ's!

Some indeed have recognized a responsibility at large, but are afraid to undertake it for fear the home interests will suffer. These have never learned that "The light that shines farthest shines brightest nearest home." Nothing but the passion of Christ sends men and women, personally or by proxy, into the jungles of heathenism at the sacrifice of many delightful pleasures at home. Do you think that passion will prompt or permit one to neglect the interests of the kingdom at hand? Nothing else so stimulates to ceaseless sacrifice and service in the local field as the passion which carries us to the ends of the earth in search for the lost. There is no church on record that ever failed and closed its doors because so much time and energy and money and prayer and youth were sent away to foreign fields. Many, however, have failed because they were self-centered, and many now are simply holding down some valuable corner, ringing bells and trying to keep alive, oblivious of God's sure formulas for abounding and growing rich. Beware lest He say to us, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these, ye did it not unto me."

Never was the church so relentlessly pressed with a mighty challenge as with the present world situation, and the Macedonian cry from every interest involved. And in the face of the heart-rending appeal for food, for shelter, for raiment, for sympathy, for prayer, for a vital Christianity that shall reconstruct the nations and their civilizations into the very body form of the kingdom of God, some of us loudly sing, "I'm glad salvation's free," and "Jesus included Me", as though the contentment of my own heart was the acme of all Christian civilization. How patient and long suffering God must be! Are not a lot of our visions measurable in hand-breadths? Nineteen centuries of gospel light, and yet we see so little! Nineteen hundred years, and less than half of the world evangelized, much less Christianized! O God, be merciful toward the stupidity of thy children!

Oh, fellow pastors and co-laborers, "lift up your eyes and look upon the fields, for they are white unto the harvest." "As the Father hath sent me," said Jesus, "even so send I you into the world * * * that the world may believe that thou did'st send me." "And ye shall be my witnesses * * * unto the uttermost part of the earth." "And the kingdoms of the world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever."

GOING DOWN!

According to the Financial News the net profits of the Pabst Brewing Company for 1915, after depreciation had been allowed for, were $374,457, compared with $564,946 in 1914 and $900,606 in 1913.

This truth comes to us more and more the longer we live that on what field or in what uniform or with what aims we do our duty matters very little, or even what our duty is, great or small, splendid or obscure. Only to find our duty certainly and somewhere, or somehow, to do it faithfully makes us good, strong, happy, and useful men and tunes our lives into some feeble echo of the life of God.—Phillips Brooks.

THE VALUE OF RIGHT EDUCATION

By PROF. WM. N. TRUEBLOOD

(Received too late for the Educational number)

The relation between popular institutions and popular education is so intimate that even the short run of a hundred years shows that the success of the one is largely dependent on the rightness and thoroughness of the other. Wirt's saying: "We must educate, we must educate, or we must perish by our own prosperity," is famous because of the sagacity and wisdom which increasing experience is finding in it. Prosperity is even a harder test of manhood and womanhood than adversity. But both prosperity and adversity, being measures of only the exterior of life, the show of it, get relatively too much attention. Beneath this exterior lie always the stern, straight, narrow, unchangeable ways of truth, justice, the other man's rights and the world's progress. Manhood and womanhood are rooted in this substratum and can draw only from it their virtues and natural development.

The attempt to educate for the exterior circumstances of life, that is for something other than simply men and women of Nature's own type with the moral and aesthetic qualities increasingly dominant, has been and is the seductive vice of our educational movements. The effect has been a certain illusionment of the world in which we think that "to get there" is the chief thing, whereas, the final reckoning always shows that to get there RIGHTLY is the only thing. This illusionment is apparent in almost all our affairs, public and private.

Three years ago we thought that our Christianity was of the New Testament type; now that it has been put to the test, we see it is still the Old Testament kind,—an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth; and evidently it will remain so until we are disillusioned of the idea that Christianity is an exterior, circumstantial matter of beliefs, creeds, denominations, ambitions, rivalries in good things. For many generations we seemingly have been thinking that vice and its manifestation, crime, can be eradicated, or at least controlled, by legislative and administrative action, for we have built up a legislative system, a judicial system, and a punitive system that cost us annually incalculable sums, but without radical effect. Is it not obvious that our systems have run off on the switch of the merely circumstantial. Does not the question logically arise whether it were not better and cheaper and more fundamentally curative to make good men and women than to restrain and punish bad ones? Can the imagination conceive of the beneficence that would come into the world from the making of but one generation of fundamentally good and capable parents? Within the last three or four years we apparently have begun to think there is something wrong in our educational systems, but how do the proposed changes look? Judged from two or three fundamental aspects of them, they look bad:

1. They emphasize the "Professional," that is, they look towards the making of the workman instead of the man; among their key-words are "Normal," "Expert," "Efficiency."

2. They are multiplicative in curriculum, that is, they propose instruction in a vast and diversified field—to give a little to everything and, consequently, but little to anything.

3. They have the Economical attitude, that is, they contemplate housing together and grading together the largest possible number, because it is cheaper. They contemplate abolishing outlying rural schools and concentrating in town and city, because it is cheaper. They economize in salaries and equipment, as if education were a matter of money saving.

Education is the best investment possible. It is the family's, the State's, the world's capital, because it is the natural and therefore the logical means of the continual improvement of the human race.

PROHIBITION MOVEMENT

PROHIBITION INCREASES WAGES

Liquor journals and liquor orators are insistent in their claims that the liquor traffic benefits labor. Labor is discovering, on investigation, that these claims are not founded on fact. Just the other day the president of the Cooks' Union of the city of Chicago made the declaration that the biggest foe to their union in that city was the beer trust.

This is only one instance of many where labor leaders have come to see the liquor business in its true light. Figures taken from Uncle Sam's statistics covering the ten-year period from 1899 to 1909 show the following:

Increase in wages—

In Prohibition states	103 per cent
In near Prohibition states	77 per cent
In partial license states	75 per cent
In license states	61 per cent

SOBRIETY AND ECONOMY

According to Charles M. Fasset, the Commissioner of Public Utilities for Spokane, Wash., because of "the economies possible in a sober city," Spokane was able to make a tax rate of 11½ mills do the work that 13 mills did under saloon rule, despite the loss of $150,000 saloon revenue.

An answer to the question, "How will you get along without the saloon revenue?"

ALCOHOL AND THE SOCIAL VICE

The English Royal Commission to study the relation of alcoholic liquors to venereal diseases recently made its final report. The report is based on extensive evidence gathered over a wide range by expert witnesses, and is one of the most important documents dealing with public health ever published.

There are three outstanding facts in the report.

First—That alcoholic liquor, by weakening self-control, is the most important factor in aggravating social vice conditions, that the drinker is peculiarly liable to yield to temptations which otherwise might be resisted. One physician reports that out of thousands of cases, he had found 80 per cent had acquired such diseases while under the influence of liquor.

Second—Alcohol makes the treatment of these diseases so difficult that most physicians require their patients to absolutely abstain during the period of medication.

Third—That all cases in which bad results followed the administration of powerful remedial drugs were alcoholic. The report abundantly confirms the observations by physicians generally.

Alcoholic liquors complicate and render more difficult the treatment and retard recovery in practically all diseases—a fact which explains the high death rate among drinkers.—Robert B. Patton.

WHAT PROHIBITION IS DOING FOR SEATTLE

Prohibition has put an increase of $471,691 of real estate transfers over the corresponding wet first six months of 1915 in Seattle's stocking. Building permits show an increase of $174,110. Bank clearings an increase of $53,851,865. The aggregate of savings has increased $1,500,000 and the number of new savings accounts, since January 1, 1916, is 7,165. Bank deposits gained $5,694,858 during the first four months of 1916.

The Seattle Times quotes many men in many lines of business to the effect that prohibition has been immensely beneficial to trade. Some of these men bear especial testimony to the increased efficiency and earnings of labor.

The total arrests in Seattle during the first six dry months of 1916 were 5,444. During the same six months of 1915 there were 10,152.

"Before the Prohibition law went into effect in the state of Washington," says Superintendent Conger of the Anti-Saloon League, "the annual legal expenditure for liquor in the state was about $35,000,000. Under the permit system, taking the whole number of permits issued at the maximum quantity allowed, at the highest price, as quoted by the dealers, the legal expenditure has not yet reached 5 per cent in any county; it has not reached 2½ per cent in the entire state."

Every true prayer has its background and its foreground. The foreground is the intense immediate desire for a certain blessing which it is absolutely necessary for the soul to have; the background of prayer is the quiet, earnest desire that the will of God, whatever it may be, be done.—Phillips Brooks.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

AN IMPORTANT STATEMENT

Any article that may appear on this page which in anyway touches upon the situation in any Yearly Meeting is meant in no spirit of adverse criticism. I am trying merely to set forth conditions as accurately as I can apprehend them from a very brief visit in various localities. I believe there are few perfect meetings. While I want to tell the good points of meetings I also would like the privilege of naming some of the weaknesses which are common to most of our meetings, that we may intelligently meet them and find a solution. Through mistake in transmission a few articles have been rather badly mixed, but these errors will be avoided as much as possible in the future.

YOUNG FRIENDS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

After an all day's journey from Lindsay through numerous dusty tunnels of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, across the desolate Mahava desert and along many a dry river bed, the Santa Fe railroad brings one to the beautiful city, Los Angeles. This is the next important center for Friends as one comes into California Yearly Meeting from the north. Here one finds a unique problem for the church in general and our denomination in particular. To a casual visitor, and it is only from this standpoint I am able to speak, Los Angeles appears a new, wealthy, luxury loving city. Its streets are broad, well paved and beautifully lighted. Its business blocks are similar to those of any other modern American city. Large show windows, gray stone fronts, and tall buildings stand out before one in long rows, like soldiers at attention. Rush, competition and business severity are everywhere apparent. Newsboys madly waving the morning paper and shouting, "juicy morsals" of news, angle with picture show barkers, jitney bus drivers and hotel "boosters" for the attention of the passerby. As in any other coast city, one is impressed by the presence of many foreigners. Japanese, Chinese, Mexicans and Hindoos are to be seen everywhere.

THE STUDY OF QUAKERISM

The Society of Friends has its roots in a direct and first-hand experience which, though it may not be consciously recognized, and may even be ignored and denied, is believed to be within the reach, in some measure at least, of every human soul. The Quaker movement stands, above everything for the reality of such experience, especially as this reaches its full flower in a conscious communion with God as He is revealed in Christ. It depends, primarily, not upon ideas or beliefs about spiritual things, but upon personal knowledge of the things themselves; and its propagation is therefore not so much the declaration of a doctrine as the calling of men to share an experience.

If we are to bear the name of Friends worthily, we must try to understand for what we stand.

OPEN AIR SERVICES

This is the time of year when we find the spirit of unrest taking hold of our young people, and instead of feeling a sense of satisfaction with our plans, we are confronted with—"It's too hot!" "Nobody comes!" "Let's disband!" etc.

If there is one word I would like to see taken from our vocabulary it is the word "Disband." How utterly hopeless and helpless it does make one feel! especially one who strives hard to keep the machinery turning. Dismiss is a much better word, but why use either? Why should our spirits die with a chronic case of spring fever, when there are so many splendid remedies at hand!

Perhaps the most effective one is the Open Air Service. The scheme of holding such services in public parks or on a nearby hillside has been of great service, both in city and country Societies.

As soon as you deem it wise, discuss the plan with your pastor, overseers and executive committee of your Young People's organization. Some are sure to discourage the idea, but there will be those who will think the plan worth trying.

Call an informal meeting of a dozen or so representative people to discuss the plan further and arrange for action if the way should open. If you plan Union open air services invite the pastors and several leading workers from the different denominations that would be likely to join in a union effort. In this meeting, call for a general discussion. Objections will be raised and the subject will be debated but give the scheme a trial. Apportion about three committees to do the necessary work, a Press Committee, a Committee on General Arrangements and a Finance Committee.

A THREE WEEKS' SURVEY OF YOUNG FRIENDS WORK IN THE NORTHWEST.

The young people's problem of any locality is determined in no small degree by the character of its environment. This includes at least the aesthetic, industrial, social and religious phases of the church task. A consideration of these points will perhaps not be out of place in describing my impressions of Friends of the Northwest.

Surely one cannot travel in Oregon, Washington, or British Columbia during the month of June without being struck by the rare beauty of the place. This is the time when roses in their most gorgeous hues hedge yards and streets everywhere. One can scarcely describe the sensation that comes from looking miles down a lane of roses. He can really do this in some streets in Portland, Seattle, and Victoria. With apparently no care these flowers bud, bloom, shed their leaves and bloom again. Great banks of golden colored Scotch Broom adorn the hills, parks and open yard spaces. There are also vines and bushes of various colored flowers that cover porches and sides of the houses. The country is much more mountainous than an Easterner expects. Standing on a hill that overlooks the country one is reminded of Derbyshire and parts of Westmoreland in England, with the exception that most of the hills are covered with a rich growth of pine forest. The valleys are rich and green with oats, wheat, grapes, apples and various kinds of small fruits. The pasture land is broad and fertile upon which hundreds of the finest Holstein and Jersey cattle feed. The majority of the farm houses are small, made of wood and painted white. There is no dearth of good roads. Millions have been spent in constructing macadam and paved highways. There are very few places in the United States where the road system can match that of the Northwest.

The principal industries of the country are lumbering, fruit growing and dairying.

As one looks at the great forests he can understand how easily the settlers of timbered country might become careless in their handling of the forests. There seems an unlimited supply and the land is useless as long as the timber stands. There seem to be saw mills at every turn in the road and yet little impression has been made in the vast pine growths. More than any other, this industry has brought considerable ready cash to the country. It also determines to a large measure the amount of public improvements, church giving, etc. During the last year or two the timber business has been rather dull and the churches as well as all other public institutions have felt it very keenly. This situation has been furthered by the shortage in the prune and apple crops for the past two years. Still everyone is optimistic and says that conditions are improving in a marked degree this year. T. E. JONES.

THE IOWA PAGE

AT RICHLAND, IOWA.

At Richland Monthly Meeting, held on August 6, the correspondence committee was given the task of sending items to The American Friend. Richland has certainly been a favored location this summer. We have two gospel teams, one at Woolson and one at Rubio. Both are doing good work. A junior chorus at Woolson and one at Richland help to solve the problem as to what part the children should have in special services. They furnished the music for a part of the Assembly held here in June. At Woolson, our sister, Elbertha Hobson, is greatly missed as she was called home on July 13. This necessitated the removal of her mother, Aunt Abbie Rogers, to live with her son at Cedar Falls.

The Christian Workers' Assembly held at Richland June 26-29 was certainly a time of rich blessing and inspiration. Many said it was the best Assembly ever held. One of the things which added greatly to the interest was that everyone on the program was present and ready to respond.

We retain for another year both of our pastors, William Kent, who serves Hopewell and Rubio, and Alvin Hoskins at Woolson and Richland. Both are doing excellent work and the meetings are in good condition with about four hundred enrolled in the Sabbath Schools at the four points.

"At our last consecration meeting the members responded to the roll call by giving the names of our former presidents. The secretary had previously copied the names of all who had served as president since 1901 and these were distributed at the meeting. Thus it was a roll call of the presidents answered by the members present. Our rating on the Efficiency chart is gradually rising. The executive committee recently made a religious survey of the neighborhood."

As this is the last contribution before Yearly Meeting, we take this opportunity of thanking you for your cooperation during the year. It has been a good year. COME TO YEARLY MEETING!

AT OSKALOOSA, IOWA.

Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting was held at Oskaloosa August 12. There were no visiting ministers present. Pastors in attendance belonging to the Quarterly Meeting were as follows: Joseph Sopher, Grinnell; Edward Hartsuck, New Sharon; Edwin Loft, Albia; E. H. Stranahan, Oskaloosa;

A. J. Hanson, Wright and Highland; J. M. Lemmon, H Street Mission, Oskaloosa. The meeting on ministry and oversight commenced shortly after nine a. m. with Anna M. Kelsey as clerk of the meeting. After the minute was read, prayer was offered and the business taken up. Roll call of representatives, reading of the reports of the spiritual condition of the members of this body and other business claimed the attention of Friends. The meeting closed with prayer.

The Quarterly Meeting for worship began at 10:45. After singing and prayer, A. J. Hanson gave the gospel message, reading Isaiah 35, and speaking from the first verse. In his remarks he said that all great men who had been in the Friends church or in other churches had taken Jesus Christ into their hearts and lives and from him had come all the blessings of their work. After the sermon Edwin Loft spoke briefly, followed by Joseph Sopher and several testimonies were given by Friends of the blessing they had received by being there. After the meeting closed a fine dinner was served by the Oskaloosa Friends.

At 1:30 the meeting for business was taken up with William Berry as clerk and Anna Edwards as recording clerk for the day. The business of the Quarterly Meeting consisted of the report of the nominating committee, bringing in names for superintendents of the different departments of the Quarterly Meeting work—peace, temperance, Bible School, missionary, Christian Endeavor, book and tract, evangelistic, correspondent to The American Friend, clerks for the ensuing year and representatives to the Yearly Meeting, also reports on the spiritual condition of the Monthly Meetings and other business that came before the meeting. It was decided to change the time of holding the Quarterly Meeting from the fourth Saturday in the month to the first Saturday in the month in order to avoid conflict with other things that came at the same time. The next Quarterly Meeting will be held at New Sharon November 4, 1916. The meeting closed with prayer and all went away feeling that the blessing of God had rested on all the sessions.

Prayer is the great practical working agency of the Church. It supplies the condition which makes possible the incoming and outgoing of the divine energy.—J. W. Conley.

A letter from Africa written on May 29th tells of slight attacks of fever which have come upon several of the missionaries. Nearly all of the Chilson family have, at various times, been sick with the fever and also Jefferson Ford and their two youngest children. The letter stated, however, that all had fully recovered. None of the workers at Kaimosi have, apparently, had the fever.

RAYMOND HOLDING'S WORK

We who have heard the Gospel from our earliest years are in danger of forgetting what a strange and wonderful sound it has for those to whom it is unfamiliar. Raymond Holding tells how one of the Cuban Christians—a member of the meeting at Banés—after his day's work walked out to El Embarcadero and back, a distance of eight miles altogether, in order to attend a special service which Chuch Rodil and Raymond Holding were conducting at that place. In explaining his readiness to walk that distance at the end of a working day, he declared he could well afford to walk that far in order to get to tell what the Gospel had done for him.

In some meetings Raymond Holding conducted recently at Veguitas, another outstation near Banés, a number of persons publicly declared their desire and intention to lead a Christian life. There is no meeting house at Veguitas so the meetings were held in a private dwelling. The man in whose home the meetings were held was another who hadn't forgotten what a change the Gospel had brought in his own life. On horseback, he went all through the surrounding country inviting people personally to come to the meetings. They came and beside the result already indicated calls have come from other towns asking that Gospel services be held there as well.

EXPERT ADVICE ON CHURCH FINANCE.

Frederick A. Agar was the man selected by the Missionary Education Movement last winter to deal with the difficult subject of church finance at most of the conventions held in connection with the National Missionary Campaign. Thousands of men who heard Mr. Agar in the convention cities approved the wisdom of that selection. Mr. Agar is both convincing and fascinating as a speaker and his keen analysis of the financial side of church work has given fresh vigor to a multitude of churches.

Something over a year ago, the Missionary Education Movement was looking for an expert to write one of the volumes in the Library of Christian Progress. Again Mr. Agar was selected. The title given him was "Church Finance" and the result of his work was published a few months ago. The book sells for 50 cents and may be ordered through our own American Friends Board of Foreign Missions. It is being placed on sale at most of the Yearly Meetings and may be examined at the book stand at any one of them.

We mention the book and its author in this connection because we believe that "Church Finance" is the book which scores of Friends have been looking for and because we are convinced that the welfare of our Missionary enterprise depends in a large measure upon an adequate and up-to-date financial plan in the particular meetings. Mr. Agar's book is a surprise in that a subject which might be dry has been made actually interesting. We leave our readers to find out for themselves what a sound and suggestive treatment the book contains of this perplexing subject which too often has been regarded as "a necessary evil."

ENVELOPES FOR CHURCH OFFERINGS

What we have just written about finances and expert advice thereupon reminds us that the use of the Duplex Envelope for church offerings is advised very generally now by the most successful churches and church workers. A number of Friends Meetings all over North America have used the envelopes and now would not think of doing without them. Several of these meetings have been ordering their envelopes through the Board of Missions, thereby securing a substantial reduction in prices. To these and other meetings which may be interested—already we have had a number of inquiries—we wish to announce that Duplex Envelopes dated from October 1st should, without fail, be ordered by September 1st. We cannot be sure of being able to fill orders received after that date at the reduced prices indicated below. These envelopes are printed uniformly with the words "Weekly Offering for Current Expenses of Friends Meeting" on one side and "Weekly Offering for American Friends Board of Foreign Missions" on the other. They are printed in two colors, red and black, and have prayer topics on the backs.

For less than 50 sets, 11c per set.

For more than 49 but less than 100 sets, 10½c per set.

For 100 sets or more, 10c per set.

It is most important that all orders reach our office by September 1st. Address is at the top of this page.

APPARENT CHANGE FOR THE BETTER IN MEXICO.

While one still speaks cautiously with regard to things Mexican, there are many evidences of the fact that conditions in our section of that field have very much improved within the last month. At the time of writing (August 16th) Solomton Tice is in Victoria and we hope in an early issue of The American Friend to be able to publish a report of his trip. He is accompanied by Genaro Ruiz, pastor of the meeting at Matamoros. Their visit to Victoria is for the purpose of finding out whether it may be possible to open the lower grades of the mission schools there in September and whether evangelistic work in the surrounding country may be carried on.

It is practically certain that Hussey Institute at Matamoros can open in September as usual. Even serious complications between the two governments would probably not interfere with this plan. Our missionaries fear that the chaotic condition of Mexican currency will make it practically impossible to accommodate any boarding pupils, either at Matamoros or Victoria, for the present. Those most familiar with conditions in the country villages of Mexico believe that there is a more favorable opportunity for evangelistic work in that field than has existed for several years past. Our Board is hoping to be able to set aside one or two persons for work of this nature during a part of the coming year. Such work can surely be carried on in villages near the border and it is probable that evangelists can penetrate a considerable distance into the interior.

Peace Medal Contests Planned

Franklin S. Blair, chairman of the Peace Committee of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, writes as follows concerning the work of the peace Committee:

"We are launching the Peace Medal Contest work. I have written an article asking for such contests in every congregation of Friends and their neighbors. We hope we may have a contest at Yearly Meeting this year for a gold medal, and next year eight persons having gold medals to contest at Yearly Meeting time for a grand gold medal; that is, one person from each of the eight Quarterly Meetings. In 1918 we hope to hold a diamond medal contest, and in 1919 a grand diamond medal contest.

"I have spoken on peace to over 22,000 students and teachers and in seventy or eighty churches besides, of seven or eight different denominations."

PHILADELPHIA FRIENDS

An Effective Peace Circular

The Friends Peace Headquarters with offices at 111 South Thirteenth Street, Philadelphia, has recently issued a leaflet in the form of a hand bill printed in two colors, setting forth in brief and telling form a few of the important considerations concerning preparedness from Friends' standpoint.

A few of the striking sentences are as follows:

"The surest defense of any nation is the friendship of other nations."

"Good will is harder to overcome than armaments."

"An ounce of thinking is better than a ton of fighting."

The last sentence reads: "We call Jesus Master and Lord—why not prepare to do as he said?"

"SUPER-RESISTANCE"

By PROF. HAROLD C. GODDARD

The American Association for International Conciliation, Sub-station 84 (407 West 117th Street) New York City, published as the May number of its regular bulletin a paper by Professor Harold C. Goddard of Swarthmore College, entitled "Super-resistance." Super-resistance as defined by Professor Goddard is a force which turns "into its own direction" the other force which it resists.

No brief review of the article can do justice to it, but two quotations may show something more of its spirit. Note these paragraphs:

"No increase in armaments that is not coupled with some social amelioration, some enhancement of genuine democracy, is entitled to a moment's consideration from the American people."

"And so the end of the whole matter is a paradox; the paradox that he who would seek peace must seek something else first. For peace—like those other ultimate things, beauty and happiness—must be wooed indirectly. It is written that he only shall attain beauty who loves life more than he loves art. It is written that he only shall obtain happiness who loves labor more than he loves pleasure. It is written that that nation only shall gain peace that loves humanity more than it loves the absence of strife and bloodshed."

The complete paper can be obtained free by addressing the Secretary of the American Association for International Conciliation at the address given above.

THE NEW YORK MILITARY TRAINING LAWS

Action of New York Quarterly Meeting

At the regular Quarterly Business Meeting of the Society of Friends held at 144 East 20th Street, New York City, the chairman of the Peace Committee, Edward Thomas, was given credentials to present to the various anti-militaristic organizations of the State, authorizing him to express the desire of Quakers to co-operate in obtaining the amendment or repeal of the military acts. Strong opposition was expressed to any legislation which tended to educate the people in military ideals.

The following resolution was adopted: "To our fellow citizens: We admire the zeal of those who seek to give our citizens and our children better training and better discipline to prepare them for the duties of citizenship. We would encourage all who seek to develop the highest ideals of patriotism, and we hope that our country will continually strive for the highest ideals of conduct both for its citizens and for itself as a nation. We earnestly hope that our people and our nation will bear in mind the temptations that arise if reliance is placed on military power. We hope that the people and the leaders of our state and our nation will realize that training in citizenship is something deeper and broader than military training, and will realize the perils to the future of our country which must follow from training our children and our young men in military ideals. We call especial attention to the laws which place the training of the youth of our state in military hands, and put into the hands of a single man the power to order citizens into active drilling with the militia at his pleasure in times of peace. We earnestly ask that all thinking citizens co-operate in calling for the substantial modification of these laws."

Hope was expressed that the laws could have the military features eliminated, but the educational features retained.

A NEW MILITARY LEAGUE

To the long list of Leagues already in existence for the advancement of militaristic plans and ideals there has recently been added another under the title, "The Universal Military Training League." The press notices say that "a country-wide campaign for compulsory military training will be opened soon by the new organization." It is further stated that "a plan has been worked out that meets the approval of the highest military authorities, educators, business men and others."

Since it seems clear that the question of universal, compulsory military training is to be discussed generally, with the certainty that at least in some places definite action will be proposed, there are at least two lines of preparation that should be made by those who feel that the course proposed by the militarists cannot be accepted, viz:

1. Have in mind and at hand ready for use the principal reasons for voting against compulsory military training.

2. Have also in mind alternative courses which will meet the demands for real service to one's country.

The Peace Association of Friends in America is ready to suggest sources of information on these questions for those desiring to prepare more thoroughly to meet the situation which confronts us. The officers of the Association would also welcome definite plans or suggestions for lines of service to one's country which are non-military in character and which may fairly be said to be the equivalent of the military service proposed.

A MESSAGE

From the Literature Department of the W. F. M. Union.

It is near the time when vacations are over, and we are about to resume our church activities with renewed vigor and enthusiasm in our efforts to make the present year show more splendid work for the Master.

We are solicitous that our missionary women get a good start in the mission text books by beginning the work in September, as it is outlined in the auxiliary programs which have been prepared for your use. If you wish to vary these programs to suit your local auxiliary we trust you will use the Bible message and the topic for prayer as outlined, that there may be strength added to our efforts to advance the cause of Christ by our unity in prayer. The promise is "If two of you shall agree * * * it shall be done for them of my Father who is in heaven." What great things we may expect when thousands are praying unitedly for specified, definite objects!

Our foreign mission text book, "World Missions and World Peace," is of unusual interest to Friends. Its author, Caroline Atwater Mason, was a birthright Friend. She attended Moses Brown School, later married a Baptist minister and united with the Baptists. She has rendered a large service to the cause of Christ and to civilization. She gives us a positive message in the new book that meets the false argument that "War is necessary to the valor and vitality of men," by showing that the constructive work of foreign missions furnishes a Christian equivalent for war, and supplies sufficient motives for heroism. The Central Committee of Foreign Missions has put out no book stronger or more needed.

The Council of Women for Home Missions representing the Women's Home Mission Boards of sixteen denominations has followed the general theme—"The Two Americas," by giving us the book entitled, "Old Spain in New America." With conditions in Mexico in their present critical state, this study book will prove a source of information that cannot fail to make women realize the wonderful need of Christian service in Latin American countries. It gives Friends an opportunity to study our own missions in Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico and Central America, and it will inspire us to work, to pray and to give that we may conquer this part of our country for our King.

Leaflets have been prepared by this department for special helps to these books. Suggestions from "How to Use" can be used effectively with the Union programs. Change the proverbial missionary meeting which is sometimes pronounced dull and uninteresting to interesting mission talks, discussions, pageants and playlets. Impersonate some of the characters in the lessons, or tell from memory the heroic deeds of our missionaries.

You will be surprised to note how these simple methods of instruction will entertain and interest the women in your society. Keep up your enthusiasm all the year and pass it on. With prayer, enthusiasm, study and perseverance we will have a splendid missionary year.

GOSPEL TEAM EVANGELISM.

Believing that men must act, if men are reached, J. W. Somerville D. D., Pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, Wichita, Kansas, gathered around him a group of business men who had a vision of what they could do for the church and Sabbath School. These men organized a Gospel Team, and went from church to church telling the good news of their conversion, with the result that hundreds were converted, and became active in the church and Sabbath School.

One remarkable result of the Gospel Team movement was that the men soon developed into leaders in the church. Many churches have been revived and a desire created among the laymen to become soul-winners. The men of other denominations were soon organized into Gospel Teams and thus this great revival spirit grew until thousands were converted and added to the churches.

A prominent banker said, "I used to think there was not much for a layman to do in the church; but since I became a member of the Gospel Team, the Church and Sunday School have meant infinitely more to me, and best of all, I have had the pleasure of leading others to Christ." The testimony of this business man is but an echo of thousands of men from every walk of life.

In one city where a group of men got a vision of what they could do they went to their pastor and asked him to give them something hard to do, saying, "We want a man's job." And in another city during a revival, two men lined up seventy-five men for service, in one week.

In order that the influence of this great revival movement, which has been so signally blessed of God, might be extended to churches everywhere, "The International Gospel Team" was organized, with Hon. Claude C. Stanley, President, son of President Edmund Stanley, J. W. Somerville D. D., Vice President; Frank W. Oliver, Secretary, and Tilman Hobson, of Pasadena, California, field evangelist. Because of his deep spirituality and large experience in union and denominational revival, he is eminently fitted for this important position. Under his efficient leadership the International Gospel Team will conduct union revival on the same plan with which he has so successfully conducted union evangelistic campaigns in the past and which were endorsed by all the churches co-operating. The revivals are for everybody, and not, "for men only" as some may think.

In order to carry out the larger plan and make the influence of the revival permanent and far-reaching, the Gospel Team conducts special feature services during their four or more weeks in a city, one of which is "Gospel Team Day" when Gospel Team Evangelism, by men and women, is emphasized.

From the inspiration received at these services, church members get a vision of what can be done in their churches and return to kindle revival fires on the altars of home and church and Sunday School. What has been done in other cities can be done in your city if the people want it and have a mind to work for it. Further information about Gospel Team Evangelism can be had by writing to Tilman Hobson, Wichita, Kansas.

When he says to John, "Fear not," he directs the feeling and thought not to anything in John himself, or to anything in his circumstances; on the contrary, he directs the mind of John to himself. The ground of confidence is altogether in the Lord himself.—James Iverach.

ACCORDING TO EPH. 3:20 IN CHIQUIMULA

The Bible Classes which we hold annually in July or August, here at headquarters were held this year from the 13th to the 30th of July. The attendance was the largest in the history of the work, 84 enrolling with an average attendance of 60 daily for 15 days. The students in both our girls' and boys' schools who are preparing for Christian work, were also enrolled. Eight received prizes for punctual attendance. A school of an hour and three-quarters, in charge of Matilda Haworth, dedicated to reading and writing, made it possible for Indians and others born and brought up in this land where "ignorance is bliss," to begin to learn their first words. Results were gratifying, 30 enrolled, average attendance 20. We have the prospect of opening a night school of this character. Applications are coming in.

The subjects taught were "Jesus is Coming" (Blackstone) by Cora Wildman, "Office of the Holy Ghost" by Armando Peralta; Epistles of Timothy and Titus by Mae Burk, "Old Testament Heroes" by Clara Howland, "Total Abstinence and Family Life" by Raul Mejilla, "Life of Christ" and varied and practical subjects by others. Four passed examination in the book "Jesus is Coming" and were given as prizes the book next studied in the course, "Life of Christ." Two that passed were teachers in our schools and the remaining two were women evangelists.

Two days of power in prayer and heart searching were graciously filled with cryings and intercessions. One day classes for half the time were dismissed and all went to prayer for self or others. There was held daily a class in spiritual life in class meeting methods. These classes were helpful in a great measure and were hours never to be forgotten.

One supper with covers for 70 was laid in a palm enclosure on the farm. Chicken, rice, potatoes, pudding and cake were served. All sought their names at the plates and there were Indians, Ladinos, visitors and missionaries, and all together in grateful jubilee. After supper we returned in a company to the tabernacle where, with closed doors to the public, the family of God rejoiced in praise and purposes. Palms and homey arrangement of chairs and benches, with special music, added to the charm of the closing consecration hour.

Four nights were given to views and the old lantern of 6 years hard use seemed to do its best to give us clear views. Two nights were devoted to Temperance and two to Old Testament history. The sessions were held in the tabernacle where ample tables made class work pleasant. The dirt floor was noiseless and the air always good. Seven meetings in different homes of the city were held simultaneously each Thursday evening directed by native workers. Girls and boys of our schools attended to lead the singing.

Possibly the crown of the classes was the missionary meetings. There were three in number. With a map of the world, Mae Burk vividly portrayed the needs of the world and bade us, though we are in a large field, lift up our eyes and look on the crying needs of other lands. Our two Indian Advance Guards, Antonio and Ciriaco, blazing the way to Tegucigalpa, returned during the Classes. We suspended one hour and went out to the edge of the city to meet them 150 strong. There they duly appeared leading their faithful mule, coming around the bend in the road and with shoutings and clappings and waving of handkerchiefs we made greetings cordial and long. On our return to the tabernacle the girls and women went first, then the travelers and mule and then the men. When we reached the pavilion we gave them chairs in front. We sang and praised the Lord together and heard words of testimony of the faithfulness of our God in the long journey of 106 days over new territory.

They bring word of 24 souls saved. The following night they reported—a meeting never to be forgotten, lasting until 10 o'clock. The two missionaries appeared in khaki suits, barefoot, with a glow of divine pleasure lighting up their brown faces. The details of this remarkable meeting cannot be told. Their reports were full and living. At the close we introduced the out-going of Armando Peralta to Tegucigalpa. We asked for help. $47 gold were quickly, cheerfully given and one arose and offered himself as companion which was far beyond our thought, but a sweet surprise to us all from our heavenly Guide. As the workers and believers arose to give, they would also say, "prayers and life for Honduras." How wonderful!

The last meeting of the session was a missionary meeting with the two out-going missionaries to Tegucigalpa on the platform, Armando Peralta and Bernardino Ramirez. And so the 18 days of united effort in study and prayer closed with a precious sense of Divine favor. Subscriptions were increased to $51 gold and the two missionaries set out the following Tuesday for Tegucigalpa via Ocotepeque and San Salvador, a short ride on the Pacific to Amapala thence to Tegucigalpa. Their prospect is to return overland.

In every way the Bible Classes were a commentary on the "abundantly above" of Eph. 3:20. We thank God and take courage.

"With His loving hand to guide we can brave the wildest storm, and can sing amidst the tempest, 'Praise the Lord.'"

A COMMUNICATION

To Clerks of Various Monthly Meetings Throughout the Five Years Meeting, and all Friends Interested in the Extension of Christ's Kingdom:

I have been a resident of Detroit, Mich., for several months and find there is no Friends' Meeting, although am advised there are several Friends here and am taking this action in order to secure their addresses, looking forward to calling them together relative to the advisability of starting a Friends' Sabbath School or Meeting.

Detroit is a city of nearly one million people, coming from all parts of the world. Billy Sunday and his party are to hold a campaign here this fall and I feel this is an opportune time to call the Friends together and assist in the work, as Detroit needs the message as taught by Friends.

Send the names of all of your members now residents of Detroit to my address.

THE NEBRASKA PAGE

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SECRETARY IN DENVER QUARTER

On the 9th of July, Thomas E. Jones, Field Secretary for the Board of Young Peoples' Activities of the Five Years Meeting, arrived in Boulder, Colorado, where he began a tour of the entire Quarterly Meeting. He preached Sunday morning in the Friends church and addressed the young people in the evening. On Monday evening, forty young people attended a beef-steak fry in Gregory Canon, after which the Secretary delivered an exceedingly profitable inspirational address, based largely upon the problems which the young people of this day have to face and solve.

From Boulder, his itinerary included Denver, where he spoke once in the church and again in one of the homes; Colorado Springs, where he received a royal reception and addressed several gatherings, especially of the young people; Sand Arroya, a meeting twenty miles in the country from Sugar City; Arroya, the newest meeting in the Quarter, it having been established last January; and ended up at Deer Trail, where Denver Quarterly Meeting was in session.

It is hardly necessary to say that his presence at this last named place was a source of great blessing. He preached several times and rendered most acceptable service. The people in the vicinity of Deer Trail meeting come to the Quarterly Meeting services from a distance of twenty or twenty-five miles, and it often seems that the best Quarterly Meetings of the entire year are held there. The people of Denver Quarterly Meeting will be glad when it is possible for Thomas E. Jones to pay them another visit.

PLAINVIEW, NEBRASKA.

Our meeting has lately purchased a new high grade piano, which adds greatly to the musical interests of the church.

Three members of our Men's Gospel Team recently chaperoned the Boys' Club on a camping trip. They spent a most enjoyable time together.

The ladies of our W. F. M. S. went to the country to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stokes for their regular meeting, August 2. The last lesson in the book, "Home Missions in Action" was completed, after which a picnic lawn supper was served. The afternoon and evening were thus very pleasantly spent.

Prof. and Mrs. H. A. Foreman and little daughter, Esther, spent Sunday, July 30, with Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Foxworthy. In the Sunday evening service Mrs. Foreman spoke of her experience while a missionary in Japan. Prof. Foreman told of his work with the young people who are enrolled in the commercial department of Nebraska Central College. He spoke of the opportunities to exercise a Christian influence in this capacity of service.

Our pastor, Theo. Foxworthy, will next Sunday complete a series of sermons, emphasizing different phases of Christian responsibility on the following subjects: "The Importance of Church Attendance," "Prayer," "Soul Winning," "The Church as a Business Institution," "The Ideal Pastor."

CENTRAL CITY MONTHLY MEETING

The meeting was glad to welcome home the pastor, John D. Mills, after a two-weeks' vacation during the earlier part of July. On July 30, he preached a stirring peace sermon on the subject of "Jesus and Internationalism."

Two new members were received by certificate at the last monthly meeting.

Clyde and Lou Schultz Roberts, who remained here awhile after Yearly Meeting, visiting friends and conducting mission study classes, have left, the former going to Allen and other points in Nebraska, the latter to Santa Ana, California, where, with their children, Malcolm and Carolyn, she will visit with relatives until the way is opened for their return to Mexico.

The Monthly Meeting enjoyed the presence and service at the meeting on August 3, of Homer J. Coppock, who has arrived from New York preparatory to taking up his work in Nebraska Central College. He will fill the chair of History and Philosophy the coming year.

President E. H. Parisho preached to a large audience at the union meeting in the park the evening of July 30 on the subject, "What think ye of Christ?"

SAND ARROYA, COLORADO.

Our Society of Christian Endeavor was very greatly blessed and strengthened by a two days' meeting with Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of Young Friends Activities. Every sermon was with power and in the Spirit. Our Endeavor Society of forty-three active and seventeen associate members is alive both spiritually and socially. We aim to have a social of some sort about once a month or as various occasions may suggest. One recently given which proved to be a success was a "poverty" social.

We had a program consisting of old and forsaken songs and readings comically rendered. Various games were played, as a spelling match, using short familiar words which must be spelled backward. Toothpicks and water were served for the supper. Nearly a hundred persons were present. We do not approve of socials in the church, but our homes and school house are small and it is the only convenient place among homesteaders to accommodate the crowds. The proceeds were used in sending flowers and fruit to the sick and in the work of the social committee.

RICHLAND MEETING.

Richland Friends meeting near Vlas, Colorado, reports the work going nicely. The academy conducted its work in the church building last year. No teacher has been secured for the school this coming year. The school would be small and only one teacher would be required, but we should want one able to teach the academy course. We are not sure, however, that we would have more than the first and second years' work. Some Friend wanting to work for the Master in the way of teaching would find this a large open field. We had the acceptable company of James Fisk accompanied by Richard Smith and wife of Rose Valley, at our last Monthly Meeting. A children's day program on July 16, with a peace program in the afternoon, drew a large crowd.

AT GRAND JUNCTION, COLORADO

Paonia Quarterly Meeting was held at Pomona Park, Grand Junction, Colorado, July 29 and 30. Mrs. Williams of Paonia, and Kirby V. Bowen, pastor at Boulder, were in attendance. The latter preached both morning and evening on Sabbath to appreciative audiences. On June 25, L. Earl and Mamie Deane had charge of the evening meeting. He preached and she sang the gospel message. It was a very impressive service. On the following evening Prof. Roy Lewis had an appointed meeting and brought an encouraging and very helpful message from the words, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee" (I Timothy 4:14). Being so far from other Friends' meetings we greatly appreciate the visits of Friends. The Lord is blessing the Friends church here and enlarging her influence. The building is nearly completed. The pastor, L. Maria Deane, expects to spend the month of August in the mountains resting.

CHURCH AT WORK

Keystone, Indiana—The church and Sabbath School at Keystone are in good condition. The Sunday School is well organized and has been paying special attention to teacher training and mission work. The church services have been held with an average attendance on Sunday morning of fifty-two, on Sunday evening of ninety-five and on Thursday evening of twenty-nine. A good interest has been manifested in all of these services. Two series of meetings were held during the year, resulting in much good. The church building was painted inside and outside last October, and a new carpet and other improvements were added at a cost of $280, putting the building in firstclass condition. On Sunday, August 6, we had our all day meeting with a basket dinner at the noon hour. Frank Edwards of Westland, was with us and preached three strong sermons. We are looking forward to a teacher training commencement early in September. Our class consists of eight members. Mearl Wilson has been pastor of the meeting for the past three years, but has handed his resignation to the pastoral committee to take effect September 17.

Seattle, Wash.—Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting was held at Seattle August 4 and 5. All Monthly Meetings were well represented. No visiting ministers were present. All the sessions were characterized by much harmony and earnestness. On Friday evening, D. W. Cram, of Seattle, gave a very interesting address on the work and influence of Friends in Alaska. At the session on Saturday, Dr. Wm. C. Hall, who served some years as a medical missionary in China under the Congregational Board, and who has recently accepted an invitation from the English Friends to take charge of their hospital in West China, was introduced and the meeting was brought into deep sympathy with him and their work.

Spring River, Kansas—Most of those who attended church at Spring River on August 13 carried well filled baskets. After the service a large number of people journeyed to the home of Elwood Haworth, where a bountiful repast was spread under the beautiful shade trees. The occasion was the 90th birthday anniversary of our pastor and the afternoon was spent by friends and neighbors in social conversation, during which Elwood gave an interesting talk covering a period of more than half a century.

Elwood Haworth settled on a claim in this neighborhood in 1866; he helped organize the original Spring River meeting and build the little log meeting house which was the first church organization in this country. These early churches grew rapidly and the number of ministers was limited only by the capacity of the top gallery bench. He was one of those that occupied the top seat and always has taken a deep interest in religious work. For thirty-six years he has been our local pastor, giving his time and energy to the Lord's service without money and without price.

Allens Neck, Mass.—In connection with this meeting, and under the direction of Mark Mills of Earlham College, a special effort is being made to reach the entire community. Much success has been secured in the Bible School and young people's work. During the week of August 6-13 a series of lectures upon "Christian Fundamentals" was given by Tom A. Sykes, a member of the Yearly Meeting Efficiency Committee, and much blessing resulted from his ministry. On the last night in response to the invitation given for personal decision and for renewal of faith, the entire audience arose and surrendered themselves to God and His service. We are looking for great blessing to follow this spirit of surrender to the Divine will on the part of our people.

Chicago, Ill.—Chicago Quarterly Meeting was held at Chicago August 4-6. In addition to the resident ministers, the Yearly Meeting Superintendent, Enos Harvey, and Ida L. Curtis, formerly of California but now of Wilmington, Illinois, were present. The sessions were well attended. Thomas E. Jones, Secretary of the Young Friends Movement, spoke at the Christian Endeavor and Bible School Conferences on Friday evening. The reports covering the year's work were presented and showed a small increase in Chicago and Watseka meetings. Noble C. Trueblood expects to complete his pastoral work at LaPorte, Indiana, the first of September, when Ida L. Curtis will go there as pastor.

Russiaville, Ind.—Walter W. and Mellié M. Brown, pastors of Russiaville and West Middleton meetings, have accepted a unanimous call at both places to remain as pastors the coming year. The past year has been one of blessing and we hope to continue the good work. On Tuesday evening, June 27, the Christian Endeavor Society held its regular bi-monthly business meeting and social at the home of Achsa Carter. The entire membership of the church was invited. After the business had been dispensed with a program was given consisting of songs by the young ladies' quartette, a piano duet by Celia Johnson and Hilda Newlin, recitations by Pauline Conaway and Celia Johnson and an address by Chester Reagan. A social hour followed with refreshments of ice cream and cake.

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society held an enjoyable picnic in the woods on July 6. This Society is doing good work and is a valuable asset to the church. Upon invitation of the ladies' aid society the ladies of the church met with the workers' band of Lynn meeting for an all-day picnic on August 11. A bountiful dinner was spread and the occasion was enjoyed by all.

West Middleton, Ind.—June 25 was historic and memorial day here, when we celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of West Middleton meeting. In the morning, John White gave a history of the church and Frank Johnson of the Sabbath School. Joseph Johnson read messages of greeting from a number of former pastors. At the evening service Mary Emily Ellis, of Kokomo, a former pastor, gave the address. John White read a memorial of the deceased members. Special music was provided for both services. A number of former members were present.

On Monday evening, July 31, Thos. E. Jones visited our meeting and gave a helpful and inspiring address. Chester Reagan was also present. Young Friends from other points joined us in making it an enjoyable occasion. The young ladies' quartette of Russiaville rendered two beautiful selections. After the program a social hour was enjoyed by all, and light refreshments were served by the local Endeavorers.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

September 3.

Topic—"The Consecration of Home Life." Acts 10:1-8, 17-24, 44-48.

The home of Mary and Martha and their brother was an ideal home; because Christ was always a welcome Guest. Is Christ indeed the Head of your home, the Guest at the table, the Silent Listener to every conversation?

"The light of the home is indeed glorious. We think of the lighting of the lamps at eventime and find in the coming of that artificial day which sets the light in the window, a sign of defiance to the night, as if it were a great triumph. The thought of sending on the heels of the day another day which keeps off the darkness of night shows how well man has mastered the forces around him. The spiritual light within the home, however, is greater than this—the kindness of husband and wife toward each other and toward the children, the light on the faces of the home circle this is a more precious gleam than any which shines from star or sun."

BIBLE SCHOOL

September 3.

Subject—Paul's Sorrows and Comforts.

Lesson—II Cor. 11:21, 12:10.

Golden Text—My grace is sufficient for thee for my power is made perfect in weakness. 2 Cor. 12:9.

The church at Corinth had been seriously disturbed over certain questions of doctrine and method, and over Paul's relation to them and the kingdom. The affair resulted in factions, one of which had bitterly assailed the Apostle, calling his apostleship in question, denying that he had ever received revelations from the Lord. They spoke disrespectfully of his presence and speech and declared that he walked according to the flesh and did not possess the signs of an apostle. (Read I Cor. 9:1 and II Cor. 10:1—12:21.) Paul felt that these attacks must be dealt with and in the passages before us offers his defense in vigorous language. From this section, as well as others, we infer that the church by a good majority supported him, but the minority was influential and troublesome. When it came to a question of serious facts—the necessity of defending himself for the sake of the kingdom—the Apostle was able to give a good account of himself. His detractors were Hebrews boasting of their race and institutions. Paul was able to boast with them on that basis. Were they Christians? He was easily able here to show the greatness of his faith by the things which he had suffered. He bore on his body the marks of his sufferings. Like the veteran of the Civil war, when asked if he were in a certain battle he mutely answered by pointing to an empty sleeve. If physical evidence was desired as proof of discipleship Paul could furnish it in great abundance.

"Besides these things that are without there is that which presseth upon me daily, anxiety for all the churches, etc." Physical suffering is one thing, but mental or soul suffering is quite another. It is beyond description. It may leave its marks on the face, but these are less evident to the world and especially to carping critics. A great responsibility rested upon his shoulders. He was the Apostle and expounder of Christianity. His ideas were divergent from many at Jerusalem and he was under great moral obligation to prove the correctness of his conception by the results of his teaching and labors. Yes there was anxiety far beyond the concern of his critics. In the earnestness of his soul he cried, "The God and Father of the Lord Jesus . . . knoweth that I lie not."

Having thus portrayed the more manifest evidences of his apostleship he next referred to the more sacred spiritual intimacies with which he had been favored. These also leave their marks upon the physical man. Even these are often manifest to the hardened sinner who is supposed to know little of the finer spiritual qualities.

Both branches of Friends worship in the meeting house at Woodbury, N. J., and last fall they celebrated the 200th anniversary of the erection of the building. More than fifty people found much pleasure in a picnic on the meeting house grounds, with its fine old trees and ample lawn.

Why Do We Wait?

Why do we wait till ears are deaf
Before we speak our kindly word,
And only utter loving praise
When not a whisper can be heard?

Why do we wait till hands are laid
Close-folded, pulseless, ere we place
Within them roses, sweet and rare,
And lilies in their flawless grace?

Why do we wait till eyes are sealed
To light and love in death's deep trance—
Dear wistful eyes—before we bend
Above them with impassioned glance?

Why do we wait till hearts are still
To tell them all the love is ours,
And give them such late meed of praise,
And lay above them fragrant flowers?

How oft we, careless, wait till life's Sweet opportunities are past
And break our "alabaster box
Of ointment" at the very last!

O let us heed the living friend
Who walks with us life's common ways,
Watching our eyes for look of love
And hungering for a word of praise!

IN THE MATTER OF NEWS

The American Friend is anxious to give more attention to the real news of the church. Sometimes correspondents are prone to send in mere matters of routine that are uninteresting and for the most part unprofitable. Any occurrence, however, that is an inspiration to the local congregation will probably be an inspiration to others if only they can know about it. Anything out of the ordinary that is worth while or any regular event that produces more than the usual amount of interest and benefit is material the account of which should find its way into the columns of The American Friend.

Even important occurrences can be told briefly to better advantage than in a longer recital. The editor frequently has to rewrite news articles entirely in order to condense them.

The management of the paper is quite sure that important events are taking place in other meetings that are never reported to The American Friend. We trust that the pastor or some other interested person will take the responsibility of reporting these matters and reporting them promptly. Frequently news articles lose their freshness because they refer to events that have taken place several weeks or even months beforehand. Short items of news sent frequently are far better than longer items sent at intervals, covering several weeks of time.

Finally we are anxious to have statements concerning the movements of prominent Friends for our "news items" column. Will not Friends generally take an interest and help us out in these matters. If The American Friend accomplishes what it ought to accomplish it must be able to set forth to a greater extent the important activities of the whole church.

PLEASE REMEMBER

Please do not send letters to the office of The American Friend at Urbana, Ohio, except those concerning subscriptions to the paper. All matter referring to advertising, contributed articles, guarantee fund, news matter or the general policy of the paper should be sent to The American Friend or directly to the editor or manager, S. E. Nicholson, Richmond, Indiana.

HAPPINESS OR DISCONTENTMENT

"Where shall I find Happiness?" asked a soul. "Next door to Content," said one who knew." The direction appears to be accurate. Certainly happiness does not and cannot live next door to Discontent—what neighbor would who could help it? Many discontented young people expect to have happiness drop in upon them suddenly to stay. But can there be any real chance of it?—Great Thoughts.

THE BATTLE IN THE SKIES

By HENRY GEKELER.

O God of every man! The battling tribes of earth
Assail with their contending cries Thy holy ear—
A jangling Babel chorus of discordant prayer:
"God bless our nation!"—"Bless our arms!"—"With victory crown
Our righteous cause!"—"Bless us, confound our enemies!"
Men fling their blasphemes of hate into Thy face,
Degrading Thee again into a tribal God,
And call their insults worship!

Christian nations these,
Who slay and pray; each thinks to shut Thy patient ear
To all cries but its own! Dost Thou not love the world,
As when Thou gavest it Thy Son? Was He who came
That all men everywhere might Thee "Our Father" call,
Was He a bigot Jew or was He Son of Man?

Once wast Thou eaten up of zeal, O Christ: with scourge
Thou dravest out the cowering traffickers who made Thy Father's house a den of thieves. Another house—
True house of prayer for all the nations it shall be,
Not built with hands, God's dwelling place—heaven itself
Invaded is by warring hosts who push and thrust,
Jostle and crowd, who lift the mailed fist and shout
With cries competing for monopoly of grace.

Your warlike passions moderate with reverence!
Have ye forgotten the soldier-king though he a man
Was after God's own heart, that he, the man of blood, Might not e'en earthly temple to Jehovah build?

And we dare not, who dwell in favored land of peace,
Usurp God's judgment seat, as if we ne'er had sinned,
Nor could be tempted unto sin; we join with you
To say in common prayer: "Have mercy on us, Lord."

O jealous Guardian of Thy Father's house of prayer,
Come, castigate with whip of truth our petty pride,
Wither our arrogance beneath Thy blazing eye,
Our low aims shrivel up before Thy righteous wrath;
Oh! chasten us lest answers to our selfish prayers
Prove our undoing. In our Father's house there's bread,
Yea, bread to spare, and none shall snatch another's loaf
To feed himself. O God, bless us! O God, bless all!

The Social Obligations of the Gospel

The emphasis of the teachings of Jesus was continually being placed upon holy personality. Not what men do, but what they are, was his first concern, knowing full well that righteousness in life would inevitably produce righteousness in conduct. The Pharisees were exemplars in obedience to the law, yet Christ admonishes the multitudes that "except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and the Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."

Christ's followers "are the salt of the earth," but the potentiality of salt is its savor, the quality that distinguishes it as salt. Its functions are preservative, but its functions can never be performed without the existence and maintenance of the savor that is its essential characteristic. "Ye are the light of the world." But light is inherent and shines by its very nature. It will be noticed that the promise of fruition is not dependent primarily upon good works, but upon good light, whose function is to shine before men so as to reveal both righteousness in life and in conduct as an inducement to discipleship on the part of others.

The blessings of Jesus were upon the poor in spirit, upon the meek, upon those who hunger after righteousness, upon the merciful, the pure in heart, those who are persecuted for the sake of righteousness, those who love their enemies and those who by their manner of living are laying up treasures in heaven. Religion primarily, therefore, has to do with the quality of personality as the fructifying soil from which is developed Christian service and good works and daily deportment that show forth the fruits of the Spirit, and bring other lives within the circle of divine favor and forgiveness.

But no less does religion have to do with human relationships. Christianity is social no less than personal. The spirit that made the Good Samaritan brother and helper to the man who had fallen among thieves is the spirit that makes every Christian man brother to every other man and therefore obligated to help him at every point of the road. The doctrine is not a Christian doctrine that denies brotherhood to all other than those of the household of faith, for the relationship of men is the relationship of human souls. If the good shepherd will leave the ninety and nine animals that are safe to go out over the mountains to find the one that is lost, how much more is the obligation upon us as Christian men and women to go out after the wandering ones of earth in the spirit of Christian brotherhood and win them to the family circle of our common Father!

We cannot escape the social obligations of the gospel. Did we all practice what we preach there would be a revolution in business, in the industrial world, in society, in the world of politics and in international relationships. Labor and capital cannot disagree to the point of strife through the practice of the teachings of Jesus as practical rules of conduct for the entire social order. Nationalism would take on new life and would have a new meaning for the world if nations were only ready to be truly Christian in both their internal and external relationships. The doctrine of human brotherhood, with all of helpful service and good will which the term implies, must supplant the spirit of selfish competition and cut-throat striving for the mastery which characterizes worldliness and materialism at every point of the way. But this revolution in the social order can only come through the team work of saved and holy personality. Holiness in life will inevitably beget holiness in action, and the brotherhood of saints must just as inevitably beget a brotherhood of humanity for whose redemption Christ gave up his life, and for whose help and betterment we are obligated by the highest terms of service.

The spirit of Christianity is the spirit of ministry and service (Matt. 20:26, 27, 28), and the spirit of service is the spirit of brotherhood. It is the Christian spirit alone that begets an interest in the welfare of others, and it is the experience of love shed abroad in the heart of the redeemed that prompts all endeavors to lift sinful and erring humanity out of the depths of suffering and unrest into newness of life, into fellowship with God.

In considering still another phase of this question, we close with a recent editorial quotation from "The Christian Work," as follows:

"But Jesus goes farther still and imposes something harder than any of these things upon his followers. Men must live together in this world, and, being human, there will be friction. Interests will clash; misunderstandings will arise; evil men will inflict injury upon the good; the Christian will be sinned against as much as will the man of the world. It is impossible to live in our world and not be wronged—sometimes cruelly wronged and attacked. Jesus knew this well. Had he not continually experienced it? And to it he directed his attention, for this attitude toward our enemies, toward those who have wronged us, is one of the real problems of life. It is always with us. Jesus met it by flying straight into the face of all the philosophy of the world. The world has always said: "Get even with the enemy. Revenge yourself upon him." Jesus turns to his disciples and says, in substance: The aim of your Christian life is to be perfect as God is perfect. Therefore you must do what God does. He forgives, therefore you must forgive to be Godlike; he forgives you, his enemy, therefore you should forgive your enemies; he seeks peace, therefore you must be a peacemaker in the world if you would be his children; he is merciful, therefore you should be merciful; he seeks the salvation of all men, therefore you must seek the salvation of the enemy, not your own revenge; your enemy is God's child, although he is mean and evil, and God loves him, therefore your thought should be, not how to wrong him or hurt him in return, but how can you please God by winning this erring child back to Him.

"Now this is very radical, the world has always said fantastical, impracticable, impossible doctrine, but it is the very core of Christ's teachings, and if we abandon it we might just as well leave Him out of account for good, take His name off our church, out of our books and off our lips. But curiously enough, much to the confusion and dumb-founding of the so-called practical men, it always works when it is tried, proving itself to be the most practical teaching in the world. For is not the saving of a man's soul the most practical thing in the world? And does it not almost always follow that the result of your sincerely forgiving a man saves him to his higher self? This is probably one of the reasons Jesus talked so much about it to the apostles. It was a method of redemption, the great opportunity to save. Forgiveness is also the great healing angel of the social order. Revenge disrupts it; forgiveness constructs it, makes for harmony and peace. But most of all, perhaps, Jesus was thinking of the effect upon the life of him who practiced it. It reacted on Him and made Him beautiful, great in graciousness, benevolent, merciful, as is God himself."

In a world where man's relationships to others form so large a part of the program of his life, it is inevitable that, next to the quality of his own personality, his obligations in Christian service stamp the gospel as the greatest and most beneficent social force in all human experience, and when practiced will save humanity to the uttermost.

Religious Essentials

By ELBERT RUSSELL

Three times Paul the Apostle says in word or in effect "circumcision is nothing." (I. Cor. 7:19, Gal. 5:6, 6:15). In the controversy with the Judaizers, circumcision stood for the Mosâic system; for all its rites, ceremonies and ordinances, its priesthood and sacrifices, its distinction of clean and unclean meats, its observance of Sabbaths and new moons.

What a tremendous revolution in Paul's religious thinking, when the Pharisee who had once staked his hope of salvation on such "works of the law," can call them all "rudiments of the world" (Gal. 3:4, 10) and say simply "circumcision avail-eth nothing"! Ardent natures, like the apostle's are apt to consider all the circumstances of their religious experiences as essential parts of it. It is difficult for the devoted Episcopalian to say "the liturgy is nothing," or for a Baptist to say "baptism is nothing," or for a Calvinist to say "orthodoxy is nothing" (cf. Matt. 7:21, 22. James 2:19, 20); or for a Holiness disciple to say "experiences are nothing." But the apostle had learned that "nothing external is of the essence of religion" (cf. Matt. 15:17-20). Christianity can never come to its own until it ceases to treat non-essentials as essentials, and to let something outward separate us from Christ and one another. (Gal. 5:2-4.)

Having asserted the non-essential character of circumcision the apostle avoids the opposite extreme. He at once adds "neither is uncircumcision anything." The blight of modern liberalism is that it is so often content merely with opposing the non-essentials. New England Unitarianism having discovered that Calvinism is not essential to salvation has been tempted to think unorthodoxy valuable in itself. We Friends have been in danger, of thinking we were better for not having been baptized. We need continually to say to ourselves "non-baptism is nothing."

The fact is that the whole question of forms, of rites, creeds, ceremonies, and ordinances is not vital to Christianity. The ball is not in the scrimmage there. A man's religion bears no necessary relation to his practice or neglect of them.

What, then, is essential to Christianity? The apostle gives three answers in the passages cited above. First, he says, "circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing; but the keeping of the commandments of God."

"Lo, I am come to do thy will" is the central point in the work of Jesus (Heb. 10:4-9), as "Thy will be done" is central in the prayer he taught his followers. But the adherents of Judaism were ready with the question, "Is not circumcision one of the commandments of God?" So, ask all the defenders of the eternal duty to keep the old ways. Is not baptism a commandment of the Lord? Did he not enjoin the observance of the supper, or foot washing? Is not the papacy or the episcopacy of divine ordering?

The truth is that the will of God is in its expression distinct for each age and a special thing for each person. The new wine of each generation's duty must have new wine-skins. No engineer will attempt to run his train by the time card of a past generation. Even with an up to date time card, the engineer needs the dispatcher's special orders for his train. The commandments of God are not stereotyped, fixed and unchangeable for all ages and all men. Before we can keep them, we must first learn them. Knowledge of how men of other ages understood God's will helps us to know it. The Bible, church history, prophets and preachers, saints and synods help. But by study, prayer, worship and work each of us must learn for himself the commandments of God. Circumcision was not a commandment of God for Paul, though it had been so to Abraham; nor baptism so for Fox, though it had been such to the Medieval church; nor is war a commandment of God to us, though Joshua and his generation so understood it.

When, however, we have learned God's commandments, we find them hard to keep. A God-obeying man must first be created within us. Paul has given a vivid description (Rom. 7) of the way the lower nature prevented him as a Pharisee from keeping the law. All that circumcision stood for: Jewish birth, knowledge of the law, practice of its rites and ceremonies—did not guarantee a good character. Paul confesses that in spite of his scrupulous practice of the rites of the law he had a covetous heart. He knew that a man could be mean, lustful, greedy and irreverent in spite of Abrahamic blood; dishonest, while keeping the Sabbath, and unbrotherly while eschewing pork. It is just as possible to take the bread and wine of the Eucharist with a jealous heart or to recite an orthodox creed with bigoted pride and a hateful spirit. A good Friend used to say that when a neighbor professed sanctification he kept his hand on his pocket book. History never witnessed a greater gathering of rascals than some of the Crusaders' armies, and they had all been baptized and wore a cross. Therefore, Paul must needs modify his statement: "For neither is circumcision anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation."

The real question is not as to the presence or absence of outward ordinances or observances, but whether there is a Christlike nature. When Stephen Grellet met the patriarch of Moscow, Stephen wore his Quaker broadbrim and plain coat, and the patriarch came in official robes and tiara. But after they talked awhile, these externals lost meaning, for they discovered that both had been baptized into the things of the kingdom of God.

We Friends need especially to notice that the Apostle says "nor uncircumcision, but a new creation." We are not a particle better because we are not creed bound, and do not observe outward observances. These things keep us from wasting energy on things that do not profit, but we derive no positive benefit from our non-observance. And just because we leave off many observances that indicate religious interest on the part of most professing Christians, there is a heavy burden of proof upon us to demonstrate in some vital way our real Christianity. We must remember that taking the world over there is a larger proportion of rascals among those who are not baptized than among those who have been baptized; and that taking the world as a whole orthodoxy and honesty are more likely to be found in the same person than heterodoxy and honesty. If we drop the conventional garb of religion, we shall stand naked indeed before the world unless we put on Christ.

The phrases "commandments of God" and "new creation" are both rather indefinite; they are formal rather than specific. Many diverse things have been thought to be commandments of God. It is possible for people to acquire new characters, when the change is not for the better. We are changed in character by many things, by sorrow, by prosperity, by education, by marriage, by religion. It tells us little when we hear that a former acquaintance is changed. We want to know how he is changed, for better or for worse?

Paul defines for us the agency and character of the "new creation." "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith working through love." The new nature that he has in mind as the all essential thing is one that springs from personal union with Christ and is energized by love. There is a faith that is energized by pride, like Paul's Pharisaism; or by hate, like the Moslem's warfare on the infidel; or by a purely selfish hope of salvation. Such faith is not the all-availing thing. It does not spring from the right nature. Paul reminds us: "If I have all faith so as to remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing."

On the other hand there is a love that is not the outworking of faith in Christ. There is the natural affection for those that love us. There is a selfish love for those that belong to us. There is the weak sentimentalism that cannot bear the sight of suffering. But the love that springs from faith in Christ is more than these. It includes the love of enemies as well as friends. It means enduring wrong without revenge, forgiveness without reserve, self-sacrifice for the welfare of others without barriers of nation, race or class. Wherever such love is manifest, it is the fruit and proof of a Christian faith and a Christian nature (cf. Jno. 13: 35. Gal. 5:22. I Jno. 3:14; 4:7). To refuse fellowship in worship and co-operation in service with any such persons because of differences in external forms of religious work or worship is to make something else greater than faith in Christ and to cut ourselves off from those who are his real disciples (Gal. 5:1-6).

It is a great thing for us to have become emancipated from bondage to non-essentials of religious tradition. But mere non-conformity will not save us. It avails nothing unless we have the all-important things—a nature that delights in keeping the commandments of God, a faith that works itself out in love.

Baltimore, Md.

THE PUBLIC MEETING FOR WORSHIP

(A paper read by Alvin T. Coate at a recent prayer meeting at the First Friends Church, Indianapolis, Indiana, and submitted to The American Friend upon request of the members.)

I am concerned that our public meetings for worship shall more definitely promote individual, spiritual communion.

Today's world is very full of distracting noises; all our human senses are in constant contact. In all our households there is the greatest difficulty in finding the quiet and seclusion so necessary for spiritual development.

It is a dependable law of life that we come to value and rely upon our faculties in proportion to their respective uses. If there were no light, it would be no hardship to be blind. If then, we accustom ourselves to the uninterrupted employment of our physical senses and neglect individual spiritual exercise, the spiritual faculties, by this same law, atrophy and paralyze. But again, if this constant reliance upon physical and mental faculties be carried over into the Sabbath day and the meeting for worship, the avenues to God are in a way to be closed by those agencies which ought to be their opening. Mystical religion can not thrive amidst these destructions and I am, therefore, apprehensive, not only for us of mature years, but even more for our children, that we may lose that skill and aptness in spiritual faculties which is the very life blood of our denomination, and goes far to make up for our multiplied shortcomings.

Notwithstanding much that is said to the contrary we, of this day and country, were never so little in need of instruction. Our children are so filled with schools and societies, with teaching and preaching, that the process amounts almost to cramming. Mental indigestion and nervous collapse are quite too common and by the same causes we have the flabby congregation, responsive only to music and the spoken word.

Will you tell me, if early Friends needed silent waiting upon God as an important part of their public and private worship—those men and women whose lives were lived out in isolation and solitude—how much the more do we whose ears are dulled with voices?

If they came to the close of such lives with spiritual faculties so keen as to have made the Society of Friends the Euclid of religion—those men and women of the wilderness, with few books and little vocal instruction—how much the more shall we not covet the secret place of the Almighty?

Now, the strange thing is that we will all assent to this plea and at the same time assent to a meeting inconsistent with it.

Neither is there for us the usual defense that we are a mixed people and unused to the practice of worship after the order of Friends. We are not a mixed people; a majority of our children and ourselves are of Quaker stock for generations. Indeed, the desire for greater freedom from a formalized meeting is more frequently expressed by younger Friends whose study of the sources and early practices of Quakerism has won their loyalty.

I force myself against an increasing reluctance to speak also of the dangers of an habitual or perfunctory oral service in meetings for worship. It is a serious thing to interrupt the voice of God in the congregation by vocal utterances. It is as essential to wait for the sure prompting of the Spirit as it is to avoid quenching the moving of God in the soul, and in no Friends' meeting should there be missing some sufficient period for meditation—a period respected by all.

Let no one think that nothing more is involved here than the character of the meeting for worship. For us everything is involved and for the world very much. For us, the day we, as a church, lose that spiritual altitude which has distinguished us in the past, on that day we lose ourselves in the broad stream of Protestantism. And speaking of this spiritual altitude, Dr. Peabody, of Bryn Mawr, recently said: "The average experience cannot rise into this region unaided. Mysticism is thus a faith for the elect, adequate for those who need no support but God. To these, the unbroken silence is more than the most stately ritual, the presence of God more convincing than any creed concerning him, and the Quaker meeting not bare and empty, but full and rich with the eternal Presence. Other foundation can no man lay than the life of God in the soul of man."

Whether we realize this in our several experiences, it is none the less the thing we aim at. Unless we have found a substitute for the practice and development of an inward religion, an experience of new life within, then the first purpose of our public meetings is to give the largest opportunity for this practice and development, and all forms of vocal utterance should lend themselves to this high purpose.

Exery one who is abreast of the religious thought of the day knows that spirituality—that is to say, the conscious presence of God in human life—holds the attention of scholars in an increasing degree.

Destructive criticism has fought its fight and lost, along with dogma and controversial theology. The Society of Friends as it was, was never so highly esteemed by all evangelical churches; the Society of Friends as it is in a way to become a voice in the chorus of Protestantism.

The very elect of Christian men and women are today saying to genuine Quakerism, whether consciously or not, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Our own children, coming back from their college and university training, will cling to us or forsake us according as we cling to the one remaining essential, not practiced by other Protestant churches, and notwithstanding our increasing effort for the greater activity and efficiency of our church, it were better that not an additional member should come to us than that we should abate one degree our insistence upon the full opportunity for individual communion in our periods of worship, or that the real practice of mystical religion should seem to be on trial in a Friends' meeting.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OLD

A Benevolent Idea That Has Developed Into a National Institution

The American Sunday School Union of Philadelphia is preparing to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary the coming year.

This unique and distinctive organization has grown steadily from the time of its inception until now. It is known throughout the country as one of the most practical and efficient benevolent societies in existence.

Its headquarters are in Philadelphia, where it owns a modern four-story building on the main shopping thoroughfare in the business center of the city. This building contains over twenty thousand square feet of floor space, and is occupied exclusively by the various departments of the organization: including the retail book store, the stock and shipping rooms, editorial department, missionary department, mailing rooms, composing rooms, bindery, etc.

At the present time, there are over 230 active field missionaries promoting the work of the American Sunday School Union in the United States. It is the particular object of these field workers to establish and equip Sunday schools in communities which are without religious development. These schools are founded on Union principles, under which the people of each community are brought together in common worship. These people are also supplied with the general literature and periodicals published by the organization; the object of which is to disseminate news and knowledge of the entire religious world.

The work of these field missionaries is very frequently in undeveloped sections of the country, difficult of access, and many of them have experienced hardships of almost every conceivable kind. It is their work, however, to go where they are most needed, regardless of the sacrifices involved.

The wide scope of the work of the American Sunday School Union is readily recognized by reference to some of the actual statistics. During the past year, nearly fifteen hundred new Sunday schools have been organized, into which over seven thousand teachers and over sixty-eight thousand scholars have been gathered. The society's representatives also visited and rendered aid to 14,753 schools, including 76,156 teachers and 902,109 scholars. And, in connection with this work, 10,770 Bibles were distributed and 25,633 copies of the New Testament Scriptures. The various periodicals distributed number more than two million.

During the entire history of the society, approximately 130,000 Sunday schools have been founded, or an average of about four a day. Thus, literally millions of children have been taught the principles of Christianity and the advantages of upright living—many of whom otherwise would never have known the Word of God nor the meaning of worship in any form. And, in addition to these millions of children, many thousands of parents have become converted to Christian lives as a direct result of the society's work.

With results of such incalculable value to look back upon and still greater results to be attained in the future, the American Sunday School Union and all its affiliated workers may justly feel a deep sense of satisfaction and pride in the forthcoming celebration of a whole century of uplifting service.

The American Sunday School Union is undenominational. Its board of managers consists of laymen, representing seven different denominations. No work can be issued by the society to which any one member objects. The large percentage of the Sunday schools organized, later become affiliated with, or developed into, denominational churches; all of which is governed entirely by the wishes of the community residents in each case.

The principal officers are as follows: President, Martin Luther Finckel; Vice Presidents, Clarkson Clothier and James F. Stone, M. D.; Recording Secretary, William H. Hirst; Treasurer, John E. Stevenson.

GOSPEL TEAMS

Friends once sent committees or groups of workers to hold meetings in new fields or at small meetings. With the advent of the professional clergy among Friends there came a feeling that the "almost preacher" was a useless person and one to be scorned into silence while the ordained minister spoke the words of truth.

For several years Quaker churches said (or still say) of Sunday morning speakers, "If he is not recorded we do not want him, or at least keep him out of the pulpit." Hence the timid, waved into silence, shrank and shriveled and the churches in due dignity let the preacher say it all if he did not do it all.

Athletics came upon the arena of American life. "Team work" became the slogan that won honors to many a college and academy. Teams, where individuals worked together to accomplish an end became impressed on the Christian's subconscious mind. Gospel teams express in church work an antidote for the poisonous atmosphere that has gathered around the professional, licensed clergy ideals that have clouded Quakerism for the last fifteen years or more. Gospel team is a twentieth century expression whose equivalent forty years ago was "good, interested, spiritual workers." Hours are precious as never before. The church hour of 11 to 12 never needed as much planning and prayer. If we would serve our generation we must minister to it now.

Yonder meeting has a pastor half the time, who will speak in his absence? Our meeting has at least two middle-aged men gifted in the ministry and would have been recorded in some localities, but never will be in ours. Yes, and there is a young man and at least one young woman who would preach if they had half a chance. Then there are quite a number young and old who can talk to the edification of any gathering on certain themes for a short time. Our meetings suffer for an exchange of personality and a chance for their members to exercise spiritual gifts away from home.

A prophet is not without honor save in his own country and in his own house. "Holding the preacher's hat" is a function that can now be performed by a gospel team. In days of yore he who held the preacher's hat got to preach a little while for sure. In these modern pastoral days there is almost absolutely no chance for anyone else to talk even a little bit in the classical Sunday service.

We must use the laymen or lay down the church. Who should take the initiative in operating gospel teams? You should, if no one else has. If the Quarterly Meeting superintendent is inactive, visit all the department superintendents in turn, and if the pastors won't help you, start some team work to get an address from a Yearly or Five Years Meeting Board on gospel team work. This work is God's modern method of using languishing laymen to vitalize languishing churches. Use the gasoline that God has given for the Sunday transportation of such workers; and behold the signs and wonders the most high God hath wrought.

BIRMINGHAM IS PROHIBITION-PROSPEROUS

The Manufacturers' Record, one of the leading business publications of the country, asked Mr. E. W. Barrett, editor of "The Birmingham Age-Herald," to tell the truth in regard to the effect of prohibition upon that city. Mr. Barrett's article is a strong endorsement of the policy.

Deposits in the Birmingham banks on July 1, 1916, were $5,134,052.95 greater than on the same date of 1915 and the number of depositors had increased 7,860.

It is not a question of how much we are to do, but of how it is to be done. It is not a question of doing more, but of doing better.—John Ruskin.

WITH THE CHILDREN

TWO FACES

Have you ever seen a person with two faces? I have seen such people. These strange folks can change their faces whenever they wish.

One girl I met first at Sunday School and then visiting among her friends. The face she had on at these times was sweet and kind, so that I thought her a very pretty girl. I supposed that she always wore such a face, for people are supposed to have only one. But one day I went to her house, and just think! She had on a face that was so ugly and cross-looking I hardly knew her. She changed so quickly, but not before I saw it. If she had worn that face out in company, no one would have liked her; but I learned that it was her home face.

A little boy I know has the finest face, all smiles and sunshine, that he puts on whenever he can have his own way. But just let some one cross him in anything, and instantly he puts on a face covered over with pouts and frowns. And he will wear that ugly face until we are all very tired of it.

Another boy I knew had one face that he used when he worked and a very different one that he wore when he played. His work face was long and all corners of the mouth drew down. It made him look very unhappy. And to look at him made mamma sad. But his play face, which he put on when he could play ball or go fishing, was so round and smiling that you would think him the happiest boy anywhere.

I know a man who had two faces when he was a boy, but now he has just one, and it is the ugly face. That is the way all these two-faced people get. I would rather have just one smiling face and wear it all the time—Our Little Folks.

LITTLE CLAY MODELERS

Like all other children, the little boys and girls in Africa have their playthings. One of their favorite amusements is clay modeling.

The clay is dug out of a river bank and beaten until it is one solid lump. Then pieces are broken off and these are made into little oxen, wagons, horses, carts, pigs, goats, cows, pots, sledges, men—in short, into everything and anything the little modelers know about.—Child Life in Many Lands.

A BEAUTIFUL ANSWER

A little boy was sitting at dinner at a friend's house. He was too small to cut the meat for himself and his mother was at the other side of the table, but a lady sitting next to him offered her help.

"Let me cut it for you," she said, "that is, if I can cut it the way you want it."

"Thank you," answered the little boy. "I shall like it the way you cut it, even if you do not cut it the way I like it."—Apples of Gold.

THE HIGHER LIFE

THY WILL, NOT MINE

Father, hold thou my hands;
 The way is steep;
 I cannot see the path my feet must keep;
 I cannot tell, so dark the tangled way,
 Where next to step. O, stay;
 Come close, take both my hands in thine;
 Make thy way mine.
 Lead me. I may not stay.
 I must move on, but O, the way;
 I must be brave and go;
 Step forward in the dark, nor know
 If I shall reach the goal at all—
 If I should fall.
 Take thou my hand;
 Take it, thou knowest best
 How I should go, and all the rest;
 I cannot, cannot see;
 Lead me, I hold my hands to thee;
 I own no will but thine;
 Make thy way mine. —George Klinge.

What Do You Say?

"When a man tells you that he has the love of Nature in his heart, you may be sure he hasn't any." So said the Sage of Concord. And upon second thought, most of us will agree with him. We do not want a man to tell us how much he loves flowers or children or friends or pictures or what. We want him to act as if he loved these things, then he will not need to say much about it. I cannot recall that Abraham Lincoln ever said "he had the love of children in his heart;" he never needed to say it. Everybody knew it. No amount of assertion will ever prove the contrary of the way we live. So I do not like to hear a man too often talk about his love of God. If he really "has the love of God in his heart," he will be unable to keep it there; it will surely break out. Sometimes, when his heart is overfull, he will bear testimony in words; most of the time he will write his testimony in kindness, gentleness, patience, integrity, truth.—George Clarke Peck.

THE JOYFUL CHRIST

Art and literature have stamped upon the imagination of the world the image of a sorrowful Christ who never knew a smile. The very name of Christ is connected with sorrow. It brings before our vision, a lowly manger, a forty days' fast in a region where nature had ceased to smile, wrestlings with poverty, strugglings in prayer by night on lonely hillsides, heart-suffering and scalding tears in the presence of sin and hopelessness, blood sweat among the shadows of a garden, a shameful arrest through the agency of a recognized follower, a humiliating trial before hostile tribunals, a painful death upon the cross between two thieves, blackening heavens, a quaking earth, and a sealed tomb.

Yet the idea of a joyful Christ is historically true. The angels sang at his birth. Heaven opened at his baptism. He sat down at his Father's banqueting table among the heat waves of the desert. His first miracle saved the day for a bridal occasion. His ringing cry under all circumstances was: "Be of good cheer." He filled every parable relating to sin and the sinner with the song of hope. In the very shadow of the cross he spoke of his joy and made a bequest of it to his disciples. When he ascended, he left in the heart of his disciples a peace as sweet as the morning light of his resurrection day, "and they returned to Jerusalem with great joy." Surely all this means a joyful Christ. Whence did the old idea ever spring that he never smiled?

The Christless person sees only a sorrowful Christ. The Holy Spirit can lead to Christ only those who, in visualizing sin, learn to visualize the cross with all its fearful as well as hopeful meaning. No sinner can find the joyful Christ without having first seen the sorrowful Christ with the pierced hands and feet. Our first Christian art was intensely evangelical. It seized upon the central fact in a sinner's approach to the Father, and so the sorrowful Christ became fixed upon the canvas of the world. Let no evangel of Christ make the mistake of thinking that he can hide the blood stains and at the same time reveal Christ to a sinful world. It is not the Christ of Cana but the Christ of Galilee that breaks the sinner's heart.

On the other hand it cannot be emphasized too strongly that the Christ of the Christian is, and must be, the joyful Christ. Like Christ, the disciple leaves the cross and the grave clothes behind him. He no longer looks for a living Christ with eyes accustomed to the gloom of sealed hopes. He through Christ is free and alive and triumphant, and he partakes of the joy that belongs to a living and triumphant Christ. It was through no mere chance that the early Christians in the catacombs represented Christ in their drawings as bright and joyous, for he represented the eternal youthhood and hope of their faith.—Nashville Advocate.

HOW GOD LOVES

Gypsy Smith once quieted a riotous meeting. The Socialists and agnostics of a town would not give him a hearing, but shouted for a considerable time at the top of their voices. When the din subsided for a moment, the preacher picked out an old man ringleader. "Have you any children?" the missionary asked. "Yes, guv-ner, I have." "How many?" Three. "How many boys?" "Two and a girl." "What is the oldest?" "A boy." "Is he a good lad?" "No, guv-ner, I can't say that he is; he gives me a lot of trouble. I think sometimes that he will break my heart." "Do you love him?" "Aye, that I do. I sometimes think that I love him most of all." "Well," said the missionary, "don't be surprised if God loves us in this world more than any other beings in the universe, just because we have given him so much trouble."—The Record of Christian Work.

REPORT OF NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING

The 219th annual session of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, held at Guilford College, N. C., from Eighth month 8th to 14th, was an occasion of marked blessing and manifest Divine favor from the opening to the closing session. The weather was almost ideal and the beautiful natural surroundings were conducive to restfulness and worship. The attendance was quite good, a larger number than usual being present from the more remote Quarterly Meetings.

The presence and gospel messages of the following visiting Friends were greatly appreciated: John L. Kittrell of Indiana Yearly Meeting, Howard and Sarah Hoge of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, Charles L. Wooten of Kansas Yearly Meeting, Sophronia Reynolds of New York Yearly Meeting and Edgar T. Hole of the Friends Africa Industrial Mission. Waldo Woody, formerly of this Yearly Meeting, now of Wilmington, was also present. Elbert Russell of Baltimore and Thomas Wood of Boston were present during the closing sessions and received a warm welcome.

Of all subjects coming before the Yearly Meeting perhaps none received greater attention than that of Peace. The reading of the London General Epistle in the opening session brought forth many expressions of warm sympathy for our English Friends and reminded the older Friends of a similar testing in our Yearly Meeting during the Civil War. The interest in Peace led to a departure from the custom of the last few years and the Epistles from Dublin, Canada and London were read in full. An Epistle from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting was also gladly received and read. At the session especially devoted to Peace James Southgate, President of the N. C. Peace Society, made a strong address in which he paid a tribute to the consistent adherence of Friends to peace principles and emphasized the true foundation of peace, namely, the peace of God abiding in the heart of the individual. Dr. J. J. Hall of the American Peace Society also made an address. The presence of Dr. Hall throughout the greater part of the Meeting and his helpful counsel and words of good cheer were much appreciated. A letter expressing thankfulness that our country had been kept from war was sent by the meeting to President Woodrow Wilson.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension report received a large share of attention, and the Meeting heartily commended the excellent work of Lewis W. McFarland, Evangelistic Superintendent. He will continue in this position the coming year. There are now 72 congregations in the Yearly Meeting; 62 revival meetings were held during the year resulting in 538 conversions, 435 renewals and 423 additions to the Church by request. 29 men and 9 women give evidence of a call to the ministry. There are now 37 pastors in the Yearly Meeting. A concern arose in the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight that young people and others who feel called to the ministry be encouraged and enabled to prepare themselves for the work to which God has called them. A committee was appointed to keep in touch with all such persons and arrange for financial aid if necessary.

The statistical report showed that the membership of the Yearly Meeting is 8,232, a net gain of 177 over last year.

The Foreign Missionary Committee presented an unusually encouraging report and the Meeting heard with interest and profit a missionary address by Edgar T. Hole.

The special feature of the Temperance session was an address by Sarah M. Hoge and an exercise by a number of young women.

Prof. A. T. Griffin of the High Point Industrial School for colored people elicited the sympathy and interest of the Meeting in the great work in which he is engaged. Charles Wooten, once of this Yearly Meeting, now a missionary among the Indians, gave a vivid picture of his field of work.

The Educational session was characterized by interesting reports from the Trustees and President of Guilford College, the report of the Girl's Aid Committee, etc. The Yearly Meeting sanctioned a plan by which Alumni Trustees may be chosen in alternate years. A movement is to be inaugurated to cancel Guilford's indebtedness and increase her Endowment to $500,000.

Memorials were read for Mary A. Peele and David E. Sampson, and the Meeting was brought into much tenderness of spirit as the lives and labors of these dear Friends were reviewed. Their passing brings a distinct loss to the Yearly Meeting. A letter of love and good cheer was directed sent to aged or infirm Friends unable to attend Yearly Meeting.

The meetings on First-day were largely attended, the houses for worship being filled to overflowing. In the afternoon one meeting was conducted out-of-doors on the campus. Vesper services were held every evening. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were very marked in all of the meetings for worship, and many gave evidence of conversion or renewal of spiritual life. On the whole there is every indication that North Carolina Yearly Meeting is pressing forward in the work of the Lord in this part of His vineyard.

A TESTIMONIAL

The following is from the forthcoming report of President Robert L. Kelly, concerning Prof. David W. Dennis:

"First of all, it becomes necessary to speak of the death of that beloved teacher and inspirer of us all, David Worth Dennis. He spent almost all of his professional life in the interest of Earlham College. His influence for good transcended all means of measurement or power of statement. So long as the college exists or the memory of those who knew it and loved it lasts, the vision which he gave us will remain and his hopeful, helpful influence will warm our hearts and strengthen our purpose. At this time, I can say nothing more except to repeat the official resolution of the Board of Trustees.

"The Board of Trustees of Earlham College feels profoundly the loss of Professor David Worth Dennis. He was one of the most remarkable personalities ever connected with the College, and he has contributed more than can be expressed toward making the college what it is.

"His amazing fund of knowledge and eloquent gift of speech, his dramatic power of expression, his irresistible humor, his never-failing optimism, and, above all, his matchless capacity as an inspirer of youth, constituted for years one of the priceless assets of the College. He gave his students vision, he widened their horizon and he showed them possibilities and inspired them with courage to go forward. His influence will continue through the years and those who do not see him and hear him will hear of him and will be helped to live larger and gentler, but at the same time more courageous lives as his virtues are recounted.

"The Board would extend to the family this expression of its appreciation and sympathy, and of its unbounded faith in the ideals of David Worth Dennis."

COUNCIL OF CHURCH BOARDS

The council of Church Boards of Education of the United States of America met at Niagara Falls, New York, on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 22nd and 23rd. This Council represents a constituency of some thirteen million communicants of the leading Protestant Churches of the country, and the Council is now engaged in conducting a nation wide campaign in behalf of Christian education. President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, for the past four years has been a member of the Executive Committee of this Council, and was Chairman of the Committee which drafted the plan for the campaign referred to. It was under the auspices of this Council also that the association of American Colleges was organized two years ago in the city of Chicago. The meeting last week was considered an extremely important one and arrangements will be made for various educational conferences and exhibits in different parts of the country.

CORRESPONDENCE

Oskaloosa, Iowa,

August 16, 1916.

Editor of The American Friend:

Some kind hand sent me a copy of your paper containing an article from the pen of C. M. Case on Penn College.

Will you kindly allow me, the first teacher, to correct a date in the article? His statement that the school "was opened in 1863," is an error. On the 4th of December 1860, I alone opened the school with seventy-five young men and women from various parts of Iowa Yearly Meeting. My older brother, David, the principal, did not get here for two weeks later. The students were classified and heard as well as one teacher could well do, till my brother came from Friendsville, Tennessee, where we were teachers before coming here.

The school house, a wooden building, three and one-half stories, was burned in 1863. The funds that were raised to rebuild were used in building the first wing of Penn College. The name was changed from 'Friends Iowa Boarding School' to Penn College.

J. W. MORGAN.

THE FIVE YEARS MEETING

The Committee on Arrangements of the Five Years Meeting desires again to remind Friends that the Committee is asking for suggestions relative to the program of the next Five Years Meeting and the manner of considering such subjects as are brought before it. This is a great opportunity for the church as a whole to be heard upon this important matter. Communications can be sent to the Secretary, L. Hollingsworth Wood, 20 Nassau Street, New York City.

HENRY T. HODGKIN BEFORE THE TRIBUNALS

The London Friend of August 4 has the following interesting item concerning Henry T. Hodgkin before the Southgate Tribunal:

"Henry T. Hodgkin appeared before the Southgate Tribunal on July 19th. He had a most sympathetic hearing throughout. One member of the Tribunal thought his case should not come before them at all as, being a minister of the Society of Friends, he was excepted already. H. T. H. explained briefly the position of ministers in the Society and on his further stating that he did not appear to come under this excepting clause, as he had already been called to the colors, the case was proceeded with in the ordinary way. The Tribunal agreed that the work H. T. H. was engaged in was work of highly national importance and that anything else they could ask him to do would be less valuable, they therefore gave him the exemption asked for. H. T. H. was asked to inform them if any important changes in his work occurred. No questions were asked as to conscientious beliefs, as the Chairman said that applicant's position and opinions were well known to the Tribunal and no one doubted his convictions.

(Absolute exemption granted "while present circumstances exist.")

NOTICE TO PASTORS

The Federal Council has secured $60,000 of the $150,000 fund needed for the French Protestant Churches.

Those churches which have not yet sent their contributions are urged to do so as early in September as possible. Unless the needed aid is secured at once it is feared that some of the churches will have to be closed.

THE BLACKBURNS RETURN SEPTEMBER 11

Dr. Elisha Blackburn of the Kaimosi Station of our Africa Mission, accompanied by his wife, Virginia L., and their three children, Doris, John and Marjorie, sailed from Mombasa en-route for Bombay, India, on June 22d. The last word received at the Board of Missions office from the Blackburns was sent from Calcutta under date of July 13th. They expected to sail from Calcutta on S. S. "Shinyo Maru," sailing thence by way of Hongkong and Yokahama, arriving at San Francisco on September 11th. Dr. Blackburn has been on the field for thirteen years and he and his family are returning for their second furlough.

WORK AT MATEHUALA

Letters which Sarah Lindley has received from Maria Castillo, the capable Mexican teacher who, almost single-handed, has borne the responsibility of conducting both school and church work at Matehuala, tell of serious difficulties which the work at that place has been facing during several months past. Her letters indicate, however, that many of these difficulties have been successfully met. The school work is continuing though the difficulty of securing suitable teachers has been extreme. The following quotation from a translation of one of Miss Castillo's letters may serve to indicate some of the straits through which she has passed and something of the spirit with which she has met her difficulties. "Sometimes I feel very much at my wit's ends as in the case of —, and I think it is better to let everything go. But considering so many interesting little children, so many enthusiastic older children, and this work so successful, and on the other side the good reputation which the college has, I do not feel that I have sufficient courage to do it. It seems that the official schools are not able yet to reorganize their work, for help is very deficient, and we, the first day that we opened school, the third of the present month (July), had 111 pupils. It did not seem that we had had vacation but that it was only the previous Friday that the children had quit coming. With so much enthusiasm, how could I close up the work?"

WORK IN THE COLLEGES

At Wilmington College

Courses in mission study have been given both as voluntary classes and in the regular curriculum. Within the past few years intensive study of some of the fields, such as India, South America, Africa and others, has been carried on under the direction of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. Also questions of the home field such as the immigrant problem, have been discussed in the classes in a way which helps us to realize our responsibility to the alien, as well as to helping us understand the condition which causes him to wander forth from his homeland and seek his fortune in a new world. These classes have been conducted entirely by student leaders, except for an occasional lecture by a minister or returned missionary. The methods used have largely been informal discussion, with a view to determining the personal relations and responsibilities of each individual, to the unsaved and uncivilized portions of the world.

The least we have gained by such study is a closer and more vivid vision of world conditions. A more important result, due no doubt partially to such study, is that four persons have offered themselves for foreign service and are now making definite preparations for their work; and also four or five other persons have already entered or are preparing to enter, the home field in the slums of some of the large cities.

THIRTY CRITICAL DAYS

FOR THE WORK OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS

The Board's year closes Ninth month 30th.

All obligations at home and abroad must be met.

Twenty thousand dollars will be needed.

A deficit would cripple the work of our fifty-six missionaries.

Other denominations are increasing their missionary gifts—for Friends to fall short would be disheartening.

To fulfill God's command we must advance.

How Meet the Crisis

Let Friends everywhere make personal gifts through local treasurers or direct to the Board.

Let officers of particular meetings give every member a chance to contribute at once.

Let every treasurer forward missionary funds now in his hands.

Let all Friends pray for the Board and for our missionaries.

Let everyone do his part.

YOUNG FRIENDS BOARD

THE STUDY CLASS

The Study of Quakerism

Our forefathers were publishers of truth; what was it that burnt as a fire within them?

Many of us inherit the privileges and responsibilities of birthright membership with a distinctive religious Society; in what is the Society distinctive, and how has it come to be what it is today?

We have a message for the time in which we live; what is the message, how, and in what terms, shall it be expressed?

What was Elizabeth Fry's work? Was George Fox a mere fanatic?

These and other questions must be answered to the satisfaction of any of us who are to carry on the work of those who have suffered for and gloried in the truth. In no way can they be more healthily approached, nor satisfactorily dealt with, than in the opportunities for frank discussion, patient reading, and strengthening enlightenment, afforded by small and easily arranged Study Circles.

Such Circles should be found in every centre of Quakerism if there is to be intelligent and fruit-bearing activity, and if the Society is to be what it should be in the world today."

YOUNG FRIENDS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Again in Los Angeles as in other California cities one is struck by the number of saloons and the amount of drunkenness seen on the streets. This is no doubt not greater than that of eastern cities but it appears so to one who has been traveling for weeks in states without seeing either a drunk or a place where liquor is sold. Between the railway station and the new Roslyn Hotel one passes more than twenty saloons and cheap hotels. Here is also one of the worst slum sections of the city. In the midst of all the poverty and sin are two rescue missions. These are run by the Nazarenes and the Friends. Scarcely a night goes by without some fallen man or woman being brought to Christ.

Some most remarkable conversions have been recorded. The Light House Mission which is under the care of Friends is in a struggling condition at present. Its location, past achievements, and future plans are worthy the attention of any Friend who wants to minister to the floating population of a great city. Mr. and Mrs. Morris give their entire time to directing the work, while the Christian Endeavorers of Huntington Park and Los Angeles Meeting are responsible for services two nights in each week. Not only is the Gospel preached but penniless men and women are provided with food, beds and clothing, until they can find work. There is no question that this Mission has a right to exist and that it must live or the Kingdom of God be seriously impeded in this section of the city.

Farther up town in a community of middle class people is located the Los Angeles Friends' Church. It is a wooden structure, with basement, Christian Endeavor room, well-lighted and ventilated auditorium, choir platform, pulpit and belfrey. A kitchen and dining room are in the basement which is also used for Sunday School classes. The church in this place has had a rather struggling time but during the past year it has been materially strengthened through the untiring efforts of Chas. Lescault and wife. The labors of these servants of God demonstrate that in this section of the country men and women are hungry for spirituality, for real soul food that touches one's present-day problems and helps him solve them in a broad sensible Christ-like manner. People do not care for a continued preaching of dry theology, whether "sound or unsound." They are not interested in continued "heresy smelling" or fusses over church creeds. Their hearts are burdened under a load of business and social cares that the church through the power of Jesus Christ should lighten. Christ's work is hampered and will continue to be so until the church generally grows more interested in maintaining and developing a Christian Social order. This she must do rather than try to maintain stereotyped ecclesiastical forms or creeds. Now is the time for action. Friends have a message that should be fresh for each age. They can not put new wine into old wine skins and expect the result to be pleasing;

They must put their fresh present day message in fresh present day terms. They must challenge, feed and train the future workman in God's Kingdom. This must begin on the level in which they find them, instead of taking them back to a past plane of spiritual interpretation. Christ's kingdom is ready to be advanced when the church is ready to advance it. And even the difficult city problem is not too difficult for the power of Christ as revealed in His broad-minded, spirit-filled servants.

While Los Angeles is filled with a spirit of hustle, has a mass of half American Orientals, is stricken with the liquor curse, and burdened with a serious slum problem, she is still one of the most beautiful and optimistic cities in the United States. She possesses much wealth, beautiful parks, roads, private gardens and best of all a spirit of progress. Certainly Friends should strive hard to maintain a church in this city. They can do it if they will continue to really feed men with spirituality, to train them in church democracy and the strict application of religion to politics, business and society.

T. E. JONES.

OPEN AIR SERVICE

A plan such as the following might be well adapted.

Hold 5 o'clock union services in the city park or on some grassy plot or nearby hillside, if in a country town, each Sunday for two months during the hottest part of the year. Invite the whole town to these services. Put out notices and posters each week, perhaps you will discover an artist or cartoonist in your society, or among your young people. Make special effort to secure attendance of those people who are not accustomed to attend any meeting for worship. Perhaps chairs or benches could be obtained from a nearby church, and a platform could be easily made or borrowed,—a band stand, or several goods boxes. If several churches unite in these services, they should take charge of the weekly program in turn, if but your own Society, let each committee have its turn, furnishing music, speaker and looking after any other details as might need attention.

This plan of work has proven successful in many communities. Automobiles filled with interested worshippers lined the road. People sat in their carriages and listened reverently to the speaker's message. Among those who were standing under the trees were men and women who had not attended any church for years. Old people who had been prevented from going to meeting because they were too infirm to climb the church steps were present also and everyone seemed particularly happy to join in a meeting which was out of doors away from all inconvenience of a hot and stuffy building.

Instead of disbanding your Christian Endeavor or Study Class, for the summer, try the Out-of-Door Services, and let us hear from you as to the results. If we set ourselves to it there is no reason why the experience cannot be carried out in many places this summer and the church and community strengthened and blessed through such efforts.—L. E. H.

PENN COLLEGE

Friends will be interested to know that the prospects for Penn College for the coming year are much brighter than it would have been possible to expect a few weeks ago. At the close of last year the burning of the building and the uncertainty of success in our financial campaign caused a great deal of concern. This uncertainty persisted until the campaign was brought to a successful issue, August 1st. Since that time, however, a certainty has taken possession of all friends of the institution. Students are planning to return with scarcely an exception and there is an excellent prospect for a large freshman class.

Building operations will be commenced in the near future so that it is very much hoped that we will be able to occupy the new building before the close of the year. In the meantime, however, excellent arrangements have been made to care for the work much better than might be supposed. The Yearly Meeting House is a very excellent and commodious building and lends itself splendidly to the work of the College. This beautiful building has been put at the disposal of the College Management and will afford practically as good accommodations as Penn has ever had. Students will be most agreeably and happily surprised when they return for the opening of College. It will not be necessary to use the gymnasium for any different purpose than that which it is calculated to serve. On account of this the athletic, literary, music and Christian Association interests will be unmolested, as these interests are accommodated by the gymnasium building.

There will be very little change in the faculty from last year. Miss Lillian Eves will succeed Associate Professor Tostenson in the Department of Modern Languages, and Miss Alma G. Madden will have charge of the work of expression and physical education for women. Mrs. W. I. Kelsey will serve as Dean of women. Dr. Case, who has spent the summer in California, will return in time for Yearly Meeting and will have charge of his usual work.

Several members of the faculty have been in the employ of the College during the summer vacation soliciting funds and looking after students.

The experiences of the summer have advertised Penn College from one end of the country to the other, and the campaign which was brought to so successful an issue has disclosed and developed a type of loyalty which few institutions possess.

The future of Penn College is made very bright and is very certainly assured by all these things. Whatever little inconvenience may be necessary, this year, will be easily endured in view of the fact that the facilities in the near future will be made quite superior. Students can well afford to put up with these inconveniences temporarily although in reality these inconveniences are reduced to a minimum. It is certain that the coming year will be one of the most enthusiastic in the history of the College.

CHURCH AT WORK

Ivor, Va.—The missionary committee of the Corinth C. E. Society has been seeking to create interest in missions by the use of the new slides on the African Industrial Mission put out by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Five Years Meeting. The committee gave the stereopticon lecture at Bethel Friends church on the night of July 21 and at Corinth church on the night of the 23. These slides are satisfactory in every way and should promote interest in the work.

Somerton, Va.—Virginia Quarterly Meeting was held at Somerton July 15 and 16. A feature of the meeting on ministry and oversight was a verbal report of the work in the various meetings by some member of each local congregation. The subject of peace claimed the attention of the Quarterly Meeting and the members were requested to write to their congressmen and senators in opposition to the military naval program and the bill for military training in the public schools.

Everett, Wash.—Members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Friends church at Everett enjoyed a launch ride to Hat island on the evening of August 11 and a picnic on the beach. About forty went over on the launch, Arrow II. Tennyson Lewis, pastor of the meeting and his wife accompanied the young people. It was a typical moonlight night. The songs, while out on the salt water sound, are not to be easily forgotten. Dr. S. W. Hall of Seattle, who is soon to go to China under the auspices of English Friends, is to speak before the Everett C. E. Society on next Sunday evening.

South Starksboro, Vt.—Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held here on August 12 and 13 and was a time of blessing. Chester and Martha Harris, of West Branch, N. Y., were in attendance and brought interesting and profitable messages. The presence of God was unmistakably felt in the meeting and in two of the sessions there were few dry eyes as the messages were borne in upon our souls. While Martha Harris did most of the preaching, Chester Harris took charge of the singing and also rendered several solos which were edifying. In the afternoon meeting on the 13th there were several persons who took a definite stand for Christ. On the evening of the 15th these Friends conducted a meeting at Monkton Ridge, where they had a large and appreciative audience and four people were converted. We bless God for permitting us to have with us these Friends who have been such a blessing.

Chicago, Ill.—Herman Newman, pastoral secretary of the Chicago meeting, presented an interesting quarterly report at the recent Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight as follows:

"During the Quarter ending Sixth month 30th, 1916, the various activities of the church continued much as they were organized in previous Quarter. The Christian Endeavor Mission Study Class completed its course, and help was extended one evening at the Dan Beatty Mission. One illustrated picture was given on the theme "In the Trenches against Poverty," and $26.00 was raised to assist the United Charities' Summer Outing work. The attendance and interest in the Bible School were well sustained. Children's Day was observed Sixth month 25, at which time diplomas were awarded pupils graduating from the primary to the junior department and other promotions were announced. The Whittier Study Class finished its course and began reading Hannah Whitall Smith's Spiritual Autobiography.

"Four new members were received, three by certificate, and one by request. The average attendance at the First Day morning meeting showed a small increase over the corresponding Quarter last year. This being the time at which our year's work is reviewed, we note that a total of 288 pastoral calls were made by the visitor, 60 by the pastoral secretary and 123 by other members of the pastoral committee; that three members and two attenders of our meeting attended the Men's Conference at Richmond, Indiana; that 17 active and 2 associate members were received and two new members were added by birth, and that those of our members who are contributing to the support of the meeting give on an average of $30.00 per member."

Percy Thomas, pastor of the meeting at Arba, Indiana, has received and accepted a call to the pastorate at Portland, Indiana.

George W. Bird, who has served the meeting at Portland, Indiana, for the past two years as pastor, has accepted a call to be the pastor at Greenfield, Indiana.

Alfred J. Hanson, who has been attending Penn College the past year and serving two meetings at points near by, has accepted a call to the pastorate at Indianola, Iowa, during the coming year.

It is reported that Lewis E. Stout, who has been pastor of the meeting at Carmel, Indiana, for the past two years, has accepted the pastorate of the meeting at Kokomo, Indiana, for the coming year.

Elbert Russell, Professor at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md., attended West Richmond Friends Meeting, Richmond, Indiana, last Sunday and preached at the morning

Iowa Yearly Meeting is in session this week at Oskaloosa, Iowa. It has been announced that Penn College, whose principal building burned some weeks ago, will carry on its work principally in the Yearly Meeting house until the new buildings are completed.

The American Friend was in error last week in stating that Aaron Napier underwent a serious operation in a hospital at Rochester, Minnesota. It was Mrs. Napier who underwent the operation and her many friends will be rejoiced to know that she is doing well.

All persons wishing accommodations during Western Yearly Meeting, September 11-17, will please address Ernest Heringlake, Plainfield, Indiana. Meals will be served as usual in the basement of the church by the ladies of the local congregation.

J. A. Morris Kimber, son of John Shober Kimber, has recently published a four-page leaflet of songs of his own composition to which he has set the music. The subjects are "In Heathen Darkness Lying," "Our Lord Divine," "The Great Commission" and "For Christ and the Lost." He can be addressed at Newport, R. I.

Friends generally throughout America will be deeply interested in the Penn College article found on the Iowa page of this issue. In this connection we acknowledge the receipt of the jubilee number (August) of the Penn College Bulletin which is a most interesting number, giving an account of the successful campaign to raise $400,000 endowment and setting forth the present status of the institution.

The sympathy of Friends generally and especially of all friends of Earlham College will be extended to Professor and Mrs. Arthur M. Charles of Earlham College in the tragic death of their little daughter, Betty, five years old, on the afternoon of August 23. While riding a pony, in some way she fell, and, her foot catching in the stirrup, she was dragged for some distance and died shortly afterwards.

Mary Mills, who was chosen presiding clerk of Wilmington Yearly Meeting at its recent session and who presided most ably over the various sessions, has the distinction of being the first woman to be chosen as presiding officer of the joint sessions of a Friends Yearly Meeting. She has served in previous years as recording clerk and is the daughter of Judge Levi Mills, known to Friends throughout America.

At a week end conference in connection with the jubilee of the Friends Foreign Mission Association of London Yearly Meeting to be held at Woodbrooke September 1-5, among other exercises there will be study circles on "Friends Beyond the Seas."

A course of lectures on "The Manifestation of the Spirit of God" was planned for a lecture school at Jordans, England, July 21-24, in conjunction with the Woodbrooke Extension Committee.

Murray S. Kenworthy has accepted a call to the pastorate of the meeting at Glens Falls, N. Y., succeeding Albert J. Shepard, who becomes the Efficiency Secretary of New York Yearly Meeting. He will take charge of the work there on October 1st. He with his family has been spending some time with his father, Milton Kenworthy, at New London, Indiana, and at the present is spending some time at the old home of Mrs. Kenworthy at Spiceland. He preached at New London, on home coming day last Sunday evening.

The Peace Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends has just issued an open letter and appeal to the editors of the daily and periodical press of the United States, dealing with the Mexican problem and the relationship of the United States thereto, and appealing to all editors to use their power in the interest of truth, sincerity and constructive statesmanship and asking that the press of the world "not only exert its power in supplying (in larger measure) trustworthy information about Mexico, but also take its true place in guiding the thought of America and the world along constructive lines of international service and good will." The American Friend will publish this appeal in full next week, and it will be well for Friends generally to follow up this communication with personal appeals to local editors along the same line.

PEOTA OR INDIAN WORSHIP

By GEORGE HARTLEY

I presume it is safe to say that all people in all ages have had a desire to have something to worship. Some have borrowed from others. Poets have sung, personifying many things as men, animals or winds, and in later years these have been made into gods by the rising generation. Other poets sang of these gods and in their fertile brains sons and daughters come forth in untold numbers. Various tribes adopted these as it seemed to suit their taste. Hence many forms of worship are introduced into the world.

The Indians of America are not behind in their many forms. There being nothing that is satisfying to the soul, there is nothing stable in it, hence easily changed.

Having spent a number of years among the Indians and in various tribes I have seen as many as three complete revolutions in their plan of worship. They often retain some peculiar part of their worship and carry it on through. Some man of influence will conceive some new plan, an idea it may be, strictly his own. He introduces it into his tribe and they, being more or less tired of the old, are quite ready to accept it. Additions will be made as it comes into the minds of the devoted ones. Some are conservative and will not accept the new plans. They are ridiculed and called "fogies" and dropped out. They are likely to come in later.

The Great Spirit is recognized in all their modes of worship. In these later years the name of Jesus is often used. Songs have been introduced by missionaries and young people coming home from schools. Some of these latter take part in their worship and make these sacred songs a part of it.

The last great "fad" that has come in and is now largely controlling many tribes is the "Peota Worship," introduced eight or ten years ago by an Arapahoe Indian (I think this is his tribe). The Peota bean is taken from a species of cactus plant in Mexico. Made into tea and drunk or eaten raw, it has a stupefying effect and causes the user to see visions or dream dreams generally about what they have been thinking. They claim that it causes them to quit drinking strong drinks and that they do not do other evil things as before, such as gambling, etc.

The mode of worship is a very peculiar one. Where the tribe has plenty of money they make elaborate preparations. The house is an octagon about forty feet in diameter and about forty feet high, running out to a point or rather the top is open, about four feet square, one door on the east and four windows two feet square. The altar is horseshoe form about six feet long with a rim around it, six inches high, all made of cement. In the center is a figure the form of a heart. On this heart (three feet across) a fire is constantly burning during the hours of worship. This begins about six o'clock p. m. and continues until noon the next day. During this time they eat nothing except candy. The heart represents God's heart and the fire represents God who gives them the peota. Two semi-globes of cement about sixteen inches in diameter are, one in front and the other back of the fire. These represent the Son they used to worship and also the sweat house they now use. The sweat house is for cleansing. It is a small oblong tent that will hold about fifty people when crowded. It is made as tight as they can make it. It is heated with hot stones, on which water is thrown occasionally so the steam fills the tent. The people, men and women, are almost nude. They stay in until they get sick. They then slip out and in a little while their stomachs are emptied. Then they go in again for a time, when they come out clean. This is done on Friday morning before the Sabbath of their special worship.

On the inner semi-globe is laid a peota bean. The peota has a spirit life that knows all about the worshiper. Back of this is a chain and a cross of Christ and a picture of Moonhead. On the wall back of this is a larger picture of Moonhead under which the chief sits. In front of the chief stands a staff three feet high. On this are some eagle feathers.

The Indians have their seats all around the room, facing the fire. All within is clean and pure, but sin and evil are in all the world outside. So anyone being outside is contaminated. When anyone comes in, two men with eagle wings meet him in front of the fire and brush him all over and the evil thus brushed off goes into the fire and rises and passes out in the smoke. The eagle soars higher than any other bird, hence gets nearest to God, so the eagle wing just from God knocks the evil off from anyone just coming in from the world. After the sin is brushed off he moves on around the fire and touches the peota and the cross and the picture of moonhead. Moonhead, who introduced this worship, as well as the peota knows all about a man, though absent.

When all are in and seated the worship begins. The chief first and his drummer sing a song consisting of about twelve Indian words. He sings it over four times to the beating of the drum, with staff in hand. After this they sing four to six songs of their own choosing. Then the staff is passed to the next one and the same is gone over again, and so it continues until each one has sung. Some of the younger ones who have been in school introduce sacred songs. The staff and feathers once were for war, but now they represent peace and good will to all men. The drum is made of a gallon jar, two-thirds full of water which the chief has blessed, and some sacred bones are put in the jar. The drum head is buckskin with marbles around the border and a rope drawn tightly around the top of the jar. This continues from six in the evening until noon Sabbath when a great feast is ready. All go to that. They sit down quietly and the chief goes around with the eagle wing and brushes all over the victuals and water they are to drink and prays. Then the feast is partaken of in a joyful way. After this they return to their worship, but lie down and sleep and then hold a testimony meeting, telling what visions they have had during their slumbers. Many of them have seen Moonhead and some have seen Jesus and the happy home of the hereafter.

The older and conservative ones are very serious, but many of the younger ones have a good deal of fun out of it, even while they are going through with it. Many of them claim that they must take this "peota" while they are weak, but when they become strong then they need it no longer. These take Jesus only. Our missionaries can take advantage of this and hurry them out of their weakness and introduce a better way. The more enlightened tribes do not take up with these things. Many where missionaries have been for sometime do not indulge in such things.

MAHALA JAY

Mahala Jay, well known to the older generation of Friends as one of the constructive leaders in the Society of Friends for many years, died at her home in Richmond, Indiana, on August 19, after a lingering illness. She with her husband, Eli Jay, contributed much to the success of Earlham College as teachers in the early days, leaving the work there in 1884. For many years she was the real leader in the foreign missionary work of the Society of Friends, and was a prominent factor in the days of the Quinquennial Conferences which led to the organization of the Five Years' Meeting. She leaves one daughter, Mary A. J. Ballard, the registrar at Earlham College and Recording Clerk of Indiana Yearly Meeting. A fuller account will be given later.

WITH THE INDIANS

The Indian reports for July show that the Superintendents, Clark and Elma T. Brown, visited their Big Jim friends on the night of July 6. Reports from the different stations indicate that July has been a dry month and in some sections the crops are burnt up. Crops, therefore, generally are in poor condition.

Most of the regular meetings were held, and while small, interest has been kept up. Some trouble over dancing, gambling, immorality and other things is reported from the Osage agency.

Thirty-three morning meetings have been held during the month at all the stations, twelve afternoon meetings and twenty-five evening meetings. The reports show a total of two hundred and thirty-one families visited.

Bible Schools were held regularly through the month at five of the stations. The children recited four hundred and thirty-nine texts and five hundred and sixty-nine copies of papers were distributed, while $11.50 was collected for missionary and other purposes.

ENGLISH FRIENDS IN PRISON

The London Friend of August 4, contains the names of sixty-three "Friends and attenders detained by the military or in prison." The majority of these are in a civil prison under sentences varying from fifty-six days to one year. In six instances the death sentence had been imposed, but in each this subsequently was changed to an imprisonment of ten years. These are all being recognized as suffering because of their convictions on the question of war and their refusal to fight.

The Friend states that this table "does not contain the names of those Friends, who having been in detention or imprisonment, have now been released either unconditionally or in order to join the F. A. U. or engage in work of national importance through some other agency."

It is stated that on July 28 the total number of men reported as having been arrested and handed over to the military authorities was 1715. Of these 866 have been court-martialed and 110 have been released. Of the total number 164 are members of the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATE ON THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

On July 26th Mr. Philip Morrell raised a debate. He complained of the delay in putting into practice the scheme announced by the Prime Minister on May 25th, and said: "Men in a great many cases have actually undergone imprisonment in civil prisons as conscientious objectors, and now their sentences are expiring and they are being sent back to their regiments again, with all the undesirable results which everybody must agree follow from that course being taken. That is to say, there will again be resistance, there will again be an effort to compel them to obey, and again a court-martial, and again the bad influence on discipline which must result from having men of this sort in the regiments, and sending these men at great expense of public money back to civil prisons."

In the course of his reply Mr. Lloyd George alluded to the men who refuse to accept work of national importance: "I will take no step that will make it easy for a man to get out of his national obligations in this respect. There has always been a very strong party in this country, and a number of these people have belonged to it, who say that the nation ought to be organized for peace as well as for war. Most of these people want to compel others to do things, but when it comes to their turn to contribute they suddenly find that they have got consciences. I do not think they deserve the slightest consideration. With regard to those who object to shedding blood, it is the traditional policy of this country to respect that view, and we do not propose to depart from it; but in the other case I shall only consider the best means of making the path of that class a very hard one. I am not sure that sending them to the army is the best way of doing it. There are other ways of doing it, and that is all I say now."

THE JAPANESE YEARLY MEETING

Each year the Japanese meeting at Whittier on Sunday afternoon is looked forward to with increased interest by both the American and Japanese. Half of the church-bungalow was well filled with Japanese, and the other half and gallery over crowded with Americans at the 2 p. m. meeting. Japanese came from El Modena, Yorba Linda, East Whittier, Upland, Whittier, Los Angeles, Gardina and Placentia.

A few Japanese songs were sung and brother Kida led in the devotions. Mrs. Cammack, chairman of the Y. W. Japanese committee, gave a few words of greeting and called on the Superintendent in each locality to represent its particular work. Mrs. Stanfield of El Modena, brought greetings and called on Mr. J. Fujimoto for the report, and on her class to sing "Happy Day."

Upland brought greetings and the song, "Some One is Looking to You." Mr. Inouye, secretary of the Sunday School, gave personal testimony and report of the work. East Whittier young men sang "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Placentia was represented by two young men, one an American citizen from Hawaii, Mr. Jas. S. Yahiro, who expects to attend school at Whittier. The other G. Nakamura, spoke a few words of his love of God.

Whittier gave greetings through Mrs. Beede. Mr. Geo. Yahiro, also a Hawaiian American citizen, gave a personal testimony. Mr. Hugh Dohi gave the report and the class sang "Lifted Loads."

Evangelist M. Takata gave a fine ten-minute address in English, his first lengthy speech in English. Benjamin Coppock, Superintendent of Missions, brought a message of greeting and encouragement. Miss Ellis, fourteen years a missionary in Japan, gave a short talk, closing with prayer.

Americans were dismissed for the Missionary meeting in the main building, while the Japanese continued their service, listening to Brother Hata, of the Interdenominational Union, and closing the service with an earnest farewell appeal and prayer by Bunji Kida, who starts in a few days with his family, to a new work in Japan.

The collection at the meeting was $7, two dollars were given to Brother Hata and five dollars to Brother Kida. An after-meeting at the Japanese mission closed the day of much pleasure and profit.

A farewell reception was held at the mission Saturday night for Mr. Kida and family, to which the American workers were invited. After many speeches in Japanese and an earnest talk by both Mr. and Mrs. Kida, and a few words from Americans, ice cream and cake were served.

In the going of Mr. and Mrs. Kida, we are losing valiant, earnest workers. Mrs. Kida is a queen among women, and is so regarded among her people, while Mr. Kida is father to many souls, and counsellor among the Christian workers generally. M. Takata was retained as Evangelist for another year.—Pacific Friend.

Subject—The Arrest of Paul.

Lesson—Acts 21:17-40.

Golden Text—Thou shalt be a witness for him unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. Acts 22:15.

Paul's position was becoming most difficult. His friends, including the prophet, Agabus, were doing their utmost to keep him from going on to Jerusalem. From all indications physical safety lay in any other quarter than Jerusalem. Paul was not careful of his own safety, however, when he thought the Lord had a work for him to do, so turning aside the advice of his friends he went on to Jerusalem.

We know very little about his reception by the Christians of the mother church. There has been much conjecture based largely on the silence of the narrative, but the probabilities are that he was welcomed by the leaders and the contribution for the poor gladly received, but with the silent wish that conditions might be different. Paul's conception of Christianity differed from that of James and his associates. Many stories of Paul's heresy were current, some of which were utterly untrue, but the fact remains that there was a fundamental difference and that the breach was too wide to bridge. The probabilities are that these matters were talked over and plans decided upon by which it was hoped that a final rupture might be averted. At least Paul agreed to observe a custom quite commonly practiced and pay the expenses of certain Jews who were in Jerusalem to fulfill the requirements of a vow, which they had made. The Apostle it seems was going through the various stages of the ceremony with these men when he was found in the temple and the uproar began. He was rescued from the mob which seized him by the Romans.

The exact relation of Paul's ideas to those of the Jerusalem church has never been set forth to the satisfaction of all, but in the main the question was the same one which had been discussed at the conference some years before. He insisted that the Gentiles were free from the Jewish ritual, while the Jewish Christians contended for the observance of the ceremonial law. They were in fact Jews who had accepted Jesus as the Messiah, but this acceptance did not change their ceremonial responsibilities as they saw it. The acceptance simply gave the ritual a new direction. This connection for Gentile freedom was not as serious, however, as the reported teaching of Paul that the Mosaic law was no longer binding upon the Jews. Whatever may have been his opinion at this time it is certain that the time did come when there was "no longer on his part a silent toleration of legalism for Jewish believers, but he smites it root and branch. Justification by faith in Christ absolutely excludes works of the law. Freedom from the law is not regarded as a concession to Gentile weakness, but is the true Christian position," (read Galatians).

In all justice we must consider the honesty and sincerity of the Apostle. He was willing to sacrifice personal opinion in non-essentials if thereby he might avert a schism. The price he paid (his arrest, imprisonment and future suffering and possible death) was fearfully costly but he paid it in the interest of harmony, only to fail.

The incident offers abundant food for serious meditation. May God lead us as a church in all hours of serious consideration.

Collins, the infidel, met a plain countryman going to church. He asked him where he was going. "To church, sir." "What to do there?" "To worship God." "Pray, is your God a great or a little God?" "He is both, sir." "How can He be both?" "He is so great, sir, that the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him, and so little that he can dwell in my heart."

Collins declared that this simple answer of the countryman had more effect upon his mind than all the volumes the learned doctors had written against him.

"The works of God, above, below,
Within us and around,
Are pages in that Book to show
How God Himself is found.

Thou who hast given me eyes to see

Give me a heart to find out Thee aiding European Sufferers

The American Friend is receiving money almost daily in sums from $1.00 to $50.00 to aid the European sufferers. These contributions are coming from Friends practically all over the country. The money is being sent from time to time to Isaac Sharp of London, England, the Secretary of London Yearly Meeting, who makes distribution of the same to the various funds as requested or as needed. Some has been sent direct for Armenian relief.

As the war goes on the need of assistance seems to develop proportionately. Letters from Isaac Sharp and others are warm in their appreciation of the amounts that are being contributed. The American Friend has no interest in this except to aid the sufferers and is glad to forward all moneys received for this purpose. When money is sent it can be assigned to a special fund if the donor desires, or it can be left to the judgment of Isaac Sharp. Quite a number are contributing $1.00 per month indefinitely while others are contributing sums in varying amounts. The need is so great that The American Friend ventures to print the following blank for use generally in Friends' meetings. Some person should be selected locally to whom amounts can be paid, these to be forwarded to The American Friend, or contributions can be sent to us directly, addressing The American Friend, Richmond, Indiana.

is conducted by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends and is attended by the children of about sixteen Yearly Meetings. It has all the attributes of an efficient high school and successfully prepares for College some twenty pupils a year.

Will Friends kindly bear Westtown in mind in laying plans for their children's education? If their current plans have been interrupted, perhaps Westtown will satisfactorily fill out the balance of the year. The school is unusually large, but there is room for a few more.
